POETIC BRILLIANTS.

The Seven Ages of Man.

At seven years,
In hope's first draught
His dreams are of the billions;
Sweet confidence [illegible] him
As he nightly spends his millions.

At fourteen years,
The glitter pales,
On the million mark he draws;
But, hope inflated, oft reflects
[illegible]

At twenty-one,
The roseate hue
Gleams bright on hundred thousands;
And all his dreams are [illegible] plans
Of country "places" and housings.

At twenty-eight,
The golden age,
Five figures, well invested, with
Bank account and friends galore,
And stocks by bears well tested.

At thirty-five,
In the swim,
Checks for thousands he's possessing
[illegible]
By creditors [illegible]

At forty-two,
[illegible]
Some hundreds and a cottage,
With steady job we find he be,
The copper for his dotage.

At forty-nine,
The vista blue,
His hopes (deferred) to fifty shiners borrow,
Right glad he'd sell to raise the wind,
To pay that note to-morrow.

Hope springs eternal in human breast,
We hear the poet trilling;
But well he knows that temper fails,
And springs but [illegible] the falling.
—Lute H. Johnson, in The Journalist.

If All Went Well.

If none were sick and none were sad,
What service could we render?
I think if we were always glad
We scarcely would be tender.
Did our beloved never need
Our patient ministration,
Earth would grow cold, and miss indeed
Its sweetest consolation.
If sorrow never claimed our heart,
And every wish were granted,
Patience would die and hope depart—
Life would be disenchanted.
—Selected.

Little Brown Hands.

They drive home the cows from the pasture,
Up through the long shady lane,
Where the quail whistles loud in the wheat field,
All yellow with ripening grain.

They find, in the thick, waving grasses,
Where the scarlet-lipped strawberry grows,
They gather the earliest snowdrops,
And the first crimson buds of the rose.

They toss the hay in the meadow,
They gather the elder-blooms white,
They find where the dusky grapes purple
In the soft-tinted October light.

They know where the apples hang ripest,
And are sweeter than Italy's wines;
They know where the fruit is the thickest
On the long, thorny blackberry vines.

They gather the delicate sea weeds,
And build tiny castles of sand;
They pick up the beautiful sea shells—
Fairy barks that have drifted to land.

They wave from the tall, rocking tree tops,
Where the oriole's hammock nest swings,
And at night time are folded in slumber
By a song that a fond mother sings.

Those who toil bravely are strongest;
The humble and poor become great;
And from those brown-handed children
Shall grow mighty rulers of State.

The pen of the author and statesman,
The noble and wise of our land;
The sword and chisel and palette
Shall be held in the little brown hand.
—New Haven News.

All the Year Round.

The north wind doth blow
And soon we'll have snow,
And what will the people do then?
Oh, they'll kick and they'll scold
At the snow and the cold,
And long for the summer again.
But when summer comes back,
Then alas! and alack!
They'll howl at its terrible heat,
It may fry or may freeze,
It never can please
The kickers who kick with both feet.
—Chicago Herald.

Where I Have Sown.

Perhaps where I have sown some bloom may cheer
Or some sweet plant with fragrance fill the air;
Some word forgotten still may dry a tear
In spots where I have sown—I know not where!

Perhaps where I have sown the seed of love
In hearts as yet divided, it may bear
Thought to some other heart of life above,
In spots where I have sown—I know not where.

Where I have sown, mayhap for evermore
Fruit may [illegible] and grow in richness there.
Quicken the seed, dear Christ, from Thy great store,
In spots where I have sown—I know not where.

Water, O Christ! the seed where I have sown,
The blessing is to Thee for Thy great care;
Thou madest me sow; be praise to Thee alone
For seed which I have sown—I know not where.
—Hugh Cochrane, in Albany Argus.

Their Proper Destinations.

The brewers should to Malta go,
The boobies all to Scilly;
The Quakers to the Friendly Isles,
The furriers to Chile;
The little, snarling, caroling babes
That break our nightly rest
Should be packed off to Baby-lon,
To Lapland or to Brest;
From Spithead cooks should go to Greece,
And while the miser waits
His passage to the Guinea coast,
Spendthrifts are in the Straits;
Spinsters should to the Needles go,
Wine bibbers to Burgundy,
Gourmands should lunch at Sandwich Isles,
Wags at the bay of Fundy;
Bachelors flee to the United States,
Maids to the Isle of Man;
Let gardeners go to Botany bay,
And shoe-blacks to Japan.
Thus emigrants and misplaced men
Will then no longer vex us,
And all who ain't provided for
Had better go to Texas.
—Troy Times.

A Lady.

A beautiful and graceful head—
The artist would have worshiped
If copied into marble white—
Not turned by praise that's sung or said,
Poised like a lily in the light.

Her eyes are large, of heavenly hue,
In which are seen the image true
Of a sweet woman's guileless heart;
Her features captivate the view;
Her nature triumphs over art.

Her faultless form, well posed and fair;
The sunlight tangled in her hair—
A sheaf of soft and radiant gold;
Her buoyant step as light as air;
Her gifts and graces manifold.

Add to her sweet, attractive grace
And loveliness of form and face
The gifts of mind by nature given;
Then in her life of beauty trace
Something of earth and more of Heaven.
—George W. Bungay, in Harper's Bazar.

JOLLY JOKES.

It is easier to live within your income than to live without one.

New York wants a song to celebrate her base-ball victory. It should be sung in a bass voice.

As soon as a man gets the fire built and the room warm his wife comes along and wants to "air the house."

MINISTER—"Who endeavored to walk on the ocean and went down because he had not faith?" Boy—"Oh! I know; that was McGinty."

AN Irishman charged with an assault was asked whether he was guilty. "How can I tell, your honor, till I have heard the evidence?" was his reply.

FUNNY PASSER-BY—"What are you digging for, my friend?" Trench Digger—"Money." F. P. B.—"When do you expect to strike it?" T. D.—"Saturday night."

A SOUND SLEEPER.—"Does your baby keep you awake much at night?" "Nope." "Don't he cry?" "Yep." "How do you manage it?" "I'm a night watchman."

POET—"I know now how Columbus must have felt when he discovered America." Editor—"How's that?" Poet (gayly)—"Why, I've just found a dime in the pocket of my last year's suit."

"I am sorry," said the hungry-looking boarder, as he set the pitcher down, "that I have said so many things about the milk." "Why?" asked the landlady, suspiciously. "Because I fear it has [illegible] on me."

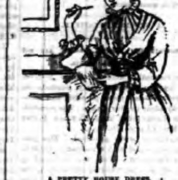
BRIDAL BOX FOR A BELL.

The Trousseau in Preparation for a Christmas Wedding.

When a Belle Becomes a Bride the Blank Check Covered from Papa for Her Outfit is Filled Up With Big Figures.

COPYRIGHT 1889.

A brown-eyed Baltimore girl who is to marry a rich Cuban at Christmas has a trousseau, partly imported and partly completed by a New York firm, which has been admired by every metropolitan who has been admitted to see it, every item being in excellent taste and the latest fashionable design.



A PRETTY HOUSE DRESS.

The bride's traveling gown is a simple princess tailor dress of Venetian green cloth, with braid and button ornaments of the same down the sides, and opening over a front of dark green velvet. The plain velvet coat sleeves are high on the shoulders, and there is a high velvet collar. The wrap which goes with this is a tight-fitting ulster of heavy green cloth which shrouds the wearer from head to foot and entirely conceals the gown. It is cut in quite an uncommon way, with loose fronts, starting from the shoulders and sewn in with the armhole and side seam, which leave the entire front of the ulster free. This is trimmed with braid ornaments to match the gown. There is a double cape, and there are wide sleeves gathered at the wrist into cuffs. The high standing collar is edged with fur. The brown hair ripples in short waves from under a turban of green velvet trimmed with bows of shaded white and green.

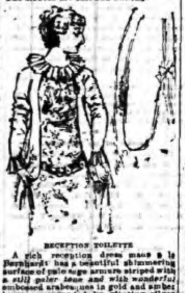
A pretty little house dress is made entirely of plaid silk, for which there is just now a craze, cut on the cross way of the stuff, and with skirt and bodice both so arranged that the stripes run diagonally. The plaid is not a tartan, but in soft shades of yellow tan, cream yellow and red brown. The skirt is mounted in plaits behind and for the rest is almost plain, being quite scant on one side and draped on the other in Greek apron style. The waist forms a blouse and is gathered under a pointed bodice girdle of warm tan velvet. The sleeves puff out at the top and are drawn in very close below the elbow with little velvet ribbons gathering them at the wrist and leaving a frill of the silk edged with lace to fall over the hand.

Another little gown for home wear is a straight slip of a dark apple green silk, of very soft texture, figured with daffodil yellow. The slip is gathered at the throat and partly covered by a princess overgown of the plain dark green fastened at the waist by three narrow daffodil yellow ribbons which come from under the arms and tie to the left of the front in small butterfly bows. The undergown is edged with three rows of the narrow ribbon.

An evening dress is a pure golden yellow brocaded with sprays of violets over a skirt of the delicate white liberty silk gauze. This gown takes the princess shape, which the bride favors above all others. The low half-round neck is edged with English hedge roses and the sleeves are short and full.

A sumptuous tea gown of black velvet embroidered with fine gold leaves makes a trained princess and is lined throughout with pale gold surah. There is a girdle of gold cord with heavy tassel pendants and long square sleeves, edged with lace in white and gold.

Another tea gown is of blue and silver, the magnificent brocade being as easily draped as surah and making a charming color mixture. It is cut square in the neck and trained. The most artistic of the tea gowns is of a soft bisque blue silk figured in pale tea rose. This is made with a blouse waist and straight skirt gathered on, a striped ribbon combining the two colors confining the fullness in front and a deep lace collar falling low on the shoulders. The sleeves are full and flowing.



RECEPTION TOILETTE.

A rich reception dress made à la Bernhardt has a beautiful shimmering surface of pale sage armure striped with a still paler tone and with wonderful embossed arabesques in gold and amber brown, surrounded by glinting silver notes and exquisitely shaded. The hip girdle is of gold, sage green and amber brown passementerie and a dainty and picturesque frill or fulled ruffle of the most expensive Duchess lace is turned down about the neck, the corsage being cut half low.

There are several dancing dresses, one being a Greek toilet in a lovely fawn gray tint, the long draperies of crepe de Chine falling from the shoulders over a white princess slip that is glove fitting, and another, an "art" toilet of gold-wrought Venetian silk [illegible] white crepe de Chine.

The walking dresses are very attractive. One is a plaid cheviot with a Russian border of lynx fur, to be worn with a Directory hat of silver gray velvet edged with silver lace and trimmed with silver gray plumes. Another is a silver blue cloth with collar, cuffs and girdle of undressed seal-skin in its natural brown shade. A third is a copper cloth opening over old rose faille, brocaded, with the copper and matching a hat of black velvet with pink and copper garniture.

The wraps are equally striking. One [illegible] cloth and [illegible] like a princess gown. Over the tight front is a cap finished with a narrow border of astrakhan and the double cape is edged in the same way. The [illegible] and velvet hat is trimmed with shaded green plumes. A much richer garniture is a princess coat, open in front, of a cloud gray velvet, thick and soft, and having wing shaped sleeves cut from superb brocade and showing flower forms against a lighter gray background. This cloak is lined with damask and edged with a wide border of Russian sable.

A [illegible] little jacket is of blue billiard cloth with white vest and revers embroidered with [illegible] in gold and [illegible]. An evening wrap is of white [illegible] cloth with the [illegible] of velvet and trimmed with gold galloon.

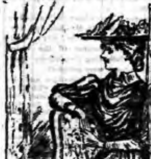
The bridesmaids' gowns? Yes, there are [illegible] for the bride's [illegible] friends and three for her little girl cousins. The older bridesmaids are to wear violet and silver brocades, tailor made, with full short skirts, [illegible] The little people will be clad in much the same fashion except that their gowns are white and gold. The hats are white felt with [illegible]

"And the bride herself? She will wear white uncut velvet and look very stately.

This is to be a church wedding. Many pretty toilets were seen at a house wedding yesterday. There were three bridesmaids, and these were simple figured silk with pointed bodice belts of contrasting velvet and cord girdles tying with long ends. The same velvets formed deep borders about the hems of the gowns.

A young girl, herself a recent bride, wore a pale blue silk, with a short round skirt, caught up on the left side in Greek fashion to show flounces of black net wrought with white daisies. The waist was high and round with full sleeves of the embroidered net over blue silk coat sleeves. The top of the waist was slit from throat to bust to form a V and this was filled in with net, while several rows of narrow blue velvet ribbon were drawn through black beading to form a high collar band. The gown followed the new and inconvenient fashion of lacing behind.

One of the prettiest gowns was also one of the simplest, being composed of pale blue silk, covered with draperies of coffee-colored lace with touches of the blue coming to the surface here and there. A very good gown was of rich tan-colored silk with a narrow vest of warm brown velvet. On each side of this was a band of cream-colored silk, brocaded with big ragged chrysanthemums in red-brown, yellow and orange. The bodice was pointed and had a high Medici collar and the skirt was trained, with a narrow front of brown velvet bordered like the vest by chrysanthemums on a cream ground.



A CHARMING MATINEE GOWN.

The rooms were full and there was much pressing and pushing forward to see the bride. Somehow parlor manners are not good always. The age of steam is not favorable to anything that is polished or leisurely. Somebody says that Stevenson could not have dreamed that his invention would affect the manners and customs of waltzers, but certainly he would be more surprised to know that it has not been without its influence on the way in which people drink tea.

An unusual dress that was not unbecoming was of scarlet silk with a black moire sash and large jet combs in the hair.

There have been a good many pretty teas, considering how early it is in the season. Miss Nellie Hewitt filled the cups at one recently, sitting a table which was draped in pale yellow silk embroidered with white sphinx heads. The candles were yellow and had yellow shades decked with yellow chrysanthemums.

Now that the opera season is fairly under way the two circles of boxes are gemmed with beautiful women resplendent with color and flashing with innumerable jewels. Miss Morosini wore a delicate pink toilet last Wednesday evening which was exceedingly effective. A beautiful woman in the next box wore a pale-green satin with tablier of silver thread over which were scattered stars of pearls. A very graceful young married woman was in white crepe de Chine with a design of white roses. The biggest diamonds shone on the neck of a handsome woman in a black jetted lace gown which made a striking background. Magnificent stones are common enough in the boxes, but the blaze of these cast all others in the shade.

There were many dressy toilets at the Kendals' performances last week in Brooklyn. A middle-aged lady wore violet velvet, made in a princess shape and trimmed with a narrow border of fur. A young girl who appeared to be with her wore a pretty costume of bluish gray material and buzzar blue velvet made with a shirred corsage and velvet yoke.

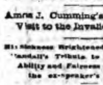
ELLEN OSBORN.

AT RANDALL'S BEDSIDE.

Amos J. Cumming's Describes His Visit to the Invalid Statesman.

His Sickness Brightened By Visitors—Mr. Randall's Tribute to Speaker Reed's Ability and Fairness—A Glimpse at the ex-Speaker's Workshop.

COPYRIGHT 1889.



I STOOD at the bedside of the Hon. Samuel J. Randall one afternoon last week. He lives in a modest brick building with marble facings on C street. It is one of a row of edifices all similar in appearance. When he first came to Washington and was seeking a residence, it attracted him because it was in the conventional Philadelphia style. It has white marble steps in front and solid shutters.

The little door-yards of these buildings are unfenced. It was a sunny day. The air was balmy and sparrows twittered from the eaves. The house is plainly furnished. There is a little parlor on the left of the hallway. A small sitting-room comes next and the dining-room is beyond.

Mr. Randall's married daughter invited our party to enter. She bears a striking resemblance to the great American commoner. There are the same deep set and glowing eyes. She expresses herself very much as her father, using plain Anglo Saxon words and concentrating her mind on the question at issue. She converses readily upon political matters, and at times when talking, knits her brows and draws her mouth to a straight line, precisely as her father does when urging an appropriation bill before the House. Mrs. Ricketts, widow of General Ricketts, was visiting her when our cards were sent up to Mr. Randall. While we were waiting the summons from above, Mrs. Ricketts charmed us with reminiscences of the late war. She camped with her husband during his forty years of army life. She is about to publish a volume of these reminiscences. It will certainly prove as attractive as the reminiscences of the Baroness Riedesel, whose husband was captured with Burgoyne at Saratoga. The memoirs of the Duchess d'Abrantes contain many interesting reminiscences, but none more interesting than those of Mrs. Ricketts.

The Randall house has two stories. A stairway with a plain carpet leads to the second story. Mr. Randall lay upon a bed in the front room of the second story. The back room is his study. Revolving bookcases were there. All were well filled, and volumes for reference lined the walls. It is the workshop of a statesman. A few choice steel engravings and etchings hung upon the walls of the different rooms. Mr. Randall was very pale and thin. He greeted us warmly. His thick hair is becoming as white as snow. His eyes are as bright as beads. There is no yellow tinge to the whites of them. His eyebrows are becoming shaggy. His voice is weak, but clear, and his mind as active as ever. He complains a little of rheumatism in addition to his more serious troubles.

There were a few books in the sick room. The major portion of the books were in the study. The most prominent among those which were at the bedside were the works of Thomas Jefferson.

The visit was paid on the day when the defalcation in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms was discovered. Ex-Speaker Carlisle had been informed of the deficit at four o'clock that morning. During the day he had visited Mr. Randall. Thos. B. Reed, the new Speaker, had also paid him a visit. It was before the meeting of the House of Representatives. At that meeting Mr. Reed appointed Mr. Randall a member of the Committee on Rules. When informed of the appointment by the party Mr. Randall moved his thin hand nervously over the coverlet and said:

"Yes, yes. Well, Mr. Carlisle can officiate for me on the committee until I get well. The country and the party must depend upon you young fellows in the coming conflict. You must all be in your seats and remain watchful and wary. There may be another Force bill upon the carpet."

Mr. Randall expressed great confidence in Mr. Carlisle's ability as a leader. Of course, he felt much mortified at the defalcation in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms. He had lost a month's salary by this defalcation, a loss which I am sure he is illy able to sustain. He had drawn a draft for a Philadelphia bank upon the Sergeant-at-Arms, and had promptly taken measures to prevent it from going to protest. He expressed much sympathy with those who had suffered by the action of the defaulting clerk. A member of Congress, who was in our party, alluded to the State from which the cashier hails. He said that it was fortunate that the defalcation was not discovered before the Ohio election. He thought that if the fact had been known before that time the Republicans might have reduced the vote for the Democratic candidate for Governor.

Mr. Randall was lying upon his back, with his head propped up on pillows. He smiled at the remark of his fellow Congressman. He replied, however, that he did not think that the revelation of the defalcation would have affected the Ohio election to any appreciable extent.

The conversation then turned upon the Speakership. The Member of Congress seemed to have some doubt about Mr. Reed making as good a Speaker as Mr. Carlisle. He said that Mr. Reed was ever ready for a fight when upon the floor of the House. He delighted in saying bitter things and in taunting his opponents. He would apparently rather give utterance to a scathing expression than to a good sentiment. The member seemed to think that Mr. Reed's course as Speaker would be worked by his feelings. He thought that at times his impulses would be so strong as to carry him beyond the bounds of fairness.

Mr. Randall feebly shook his head.

"No," he said. "I think that Reed will make an efficient Speaker. I am confident that he will try to be fair in his parliamentary rulings. To be sure, when upon the floor he was an intensely aggressive man. But an aggressive man broadens when he becomes Speaker. He watches himself. He knows his own failings and the strength of his impulses, and is more than ever controlled by his sense of what is right. He tries to be governed by a strict sense of duty and would be more apt to protect a political opponent by his rulings than to favor a friend." Mr. Randall said that he spoke from experience. He was himself intensely aggressive while upon the floor, but when he became the Speaker of the House he could feel himself broaden. He was governed by a strict desire and a positive determination to carry out the rules of the House, regardless of friend or foe. He felt confident that he had succeeded in doing this. He was not aware that anybody had ever gainsayed his rulings while in the Speaker's chair. Certain it was that not one of them had ever been reversed.

"Mr. Carlisle," Mr. Randall added, "presented another case in point. He was a strong leader upon the floor and an eminently fair presiding officer. No man who had ever filled the chair had a better knowledge of parliamentary law. None, assuredly, had ever given more satisfaction. The minority had its rights under his rulings, and the majority had no cause for complaint. All men are tempered by experience, and Mr. Reed would prove no exception to the general rule."

When asked how soon he expected to appear upon the floor of the House, Mr. Randall replied: "Not until after the holidays." He looks very thin, but his glowing eyes and firm set mouth indicate a determination to recover from his physical difficulty, and resume his old place in the House. He seemed pleased to think that his old seat had been reserved for him. A smile came over his face as he alluded to the roses that were placed upon his desk at the opening of this Congress.

Only a few visitors are admitted to Mr. Randall's room. The favored ones are his intimate friends and associates in Congress.

Mr. Randall never forgets his friends outside of the District of Columbia. Of every visitor he makes inquiries concerning them. His bed was strewn with New York newspapers. He had scanned them closely before our arrival and had thrown some of them upon a pile of Philadelphia newspapers at the foot of the bed. He offered one of them to each of our party, saying that he had read them and had no further use for them. He sits up very little. His physician advises him to lie upon his back, and remain in bed. He claims that beneficial results are sure to follow. Too much exercise might bring on a relapse. His family is confident that he is recovering, though very slowly. Mr. Randall has every confidence in his physician, and expects to be out and in the House after the holiday recess.

It was evident that the prostrate statesman was becoming fatigued. His mind was as active as ever, but his body was weary. Our party expressed fears that they were taxing his strength too much. He thought not, but his haggard face and nervous hands told a different story. After clasping his hand the party bade him "Good afternoon" and descended the stairs.

In the hallway his charming daughter, Susan, thanked them for their kind remembrance of her father. With doffed hats they opened the door, and replacing them wended their way back to the Capitol. The sparrows on the eaves twittered new music and the tired Democratic chieftain fell asleep.

AMOS J. CUMMINGS.

A STRANGE DUEL.

Suicide Instead of Murder the Means of "Satisfying" Honor.

A duel which occasioned a great sensation at the time of its occurrence, says a Boston writer was one between Henri Delagrave and Alphonse Riviere; the cause being the success of the former in wooing a young lady to whom they were both attached. Riviere insulted his successful rival by slapping him on the cheek in a gambling saloon, and it was agreed that a duel should take place, in which the life of one should be ended. The details were left to their seconds to arrange; and, until they faced one another upon the field, neither of the young men knew in what form they were to brave death.

On the following morning four men met in a quiet wood. There were Riviere, with Monsieur Savalle, his second, and Delagrave, who was accompanied by a doctor named Rocquet. The latter informed the rivals that Monsieur Savalle and himself had arrived at the decision that, in order to secure the certainty of fatal result to one of their principals, it would be best to leave out of the question swords or pistols, and trust to the more sure action of a deadly poison. As he spoke he drew from his pocket a little box, in which lay four black pellets all exactly identical in size and shape.

"In one of these," he said, "I have placed a sufficient quantity of prussic acid to cause the almost instantaneous death of any one who swallows it. Monsieur Savalle and I will decide by the toss of a coin which of you is to have first choice, and you shall alternately draw and swallow a pill until the poison shows its effects." While speaking the last words the doctor spun into the air a glittering gold piece, and, as it fell, Savalle cried, "Tails." It fell with the head uppermost, and Savalle said: "The first choice is yours, Monsieur Delagrave." The two whose fate was contained in those innocent looking black balls had shown no sign of trepidation while the doctor explained the awful preparations that he had made for the death of one of them: and Delagrave's face was perfectly impassive as he selected and washed down with a glass one of the globules.

"And now, Monsieur Riviere," said the doctor. Riviere extended his hand and took a pill, which he swallowed with as little appearance of concern as his opponent. A minute passed, two, three and still the duelists stood motionless. "It is your choice again, Monsieur Delagrave," said the doctor, "but this time you must swallow the pill at the same instant that Monsieur Riviere swallows the one you leave for him." Delagrave paused for a moment, looking in silence at the two balls that lay before him. The closest scrutiny showed not the slightest difference between them: one was harmless, but in the other rested the pall of eternity—the silence and peace of that sleep which knows no awakening in this world. With a start, he drew his eyes from the box, and, putting his finger and thumb into it, drew forth one of the remaining pills. Riviere took the solitary one remaining, and both then simultaneously gulped down their fate. A few seconds passed without any perceptible movement on the part of either of them, and then Riviere threw up his hands and without a sound fell flat upon the grass. He turned half round, gave one convulsive shudder, and, as his rival bent over him, breathed his last. The fair cause of this awful tragedy was so horrified at it that she refused to see Delagrave again, and the memory of those few minutes weighed so heavily upon him that he followed Riviere to the grave within a few months after the duel.

SCIENTIFIC SUNDRIES.

GERMAN chemists have discovered in the cocoanut a fatty substitute for butter, and this new product has begun to be manufactured on a large scale.

A SCIENTIST says that there is such a thing as a hoop-snake, but that it doesn't roll like a hoop. It simply makes a succession of loops, like the inch-worm, but so rapidly that it seems to roll around like a hoop.

SILK worms produced from sound eggs, but which contract disease during their life, always spin their silk, but they give rise to a stricken moth, the worms from which do not reach maturity and furnish no silk.

DR. BRYAND, a distinguished young French physician, is reported to have effected some wonderful cures of consumption by means of the cold-air cure, which consists mainly in gradually accustoming the patients to exposure until they are able to sleep out in the open air, regardless of the weather.

DR. KRAFFT-EBING, an eminent professor in the University of Vienna, says that 60 per cent. of all cases of insanity inherited a predisposition from their ancestors. In 20 per cent. of all cases intemperance is found to be the sole or chief cause, and in 30 per cent. more one of the causes of mental disease. He advises legal measures to combat the habit of intemperance or the formation of societies to counteract it.

A NEW calculating machine has just been invented in France and obtained a gold medal at the exhibition. The inventor is M. Bollee, of Le Mans, a clever machinist, already very favorably known by other useful inventions. The machine does addition, multiplication and division with astonishing rapidity, and all by a turn of the wheel. M. Mascart recently gave an account of the invention before the Academy of Science.

THE French professor of chemistry, De Millefleurs, recently exhibited before a meeting of Parisian scientists several bricks of petroleum, which he had discovered how to solidify by an original process. The petroleum bricks were hard enough to be handled without inconvenience, yet soft enough to be cut with a stout knife. They burned slowly when touched with a lighted match. Millefleurs says they are non-explosive and inexpensive.

THAT the phosphorescence of putrid fish or meat is due to the presence of bacteria does not seem strange, but a French naturalist, M. Giard, has been making observations of living marine crustacea, which go to prove that their phosphorescence is due to the presence of bacteria in the muscles. On innoculating healthy individuals the diseased condition was transmitted and M. Giard's laboratory was well lighted at night by these luminous but diseased crustaceans.

THE nervous irritation produced by tinnitus, or noises in the ear, from which many persons suffer much, has been mentioned as a possible cause of mental disorder. The coarser diseases of the ear are subject to surgical treatment from without, but nervous affections provoked by obscure disorders are not so amenable because their causes are more subtle, although none the less real. Sometimes an obstruction of the eustachian tube may be the chief cause of tinnitus.

BEYOND OUR BORDERS.

A SOMEWHAT new departure in building practice has been successfully made in Germany. This is the wholesale manufacture of mortar of the best quality to be sold to small builders and private individuals. Some 2,000,000 barrels were thus sold in Berlin last year.

LADY CARRINGTON, the wife of the Governor-General of New South Wales, warns educated ladies against emigrating to Australia unless they are willing to earn their living by manual labor. There is no further demand for governesses or teachers, but people who are useful with their hands find good pay there.

THE women of Denmark are showing their patriotism by contributing money to a fund for the defense of their country by means of fortifications, for which the Danish Parliament will not vote the necessary grant. They have already bought eight Krupp guns and presented them to the King and contributions are constantly coming in.

M. WORTH, the noted Parisian dressmaker, gave each one of his employes ten dollars to spend during the last day of the Paris Exposition, and closed his store at noon in order to allow his people the opportunity of expending their money. This act cost him over $6,000, but it was a small amount in comparison to the profits he received from the foreign visitors to the exposition.

THROWING THE SHOE.

THE Emperor of the Abyssinians, according to Castell, used the casting of a shoe as a sign of dominion.

THROWING the shoe was, and is, a symbol of renunciation of dominion and authority over the bride by her father or guardian.

IN some parts of New England old shoes are thrown after fishing and whaling vessels as an omen of the wish for a safe and successful return.

ROYALTY has not escaped the custom of throwing the old shoe. It was practiced on Queen Victoria when she entered the new castle at Balmoral in 1855.

GERMAN brides, on being conducted to the bridal chamber, threw their shoes among the crowd. Those who caught one considered it the happy omen of a speedy marriage.

In bidding adieu to 1889, events associated with it crowd the vision of memory in a wondering group.

It was indeed a year of varied character. The devastating elements held high carnival throughout the World. Flood, flame and roaring wind swept from ocean to ocean with hurried might thousands of human lives and millions of accumulated wealth, and even the seasons assumed unwonted change.

Yet with all came showers of blessings, and for all it becomes us to render grateful thanks to the God of Heaven who rides upon the whirlwind and directs the storm.

Darkened clouds may for a time hide from view the azure sky, but the golden sunshine will come again and invigorate the earth.

So, too, with individual misfortunes and disappointments. How often do they eventually prove disguised good, teaching wisdom, and transforming gloomy forebodings into joyous realities.

Let us give thanks for the bitter and the sweet, the ups and downs of life, the storm-cloud and the sunburst, and hopefully prepare to meet the future.

What of it?

Eighteen hundred and ninety is here, but who can read in advance its history?

No human being.

It is a sealed volume, to be opened as the demands proclaimed day by day.

To fearlessly meet and with alacrity and fidelity discharge every presented duty is the only shield of safety. With this ever in hand we can confidently march onward.

Our heart-born wishes to you all, good friends, is a prosperous and happy NEW YEAR!

PLAINFIELD MANY YEARS AGO.

Interesting Documentary Reminiscences—Coal Only $5.50 a Ton in 18[illegible]—The Philanthropic Citizens of '61 Who Subscribed to Supply the Wants of the Soldiers' Families.

One of Plainfield's oldest residents and a devoted reader of its only newspaper, sends THE PRESS for publication two interesting documents from his carefully preserved collection of mementos of days gone by. One dated over 41 years ago, reads:

[illegible]
Bought of Joseph McLaren, [illegible]
[illegible] per ton, $5.50.

In those days coal was brought to Bound Brook by water. McLaren had a yard where the vacant lot now is on North avenue adjoining Force's Hotel, would drive his horse in front of a car on the railroad track to Bound Brook station. There he would hitch to a wagon and drive to the boat, load up with coal, drive back to the station and shovel his load into the car. Then he would hitch his horse to the car and pull the coal along the track to Plainfield.

Once in a very great while a train would catch up with him, but it was never going fast enough to do any damage, and McLaren's horse never was slow enough to delay the engine very much. In spite of all this labor of loading, hitching and unhitching, the price shown by the above bill was $5.50 a ton [illegible] it is today.

The other document reads as follows:

"May 21, 18[illegible].

"We the subscribers promise and agree to pay to James Leonard, treasurer of the committee appointed at the meeting held at the Mansion House on the evening of May 20th inst., the sums subscribed by us, or so much thereof as shall be required, payable in installments, upon the demand of said committee, to be expended by them in providing for the wants of such of the families of volunteers from our vicinity leaving their homes to defend our Constitution and Union, as need support, and in providing for the maintenance of the Volunteers until they shall be accepted by the Government authorities. The money to be disbursed at the discretion of said committee—ten per cent of the subscription payable on subscribing, to the bearer."

PLAINFIELD'S DEATH RATE.

State Board of Health Statistics Show That Less People Die in This City Than in Most Others.

The tables of vital statistics of the State, prepared for the next annual report of the State Board of Health, are just completed, and set forth some interesting facts about the health of the people of New Jersey. There were in the State 28,343 deaths reported, about 500 less than the previous year, yet the death rate per 1,000 persons has increased from 17.61 last year, to 19.30 this year.

Plainfield's death rate is given as much below the above average, while many other towns and cities throughout the State, surpass it. This city with a population of 9,543, has a death rate of 16.[illegible]. Salem City with a population of nearly 6,000, has a death rate of 19.19, and Camden city with 61,096 people, has a death rate of 19.73. Rahway has a death rate of 19.30; town of Union, 19.74; Burlington city, 20.25, with 7,000 population; Gloucester, 21.81; New Brunswick, 20.19; Jersey City, 22.08; Orange, 22.85; Paterson, 23.01; Passaic, 24.96; Morristown, 24.38. Atlantic City comes last with the high rate of 29.03. During the year 7[illegible] children under 1 year died there.

In this connection the following is republished from THE PRESS of Nov. 12, [illegible], covering a period of twelve months to October, 1889: Marriages solemnized in this city, 97; births attended, 214; deaths occurred, 136—being 59 of 5 years and under, 49 from 5 to 50 years, and 28 of 50 years and over.

Quarterly Review.

The regular quarterly review of the Seventh Day Baptist Sunday School took place on Sabbath Day afternoon. The review consisted of twelve lessons or illustrations, six of which were described by Miss May Tomlinson and the other six by Miss Lulu Lewis.

The bright or good side of Daniel's character was described by Mrs. Dr. [illegible], and the weak side by Mr. Chas. Griffin.

Lessons on the character of Absalom were given by Miss Florence Titsworth, and the character of the boy Jesus was described by Mr. Tomlinson. The good side of Solomon's character was portrayed by Mrs. Lucy [illegible] and the weak side by Clarence Titsworth.

Miss Eva Lewis read a Christmas story, and Miss Irene Smith recited "The Shepherd Boy." A few remarks by the pastor brought the service to a close.

—Elm Park Hotel at Bound Brook was sold on Dec. 26, to satisfy a judgment. The property was purchased by Mrs. Mary E. [illegible] for $[illegible].

Plainfield Water Works Assured.

A Contract Approved by the Common Council—Messrs Moore & Lovell the Successful Bidders—Provisions and Resolutions Relating to the Matter—The Certificate of Incorporation.

CITY COUNCIL MEETING.

The City Council met in adjourned session, on Friday, to further consider the report of the Water Committee, on the matter of introducing water works in this city. President Dumont called the meeting to order at 8:55 o'clock, and the following other Councilmen were present: Messrs. Dunham, Erickson, Gallup, Jenkins, Marsh, Moffett, Meyers, Newhall and Squires—10.

The minutes of the last meeting were read, and the report of the Special Committee, appointed at the last meeting, was then taken up. President Dumont gave a synopsis of the report. He said that in section No. 20 of the proposed contract, relating to the number of hydrants, (200) there was no change. The company had also agreed to lay pipes from the main to the curb, free of expense to the property owner; the yearly limit of purchase as provided for in sections 65 and 66, was changed from two to three years, and the purchase price for the first year was fixed at ten per cent, additional on the total cost of the works; 25 per cent for the second year, and 20 per cent. for the third. In case the city decides to purchase the works at the expiration of ten years, then the purchase price shall not exceed 10 per cent. of the actual cost of the works; section No. 69 provides for extending the service to North Plainfield, and an additional section to the proposed contract, provides for the issuing of bonds to purchase the works.

The Water Committee, through Mr. Newhall, presented a communication from the Commonwealth Water Company of Newark, stating that on account of the unavoidable absence of one of the members of the company, said company was unable to submit a proposition to-night to furnish the city with water; the paper also alluded to the alleged perpetual contract granted by act of the Legislature in 1862, and still in the possession of the Commonwealth Company, adding that it was the intention of the Company to merge the contract into a proposition, and that the same would be ready on Monday next. The communication was filed.

City Clerk O. B. Leonard then read the several amended sections in the contract, as reported by the Special Committee, after which Mr. Newhall introduced the following resolution which prevailed. Mr. Moffett voting "no."

Resolved, That it is the sense of the common council that the proposed form of contract as read by the clerk is satisfactory, and that the water committee be directed to procure from the proposed incorporators, or their representatives, a formal offer to form a corporation and cause such corporation to enter into contract with the city in the form proposed, and that when such offer is received that the committee report the same for action thereon by the common council.

Mr. Marsh moved that when the Council adjourn it be to meet again on January 2. Adopted.

The Public Lights Committee reported on the November claim of the Electric Light Company for $674.85. It was referred and subsequently ordered paid. The same Committee reported back the several petitions for street lights. They were ordered on file.

Mr. Squires stated that the street lighting contract had been accepted by the Electric Light Company. He submitted a resolution to the effect that the contract was not intended to apply to any territory beyond the city limits. Adopted.

Mr. Newhall reported back the water contract as originally filed, together with a written agreement from William Hill consenting to the modifications made in the contract to-night.

The same Councilman submitted the proposed certificate of incorporation, which was read and adopted. It was as follows:

We the undersigned, a majority of whom reside in the State of New Jersey, being desirous of forming a company for the purpose of constructing and operating water works in the city of Plainfield, in said State of New Jersey, and of supplying said city and the inhabitants with water, do make sign and acknowledge the following certificate in writing:

First. The corporate name adopted by said company is "The Water Works Company of Plainfield."

Second. The amount of capital of said company is two hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($250,000), divided into twenty-five hundred (2,500) shares of one hundred dollars ($100) each.

Third. The term of existence of said company is fifty years.

Fourth. The number of directors of said company is seven.

Fifth. The names of those who shall manage the affairs of said company for the first year or until their successors are elected and qualify, and who are respectively subscribers to the capital stock of said company are:

J. Herbert Johnston, residing in New York city; Cornelius N. Hoagland, residing in Brooklyn, N. Y., William Foster, Jr., residing in New York city, James Moore, residing in Elizabeth, N. J., Samuel Knox, residing in Elizabeth, N. J., John R. Moore, residing in Elizabeth, N. J., George Kyte, residing in Fanwood, N. J.

Sixth. The name of the city in or for which such water works are to be constructed and the business of the company carried on, and in which the principal office of said company shall be, is the city of Plainfield, in the county of Union, a city of not more than fifteen thousand and of not less than two thousand inhabitants.

In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hands and seals this 21st day of December, 1889, in presence of W. H. Smith.

J. HERBERT JOHNSTON,
WM. FOSTER, JR.,
C. N. HOAGLAND,
JAMES MOORE,
SAMUEL KNOX,
JOHN R. MOORE,
GEORGE KYTE.

STATE OF NEW YORK, } ss.
CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW YORK, }

Be it remembered that on this 21st day of December, one thousand eight hundred and eighty nine, before me Wm. H. Smith, a Commissioner for New Jersey, in the State of New York, personally appeared, J. Herbert Johnston, William Foster, Jr., Cornelius N. Hoagland, James Moore, Samuel Knox, John R. Moore and George Kyte, who I am satisfied are the persons in the within instrument named, and I having first made known to them the contents thereof, they did each acknowledge that they signed, sealed and delivered the same as their voluntary act and deed, for the uses and purposes therein expressed.

W. H. SMITH,
Commissioner for N. J., in N. Y.
[SEAL.]

Mr. Newhall offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted, Mr. Moffett being absent from the room.

Resolved, That the consent in writing of the corporate authorities of the city of Plainfield be and the same is hereby given to J. Herbert Johnston, Cornelius N. Hoagland, William Foster, Jr., James Moore, Samuel Knox, John R. Moore and George Kyte, to associate themselves as a body politic and corporate under the name of "The Water Works Company of Plainfield," for the purpose of constructing, maintaining and operating water works for the purpose of supplying the city of Plainfield and its inhabitants with water, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the construction, maintenance and operation of water works for the purpose of supplying cities, towns and villages of this state with water," approved April 21, 1876, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto.

Resolved, That the mayor and city clerk be authorized and instructed to sign the consent of the corporate authorities of the city to the certificate of incorporation of said company.

Mr. Marsh made a motion which prevailed, requesting the treasurer and collector to have their yearly reports in the hands of the clerk on or before January 2, at 8 o'clock A. M.

The Water Committee was authorized to have two hundred copies of the water works contract printed when signed, and the $2,000 certified check of Messrs Moore & Lovell was ordered returned to them.

Mr. Newhall offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the offer and contract of J. Herbert Johnston and others presented to-night be and the same hereby is accepted, and that upon a copy of the certificate of incorporation of The Water Works Company of Plainfield, as filed in the office of the Secretary of State, certified under the hand and seal of the Secretary of State of New Jersey, being presented to the mayor, together with bond of said company executed and approved as provided in section 64 of said contract, the mayor and city clerk be and they are hereby authorized and instructed, on behalf of the city, to execute contract with said "The Water Works Company of Plainfield" in the form approved by the common council, upon tender of duplicate of such contract duly executed by said company.

The resolution was adopted, all present voting aye.

The same Councilman submitted a proposed contract with Mr. Rudolph Hering, the latter to act as the city's engineer in the construction of the water works. The following resolutions bearing on the subject were adopted:

Resolved, That upon execution and delivery of the proposed contract with "The Water Works Company of Plainfield," the moneys stipulated to be paid to the city by said company in paragraph 58 of said proposed contract, be and the same hereby are directed to be kept separate and apart from all other funds and that the same be and are hereby appropriated to the payment of the Engineer for the city for his services as such Engineer, and after that to other expenses of the city in connection with said works already incurred or to be incurred, and after that to general current expenses.

Resolved, That the form of certificate proposed on this date by Mr. Rudolph Hering to act as engineer for the city be approved, and that after the execution and delivery of the proposed contract between the city and said "The Water Works Company of Plainfield," the Mayor and City Clerk be and are hereby requested and instructed to sign, seal and deliver said proposed contract with Rudolph Hering.

A motion by Mr. Erickson to the effect that the clerk have an engrossed copy of the water contract in the hands of the contractors no later than January 2, was adopted.

Council adjourned at midnight.

A BROKEN MIRROR THAT BROUGHT GOOD LUCK.

An Old Deed That Heirs Had Been Hunting for Years, Accidentally Found—Six Millions of Property That Some Plainfielders Have an Interest In.

THE PRESS of Friday told of a meeting in Elizabeth of a number of heirs to $6,000,000 worth of property, that some Plainfield residents are interested in. The accidental discovery of a necessary deed recorded in Albany over 200 years ago, has caused hope to spring internal in the breasts of those concerned. The story is a most surprising one:

Charles Roll, of Newark, accidentally broke an old mirror four weeks ago. It had been given to him years ago by his grandfather. The glass was shivered to atoms, and an old age-yellowed piece of parchment was disclosed to view for the first time in a century and more, as was proved by the nature of the document. For seventy-five years Mr. Roll and his relatives have been endeavoring to gain additional evidence with which they could lay claim to a wide stretch of land in the Mohawk Valley, along the banks of the Mohawk River. Mr. Roll knew perfectly well that his Holland-Dutch ancestor, Jacob Roll, had owned a large tract of land there which had been abandoned during the French and Indian wars, but he never found any papers by which he could fix the position of the land.

The document which dropped from the mirror-back, four weeks ago, was an important missing proof that the heirs of Jacob Roll, of whom there are 150, have long been seeking. Having found it they will press their claim to property near Schenectady N. Y., valued at $6,000,000. The piece of folded parchment was a deed from the Indians to Jacob Roll, giving Roll a clear title to a tract of land four miles in length along the Mohawk River, beginning in the city of Schenectady, and running back from the river nine miles. The whole town of Amsterdam is believed to be included in the Indian deed, as are also valuable properties of the New York Central Railroad.

An Indian title or deed of land is almost impossible to set aside in New York State. The validity of this deed is said to be unquestionable, as C. W. Manning of Cincinnati, Ohio, was in Albany, N. Y., on Dec. 21, and found the deed recorded in the old Dutch records in the year [illegible].

Mr. Manning went to Elizabeth, N. J., on night Dec. 23, as soon as he proved the genuineness of the title, and there joined a committee comprising representatives of over 100 heirs. Charles W. Roll of No. 79 Bolivar street, Newark, N. J., was chairman of the committee. These also subscribed a sum of money with which to push the claims of the heirs, and assessed each of the heirs a certain sum as a reserve fund to draw upon. The heirs are scattered in all parts of the United States, but each lineal descendant of Jacob Roll was represented at Elizabeth on Saturday night.

When Jacob Roll was compelled to flee, owing to the Indian war, he went to Central New Jersey, and settled at Springfield. There he also owned considerable property by Indian deeds, and the validity of these deeds has never been questioned there. The heirs are confident that at least a large part of the land can be claimed by them, as the deed specifically explains what lands are transferred to Jacob Roll.

There are several descendants and heirs of Jacob Roll, the Hollander, living in and near this city. They are Mrs. John TenEyck, Chancellor Roll, Mrs. Wm. Corbett, Mrs. Cornelia Rossiter, Mrs. Amelia Sturtevant, Mrs. Wm. L. Force, Mrs. James H. Force, James Laing, Mrs. Sarah E. Mulligan, Mrs. Caleb DeCamp, and Mrs. Mary Louise Farley of Fanwood. Some of these were present at the meeting of heirs on Saturday Dec. 21 at Elizabeth, and they all declare that they are confident of a successful end of the proceedings about to be made to gain possession of the large tracts of land transferred by the old Indian deed.

Sheriff Codington's Considerate Action.

Sheriff Codington, THE PRESS is informed, was instructed by the attorneys who issued the papers in the [illegible] case of [illegible], vs. Rice, to serve defendants personally. He took unusual precautions in carrying these instructions so as to make the service as little unpleasant to defendant's wife as was possible. Her physician was consulted by the Sheriff and the former then saw his patient, and reported to the Sheriff that he thought it would not injure her to be served personally. Upon this, the service was made. Mr. Rice desires THE PRESS to say that the Sheriff performed his unpleasant duty in the most considerate manner possible under the instructions which he was bound to obey.

TWENTY-FIRST ANNIVERSARY.

Howell Division Celebrates the Event in an Enjoyable Manner.

The 21st anniversary of Howell Division 97, Sons of Temperance, of this city, was celebrated on Friday evening, Dec. 27, with appropriate ceremonies. The singing of an opening ode was followed by an address of welcome by Geo. Rockafellow, W. P. An interesting programme followed, consisting of music by the Metuchen Glee Club, and addresses by G. W. P., the Rev. A. G. VanAiken; P. G. W. P., Jas. B. Perine; P. W. P., R. Cogan, of Orange, and P. W. P., Hill, of Metuchen. There were also recitations by Mrs. Mary Haywood of Newark; Miss Alice Scribner, Miss Emma Angleman and Miss Minnie Rockafellow. The latter also sang a solo. Miss Try Mattox gave a pleasing recitation.

A feature of the anniversary was a dialogue by ten little pilgrims, entitled: "What we mean to do." An original poem, dedicated to Howell Division, was read by S. Scribner.

At a late hour the festivities ceased with the singing of the closing ode. The hall was decorated with flags and flowers, and visitors were present from neighboring cities. A number of the Grand officers were also in attendance. Select Division, No. 237, of Newark, sent an unusually large representation, as did also Metuchen Division, No. 204. Refreshments were served in abundance.

A SENSIBLE FESTIVAL.

The Seventh Day Baptist Scholars Are not Stuffed With Sweets.

The Sabbath school Christmas festival held by the Seventh Day Baptists on Thursday, was a most pleasing and satisfactory affair in every way. The committee in charge were Miss Florence Potter and Mrs. Charles Dunham.

Mr. Edwin Lewis presided. The programme opened with a recitation by Miss Anna Titsworth. This was followed by a Christmas play recently published in the Christian Union. Mr. Jeremiah Allis acted as Father Time, and Mr. Thaddeus Smith as Santa Claus. The many other characters were distributed among members of the society.

At the close of the above representation, which occupied about one hour, the scholars were presented with useful and pleasing gifts. These included dolls, boxes of blocks, penknives, bottles of perfumery, &c., in lieu of oranges, candy and such other unhealthy things that the children had been surfeited with the previous day.

ALL WRONG AS USUAL.

The Rise of Bowling in New Jersey.

The New York Tribune in its sporting news refers to the Union County Bowling League as an organization of consequence and says:

"While metropolitan bowling clubs have been forming themselves into leagues for social and athletic enjoyment, the brokers, bankers and other business men who daily travel between this city and suburban towns along the lines of the New Jersey Central and Pennsylvania railroads, have caught the fever and formed clubs of their own. Like mushrooms, the bowling clubs sprang into social prominence last Winter in Elizabeth, Westfield, Fanwood, Plainfield and Somerville. In the little town of Westfield half a dozen bowling clubs are in lively existence. In Plainfield are several small clubs, which jointly support a club house, in addition to one chartered organization known as the Plainfield Crescent League.

"The series of games to be played by the Union County Bowling League began on Thursday, Nov. 7. Since that date teams from the various league clubs have been in constant competition. The Elizabeth Athletic club team has been doing excellent work and thus far leads the others. The Nameless club of Westfield, stands second in the championship series on a tie with the Monday Night club, also a Westfield organization. The Crescent league of Plainfield, and the Pastime club tie for fourth place. The series will close on Tuesday, Feb. 4.

"Great interest has been awakened throughout the county over the bowling of the league clubs, and at whatever city or town the different games are played a gathering of bowling enthusiasts from all parts of the county is always present."

The above, so far as the record of the Union County league is concerned, is about as accurate a statement of the matter as the misfit out-of-town correspondent can furnish.

The Elizabeth Athletic team does not "far lead the others." It is second on the list. The "Mondays" of Westfield lead, and consequently the "Nameless" club does not tie the former for second as the latter are only third. The Crescent team of this city is fourth, and the "Pastimes" being last do not tie them at all.

The record now stands:

	WON.	LOST.
Monday of Westfield	[illegible]	2
Elizabeth Athletic Club	5	2
Nameless of Westfield	[illegible]	[illegible]
Crescent of Plainfield	2	3
Pastime of Westfield	1	4

Another of the Patriarchs.

The second of this season's assembly balls was held at Seminary Hall last evening. The patronesses were Mrs. William E. Bloodgood, Mrs. Charles E. Brooks, Mrs. Pliny Fisk, Mrs. Fred J. Kuhn, Mrs. Robert L. Burnett, Mrs Harry G. Runkle, Mrs. William T. Kaufman and Mrs. DeWitt Clinton Ivins.

Officers of the Endowment Rank.

The insurance branch of the Knights of Pythias fraternity, is called the Endowment Rank and to it none but K. of P's in good standing can belong. Monday night the members of the Rank in this city held their annual meeting, and the following officers were elected and installed.

President—John H. Carney.
Vice President—Joseph H. Shepherd.
Sec'y and Treasurer—Eugene V. Lorton.
Medical Examiner—T. S. Davis, M. D.

The annual report read during the evening, showed the Rank in this city to be in the best financial condition.

A Big Fair in Their New Gymnasium.

At a special meeting of the Plainfield Bicycle Club held on Saturday evening, it was decided to hold a "Mammoth Gigantic Fair" in the new gymnasium building, on February 21, and 22, next.

A committee consisting of Messrs T. S. Burr, E. L. Walz, Jr., D. H. Runyon, F. L. C. Martin and R. Pound, was appointed to make the necessary arrangements. Work will be begun on the new building immediately and it is estimated that the cost of same including apparatus, will be about $[illegible].

A Family Jar in Tracey's Flat.

James Tracey, the shoe-maker who with his wife and son Barney, occupy a "flat" on North avenue, began the New Year, yesterday, by breaking up housekeeping. About five o'clock yesterday afternoon, Tracey, his wife, his son and a bull-dog became involved in a free fight and the commotion made by the fighters attracted fully one hundred spectators to the battle ground.

During the fracas, the bull-dog terribly lacerated Mrs. Tracey's right arm, so that it was found necessary to summon Dr. Andrew Manning to dress the wounds. The main articles of warfare used, were chairs, stove lids, crockery ware and sticks, and when officers Grant and Lynch arrived on the spot, the interior of Tracey's "flat" looked as though it had been struck by a western cyclone. The entire family was placed under arrest, and this morning Mayor Male fined James and his son each five dollars. Mrs. Tracey was discharged.

CHRISTMAS AT THE CRESCENT CHURCH.

The Sunday School Festivals and Religious Services.

The Christmas festival of the scholars of the Crescent Avenue church, was held in Bethel chapel Saturday afternoon and evening. The younger ones met at 2:30 and the older at 7:30. Superintendent L. C. Pierson had charge of the afternoon entertainment, and Superintendent H. B. Newhall, that of the evening.

An exhibition of the phonograph and its marvels, was the main feature of both programmes. Instrumental and vocal solos, a quartette of darkies in the cornfield, music by a full orchestra, and other enjoyable numbers were turned out of the wonderful machine in a very realistic condition.

The pastor, the Rev. Mr. Richards, not being able to be present, had spoken his piece into the phonograph's receiver, and at the evening's entertainment it was transmitted to the audience as natural as life. Mr. James Burdette, the monologist, was also present upon both occasions and with his inimitable ways and means greatly pleased the scholars. Ice cream and cake were served to all.

Sunday afternoon all the schools connected with the Crescent Avenue Society and its missions assembled in the church. The scholars and teachers filled the auditorium completely and crowded everybody else up into the gallery. The pulpit was occupied by the Rev. Mr. Richards, the Rev. Mr. Lee, and Superintendents H B Newhall, H. C. Squires and S. A. Ginna.

The Rev. Mr. Lee, of Bethel chapel, opened the services with prayer, followed by singing in which all took part led by Mr. H. O. Newman, and accompanied by Miss Jessie Utter on the church organ and Miss Carrie Dewey on the piano. There was also vocal music by the Hope chapel scholars, led by Mr. Fred. Andrews and accompanied by Miss Nellie Day.

Mr. S. A. Ginna, Superintendent of Bethel Mission, and Mr. H. B. Newhall, led in responsive readings; and H. C. Squires, Superintendent of Hope Mission, led in the Lord's prayer. A recitation was given by Miss Hattie Goddard, with a chorus by nine little Misses of the primary classes including Sarah Richards, Mary Collier and Anna Cahoone.

A recitation entitled "The Old, Old Story," was given under charge of Mrs. Hillman, by Miss Rose Pierce, Annie Baker, Louise Baker, Laura Mattis and Lena Case, all members of the Hope chapel Sunday school. The Rev. Mr. Richards' address was also much enjoyed.

NO FLIES ON THE BI'S.

Ground Already Broken For the Bicycle Club's Gymnasium.

"There are no flies on us," should be the motto of the Plainfield Bicycle Club, for, although less than a month has elapsed since the subject was broached at a Club meeting, ground was broken Monday morning for the annex to the Club house on Sycamore street, which will contain the new Gymnasium. But although it is written "annex," it must be explained that this is a case in which "the tail will wag the dog," inasmuch as the annex will be larger than the Club house.

At first suggestion of a gymnasium, it was proposed to put up a few apparatus in the wheel room, but this room was decided to be too small to swing even a kitten in and that a gymnasium there, in such a confined space, could be but "a thing of shreds and patches." The new room will be forty-five feet square, and will contain a real, full-fledged, double-breasted, gymnasium, auditorium and concert hall combined. It will be well ventilated, well heated and well lighted. True, no matter how well lighted it may be, it will not be able "to hold a candle" to the gymnasi of Harvard and Yale; and no matter how well heated it may be, it must "pale its ineffectual fires" before those of Princeton and Columbia; but it will nevertheless, be a gymnasium of which the town need not be ashamed, and one in which the members shall take pride and delight, and from which they will gather physical and pecuniary profit.

Pecuniary profit they will doubtlessly attain, for it is intended that the room shall have a seating capacity, in its gallery and on its floor, sufficient to accommodate the "petted four hundred," at least, of Plainfield's best society. True, this number can only be accommodated in the case of concerts or exhibitions of such a nature as not to require the floor space. When this is needed, as it will be in the event of athletic tournaments, the seating capacity will be limited to the galleries and a small portion of the floor. A large, open fire-place will add to the attractiveness and comfort of this room.

At a meeting held on Saturday night it was determined to "open" the annex with a "halcyon and vociferous" fair, the like of which can be conceived only by the choice spirits which compose the Bicycle club. It will take place on February twenty-one and twenty-two, and THE PRESS would suggest that the club's fair friends—and who are not its friends for fair?—shall "take time by the fore-lock," and begin their labor of love in the preparing of the most useful, precious and appropriate gifts which their brightest wits can devise and which their shapely hands can form.

Don't forget the dates:—February 21 and 22, 1890.

Mad Dog.

Adam Fritz, the butcher, shot a dog in his door yard on Somerset street, Thursday, which showed signs of the rabbies. The animal had bitten a dog owned by Mr. Fritz, and two others belonging to Mr. I. Lewis.

Card of Thanks.

The members of the United Order of Independent Odd Ladies desire to return thanks to the members of the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein, the cornet band and all others who so kindly assisted them in making their recent fair so great a success.

BY ORDER OF THE COMMITTEE.

That Absconding Clothing Firm.

Mr. Samuel Drisir, the West Front street pawn-broker, who grieves over the loss of about $1,900 by the absconding firm of Brown Bro., the clothiers, says that the members of the firm left nothing in the store but "McGinitis"—an image in the window.

When Constable Moffett took possession of the store, on Friday, he found on the shelves carefully wrapped up tomato cans, blocks of wood, etc. The firm had evidently been carrying away their stock for some time past, and substituting these worthless packages on the shelves instead.

Honoring their Parents.
(Elizabeth Journal.)

Twenty-four children and grandchildren assembled on Christmas night at the residence of Mr. Jesse A. Oakley, on Linden street. They came from Brooklyn, Plainfield and this city, and comprised a merry company. Several hours were delightfully spent in the interchange of greetings between the representatives of three generations.

A fine silver cake basket was given to Mr. and Mrs. Oakley, the presentation address being made by the eldest son, to which a feeling response was made by Mr. Oakley. Music and a substantial supper were afterwards in order, and the company separated at a late hour with kind wishes for those under whose roof they had passed the evening.

—John Burns was arrested on Friday for threatening to shoot his wife. He was held in $500 bail for the Grand Jury.

FIRE.

Mr. John Chandler's Residence Badly Damaged. The Origin of the Fire a Mystery—The Insurance and Other Details.

Between 11 and 12 o'clock Sunday morning, Mr. John Chandler's residence on East Third street, was damaged by fire to the extent of about $4,500 or $5,000, including the loss on the contents.

Mr. Chandler, his wife and one daughter were at home at the time, and the former was sitting in a front room down stairs, reading a newspaper. Presently his daughter hastily ran down stairs and told her father that one of the bedrooms on the second floor was filled with smoke. Going up stairs, Mr. Chandler was surprised to see a fire burning brightly in one corner of the room, about four feet from a register. He poured a pitcher of water on the fire, and almost instantly the flames shot through a partition from another room.

Mr. Chandler saw at a glance that the fire was beyond control, so he told his wife to gather up her valuables, while he removed his papers, etc., to a place of safety. When they were about to leave the burning building it was found that the stairway was on fire, thus cutting off their escape in that direction, and Mr. Chandler was obliged to carry his wife through a window and down a ladder to the ground.

Meanwhile an alarm was sounded, and the firemen responded with their usual promptness. Chief Doane and his assistants directed the movements of the firemen but the continual bursting of the rotten hose made it difficult to make much progress, and at one time the entire structure was doomed. After an hour's hard work, however, the fire was extinguished, but not until the entire two upper stories were destroyed. Some of the furniture was removed, but much of it was burned.

The house was insured for $3,500—$2,500 of which was in the German-American Company and $1,000 in the Norwich Union. The contents were insured for $1,500 in the Northern Company of England.

Sunday was the anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Chandler's wedding.

ENTERED INTO REST.

Sad Death of a Young Boston Woman While Visiting Her Sister in North Plainfield.

Florence Louise Elden, a younger sister of Mrs. T. E. Hazell, died at the home of the latter on Duer street at about five o'clock this morning. On Thursday of last week she was taken with what is now more or less correctly termed La Grippe or Russian influenza. It developed into pleurisy and subsequent typhoid pneumonia, followed by death after several hours of great suffering.

Miss Elden's home is in Boston, Mass., and she was on a holiday visit to her sister. She was an exceptionally beautiful woman, both in face and character. Her father died in June last and was buried on Bailey's Island off the coast of Maine, where the body of his daughter will be laid by his side.

She was a member of the High street Congregational church of Portland, Me., where funeral services will be held upon the arrival of the remains. There will be short services at the home of her brother-in-law, 78 Duer street, at 3 o'clock to-morrow afternoon. The Rev. Mr. Schenck will officiate.

Mrs. Hazell herself is lying very sick at her home. She and her aged mother are now the only surviving heirs of Mrs Hazell's father, and are the owners of the most extended and handsomest estate on Bailey's Island, which is rapidly becoming one of the most favored and fashionable of Eastern Summer resorts.

At the First Presbyterian Church.

Friday night, special services were held by the Sunday school commemorative of Christmas. Mr. H. B. Opdyke, the superintendent presided, and delivered a short address. Rev. Dr. K. P. Ketcham, the pastor, also made an address, and there were recitations and singing by the scholars. The gifts consisted of beautiful wicker barrels filled with candy and oranges.

The Bethel Mission's Christmas.

The Christmas festivities of the scholars of Bethel chapel—the colored Mission of the Crescent Avenue church—was held Friday evening when the efforts of Superintendent S. A. Ginna, and A. W. Duxberry resulted in the thorough gratification of the large gathering present.

There was singing, addresses, and plenty of good things to eat for everybody. The younger scholars was also remembered with gifts of books.

Christmas Festival at Grace Church.

The Sunday school of Grace Church held its annual Christmas festival Friday evening, and the hearts of the children were made glad by the good things provided for their entertainment. The programe included the singing of carols by the school, a processional by the choir and school, prayer, responsive reading, the annunciation, the advent, a scripture lesson and an address by the rector.

The distribution of gifts, a carol and the benediction brought the anniversary to a close. The decorations and music were as usual, exquisite.

A Series of Interesting Missionary Services.

The Congregational Sunday school began last Sunday a series of missionary services to be held on quarterly review Sundays during the year. The topic was, "Africa." The pastor showed where the Bible history touches Africa, recalling how Joseph and Mary had taken the child Jesus to Egypt, and stating that what the church and its missionaries were now trying to do is to take Christ into Africa.

He went on to speak of the life and work of David Livingstone. Another member of the school followed with an account of the work of Gordon and Stanley. In the absence of Mr. Suffern, Mr. Goodrich then spoke of the Soudan and the new mission which has been organized, "The Pioneer Soudan Mission," whose first missionaries start this month for the field. The talks were illustrated by maps hung about the room.

Fraternal Sympathy and Regret.

Goodwill Lodge, Knights of Pythias of Scotch Plains, have passed the following preamble and resolution:

WHEREAS, We, the Officers and Members of Goodwill Lodge No. 101, K. of P., of the Grand Jurisdiction of the State of New Jersey, at a regular meeting held this 28th day of Dec. 1889, the following preamble and resolution have adopted.

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God to remove from our midst our beloved Brother Henry Sebel, and

WHEREAS, with a Brotherly feeling we sympathize with the family of our deceased brother in their bereavement and knowing that while we cannot but view with sorrow his absence from our midst, we also know how great that sorrow must be to those who are nearer and dearer to him, and bowing in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, it is therefore

Resolved, That we tender to the family of our deceased Brother our deepest and tenderest sympathy in this their hour of affliction, and be it

Resolved, That as a mark of sorrow and respect for our late Brother we drape our Altar and Lodge room in mourning for the space of thirty days, and be it

Resolved, That a copy of these Resolutions be forwarded to the family of our deceased Brother, and that the same be published in the Plainfield papers and spread upon the minutes of the Lodge.

DISCUSSING SCHOOL TOPICS.

Principal Boes of North Plainfield Addresses the Teachers of the State.

The New Jersey State Teachers' Association met at Trenton last Thursday. There was the largest attendance in 36 years. Prof. A. B. Guilford of Jersey City, presided. E. I. Chapman, Supt. of Public Instruction, delivered the address of welcome, and Chas. M. Davis of Bloomfield, responded.

Principal James M. Green of Trenton, Chairman of the Committee on Educational Progress, in the report of that Committee criticised the system of licensing teachers throughout the State and recommended greater uniformity. President Guilford, in his annual address, discussed the best method of promoting from grade to grade, and took a stand against examinations as a means of determining fitness, saying there was not one good argument that could be advanced in favor of them.

Principal C. E. Boes of North Plainfield, addressed the meeting Friday.

Card of Thanks.

The undersigned wishes to extend his thanks to the firemen and all others who so kindly assisted in extinguishing the fire which destroyed his home on East Third street, Sunday.

Installation of Officers.

The newly-elected officers of Plainfield Lodge, No. 44, I. O. O. F., will be installed into their respective offices by District Deputy Grand Master, William Heise, assisted by a very able staff from Hansa Lodge, of Elizabeth, on the evening of Monday, January 6.

Strikes and Spares.

The first week of the second contest for the Club cup by the members of the Crescent League, closed on Saturday night with C. R. Thiers and D. W. Littell tied for first place with 205.

Other good bowling of the week was done by Manager Apgar who rolled 213, and W. G. Brett, a comparative beginner, who rolled 153.

A Genuine Esquimau.

At Vincent chapel, on Saturday evening, Olof Krarer, the only Esquimau lady in this country, gave an interesting talk on "Life in the Frozen North," before a good-sized audience. The lady is a native of Greenland, and she was educated by missionaries. Her talk on the manners and customs of the inhabitants of the frigid North, was attentively listened to.

Election of Officers.

At a regular convocation of Jerusalem Chapter, R. A. M., held in their rooms, Thursday evening, Dec. 26, 1889, the following named were selected as officers for the ensuing year:

H. P.—John Chandler.
K. King—B. F. Cornell.
Scribe—Henry Woodland.
Treasurer—C. M. Goddard.
Secretary—H. S. Mason.
C. of H.—J. G. Miller.
Prin. Soj.—D. C. Adams.
R. A. Capt.—F. Leggett.
Trustees—W. L. Gavett, J. S. Probasco, O. L. Jenkins.

New Officers for the Goodwill Knights.

At a regular meeting last Friday evening, of Goodwill Lodge, Knights of Pythias, of Scotch Plains, the following officers were elected:

Chancellor Commander—P. C. Jno. G. McNair.
Vice Chancellor—Jno. Smith.
Prelate—Elmore E. Johnson.
Master of Exchequer—Jno. Flannery.
Master of Finance—August Clemser.
Keeper of Records & Seals—Jas. B. Guttridge.
Master at Arms—August Hess.
Trustee—Chas. Haverley.
Grand Lodge Representative—J. E. Flannery.
Alternate—Jno. Flannery.

Mr. Haines at Reform Hall.

The presence of Mr. Samuel A. Haines as speaker drew to Reform Hall a goodly attendance Sunday night. President Harper was at his post of duty, and Captain Wm. Ostrom conducted the devotional services. Mr. and Mrs. King and Miss Hawkins being unavoidably absent from Mr. Vanderbeek's choir, Miss and Mr. E. D. Titsworth kindly supplied their places.

Mr. Haines spoke with great eloquence and power for about an hour. To attempt an adequate report of his splendid address must fail, as to fully appreciate it one must hear it directly from the lips of the orator. Never did an audience listen with more devoted interest. Mr. Haines narrated his recent visit to cities and towns in the states of Montana, Dakota, Washington, Oregon, California and Colorado, graphically describing numerous incidents and drawing therefrom valuble moral lessons, a rich vein of both religious and patriotic feeling ran through his address. He ably espoused the cause of total abstinence, and denounced in no uncertain manner the legalization of the liquor traffic whether on the basis of high or low license.

The President announced that on Sunday evening, January 12, Mr. Haines would deliver in Reform Hall his address entitled "Responsibility."

The President also gave notice of the regular business meeting of the Club next Thursday night; and that the ladies of the Temperance Aid Society would receive calls New Year's day and evening in the parlors of Reform Hall and there dispense the hospitalities of the season.

The New York Sun.
FOR
1890.

Some people agree with THE SUN'S opinions about men and things and some people don't; but everybody likes to get hold of the newspaper which is never dull and never afraid to speak its mind.

Democrats know that for twenty years THE SUN has fought in the front line for Democratic principles, never wavering or weakening in its loyalty to the true interests of the party it serves with fearless intelligence and disinterested vigor. At times opinions have differed as to the best means of accomplishing the common purpose; it is not THE SUN'S fault if it has seen further into the millstone.

Eighteen hundred and ninety is the year that will probably determine the result of the Presidential election of 1892, and perhaps the fortunes of the Democracy for the rest of the century. Victory in 1892 is a duty, and the beginning of 1890 is the best time to start out in company with THE SUN.

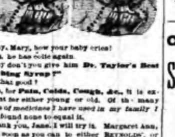
BEFORE TAKING AFTER TAKING.



Why, Mary, how your baby cries!
Yes, he has colic again.
Why don't you give him Dr. Taylor's Best Soothing Syrup?"
Is that good?
Yes, for Pain, Colds, Coughs, &c., it is excellent for either young or old. Of the many kinds of medicines I have used in my family I have found none to equal it.
Thank you, Jane. I will try it. Margaret Ann, go as soon as you can to either REYNOLDS', or SHAW'S Drug Store, and get a bottle of Dr. Taylor's Soothing Syrup. 1-2-6m

DEATHS.

MULFORD—At his home, No. 147 Somerset street, on Thursday, Dec. 26, 1889, of pneumonia S. T. Mulford, aged 61 years, 8 months and 20 days.

PIER—At his residence, 7[illegible] 5th avenue, New York city, December 26 suddenly of pneumonia Garrett [illegible] Pier, in his 44th year; son of the late [illegible] D. Pier of Utica, N. Y.

When baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she was a Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

The BREATH of a chronic catarrh patient is often so offensive that he becomes an object of disgust. After a time ulceration sets in, the spongy bones are attacked and frequently entirely destroyed. A constant source of discomfort is the dripping of the purulent secretions into the throat, sometimes producing inveterate bronchitis which in its turn has been the exciting cause of pulmonary disease. The brilliant results which have attended its use for years past properly designate Ely's Cream Balm as by far the best and only cure.

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, City Editor.

—Oh, for a Y. M. C. A. Building.

—A gold watch was [illegible] at the Chandler fire, Sunday.

—Oh! would we but [illegible] that freight house moved away.

—The Rockaway Valley Railroad, which branches from the New Jersey Central at White House station, is nearly completed to Peapack.

—Three of Mr. John Chandler's daughters lost all of their worldly possessions, excepting the clothes they wore, by the fire Sunday.

—"The Monarch and the Manger," one of Rev. Dr. Lowery's Christmas [illegible], was rendered at the Park Avenue Baptist church, Sunday evening.

—The Court of Errors and Appeals held a conference at Trenton, on Friday, and decided to read opinions on January 28. The Court of Pardons [illegible] on Tuesday.

—At the present time there are said to be twenty new stores in course of erection in this city, which goes to show that Plainfield is fast growing as a business centre.

—One of the heavy iron girders which are to support the new bridge on Somerset street, fell to the [illegible] on Saturday, and considerable difficulty was experienced in raising it.

—The necessity for more and better hose for the fire department was illustrated at Sunday's fire. A Press reporter noticed ten lengths of hose burst all within about half an hour.

—The most fashionable manner of spending New Year's Day now seems to be in going out of town. Every one who can possibly leave town on that day and the Winter resorts are thronged by those who wish to escape the caller.

—The Central Times has issued a neat almanac for 1890. Besides containing a full calendar of the days, weeks, and months of the year, the pamphlet contains some valuable information, and reflects great credit on the publishers.

—Some comment has been made upon the action of the City Council in engaging the services of a New York engineer to superintend the construction of a water works system here, when there are four competent engineers residing in this city.

—Borough Councilman Smalley had a runaway accident on Linden avenue, North Plainfield, Friday morning, which resulted in wrecking his [illegible] wagon to a considerable extent. Mr. Fred. Sandford caught the runaway horse on Somerset street.

—Some facts worthy of being remembered by business men are that a note ceases to be negotiable after the time when it is due is past; that notes bear interest only when so stated, and that non-interest notes bear interest after the expiration of the days of grace.

—An exchange well says: "Don't smoke in the post office. It is never pleasant to many but now that the cold season has arrived, when the doors are closed, it is made doubly offensive to those who do not like it, and particularly so to ladies who may be in waiting."

—The hopes of the [illegible], the skate dealers, the skaters and some others have become dashed. The weather clerk has played them false, and instead of blizzards, snow, heavy frosts and piercing winds, we have lately been favored with weather so delightful as to cause us to ask ourselves whether it is really January.

His Memory Failed Him.

An amusing incident is told in connection with a recent marriage in this city. The prescribed ceremony of friends was used, and when the time arrived for the couple to marry themselves, the groom forgot his portion of the ceremony; and the bride was obliged to help him out of the dilemma, by prompting.

Christmas at the First Baptist Church.

The Sunday school of the First Baptist church held special Christmas services on Sunday afternoon, Mr. C. W. McCutchen the Superintendent presiding. The programme included the singing of carols, a reading by Miss Kitty Case, responsive readings, and an address by the pastor on Bethany. Dr. Yerkes told of his late visit to the Holy Land, and of his personal observations there.

Oh for a Town Clock.

If some one would only move the hands on the town clock, people would at least imagine that an effort had been made to start it running again. The clock in its present condition is worthless, and it is an eye-sore to the community at large. A few paltry dollars would put the clock in running order again, and it would be eminently proper for the City Council to make an appropriation that would lead to this end.

Getting Ready for [illegible] Season Again.

Workmen began Monday the painting of the exterior of the Hotel Netherwood. During the Winter, the dining room and parlors will be redecorated, and a great deal of money will also be spent in renewing and refitting other parts of the hotel in preparation for the coming season. The Council of '90 [illegible] and prosperity for Hotel Netherwood with other city benefits come in again.

Election of Officers.

Perseverance Lodge, No. 74, K. of P., at its convention held Friday, elected the following officers to serve for the ensuing year:

Chancellor Commander—Samuel L. Miller.
Vice Chancellor—Lewis [illegible].
Prelate—Edward S. Bean.
Keeper of Records and Seal—John F. Wakefield.
Master of Exchequer—John R. Carney.
Master of Finance—J. R. [illegible].
Master at Arms—M. D. [illegible].
Grand Lodge Representative—M. Tuton.
Alternate Representative—J. F. Wakefield.
Trustee—John [illegible].

District Deputy Grand Chancellor Chapman and staff of Elizabeth, will install the newly elected officers early in January.

Two Small Fires.

At 11:30 o'clock Friday, fire was discovered in the roof of Mr. John A. Thickstun's coal office at the corner of Third street and Madison avenue. A line of hose was quickly stretched from the Electric Light station, and the fire was gotten under control before the firemen arrived.

Chief Doane and his [illegible] assistants directed the movements of the firemen. The stream from the Electric Light station was ordered shut off so as to allow the firemen an opportunity to get on the roof. The fire was extinguished with but little difficulty. Mr. Thickstun's loss will probably not exceed $50.

After the department apparatus was returned to the various houses, another small fire was discovered in the roof of the Relief association building at the North corner of Madison avenue and Second street. This was started by a spark from Granite engine, which was located on the well in front of the building. A hole was burned into the roof large enough to admit of a man's body.

Take It in Time.

A man who presents the appearance of debility, whose [illegible] is sallow, and who is subject to spells of faintness, is liable to [illegible] death from heart disease. Let him take Dr. Flint's Remedy before it is too late. Descriptive treatise with each bottle; or address Mack Drug Co., N. Y. For sale by J. G. Miller.

PERSONALIA.

Miss Stokes, of Philadelphia, is the guest of Miss Mabel Woodruff, of East Second street.

Dr. C. A. Gregory, of East Front street, has gone to Lakewood, N. J., for the benefit of his health.

The Rev. A. H. Lewis, D. D., of this city, preached in the First Baptist church, Elizabeth, Sunday.

Mrs. S. B. Hope of Third and Richmond streets has gone to Long Island City for a few day's visit with her daughters.

Miss Lizzie Dolliver, of Frankfort, N. J., is spending the holidays with Mr. and Mrs. G. Q. Dolliver, of Manning avenue.

Miss Carrie E. Streuli entertained her friends and acquaintances at her residence on Prospect avenue, Thursday evening.

Nathaniel P. Kelley, an old resident of New Brooklyn, died on Saturday from heart failure. The deceased was in the 80th year of his age.

Dr. Bushmore states, there has been no increase of scarlatina at the Children's Home, and that the single patient is now decidedly convalescent.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Gilbert will give a reception at their home on West Eighth street, Thursday evening, January 9, from eight until eleven.

With the dawning of the new year, a little son has come to gladden the hearts of Mr. and Mrs. John B. Gable, and give them many "Happy New Years."

Captain Harvey Doane of Halifax, Nova Scotia, is visiting Captain Benjamin Doane of LaGrande avenue. Mr. Doane is a retired sea captain and is now on his way to Europe.

At a meeting of the New Jersey Society Sons of the American Revolution held at Newark, Thursday, Col. Julian Scott, of this city, was elected a member. Gov. Green presided.

The New Brunswick Fredonian of Thursday says: "Mr. Samuel Hawksworth, formerly of this city, now of Plainfield, was in town yesterday visiting his numerous friends."

Mr. Samuel A. Wallace, who is connected with his brother in business, in Baltimore, has been spending the holidays with Mrs. Wallace's relatives at their home on West Fifth street.

Mr. Benjamin Hand conducted the devotional exercises in Warren Mission chapel, Sunday evening. The attendance was as usual very large, and much enthusiasm was manifested.

At the Christmas celebration of the Chimney Rock Sunday school, held on Christmas afternoon, Superintendent W. A. Coddington of this city was made the recipient of a handsome present.

The True American of Trenton, in its report of the State Teacher's Association meeting in that city, stated that among those on the platform was "the Vice President, Julia E. Buckley, of Plainfield."

Mrs. C. H. Farley of Harmony street, gave a children's party in honor of Master Freddie Emmons, on Thursday evening last. About twenty young people were present and amused themselves in various ways.

First Assistant Engineer Eugene A. Laine left the house, Sunday, where he has been confined for several days past suffering from la grippe, and was one of the most active workers at the John Chandler fire.

The Rev. A. G. VanAken, Grand Worthy Patriarch of the Sons of Temperance of New Brunswick, was presented with a handsome cake at the anniversary celebration of Howell Division of this city, on Friday night.

Letters received from Australia are full of good news regarding the renewed health of Dr. Chauncy M. Field. Those who have met him there, and he himself, enthusiastically quote his condition as "way above par."

The marriage of Edith, daughter of Mr. Charles B. Godfrey of New York, to Mr. Charles Livingston Hyde, of this city, will take place at the Church of the Heavenly Rest, 5th avenue and 45th street, New York, at noon on Monday, January 6.

Mrs. Susie McCann of Little Falls, New York, who has been visiting relatives in this city for the past two months, returned home on Saturday. She is a sister of Mrs. John Giles of Lake street, and had been absent from this city for the past eleven years.

The wedding of Mr. George Edgar Vincent, only son of Bishop John H. Vincent, to Miss Mary Louise Palmer, daughter of Mr. Henry W. Palmer of Wilkesbarre, will take place at St. Stephen's church, that city, Wednesday evening of next week, at seven o'clock.

Thomas H. Keller, of this city, representing the Eastern and Western teams that are to make a tour of the country in trapshooting contests, is in Dayton, O., to arrange for the opening match of the series that is to be shot on the Dayton Gun Club grounds, Jan. 27 next.

Grace, the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Caleb Dickinson, of North Plainfield, died Thursday afternoon, aged two months and five days. The funeral took place from the house on Vine street, Saturday afternoon at one o'clock. This is the third child the parents have lost.

The first number of Walter Irving Clarke's monthly magazine, "Buzz," is out and gives great promise for the future. Bill Nye contributes an "essay," and of the other good things a story by Mr. Clarke himself is not the least commendable. The cover is designed by George Wharton Edwards.

Many hundred of the best people of this city, New York and elsewhere, were present at the reception given by Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Shepard and Miss Shepard, at their home, "The Gables," Monday. Dancing followed in the spacious halls, with music by Bernstein himself and his orchestra located in the gallery above. The supper was served by Sherry.

A meeting of the heirs of Jacob Roll, the Hollander, who died somewhere in the seventeenth century, was held at Elizabeth, Saturday, Dec. 28. They claim by newly discovered deeds property valued at $6,000,000, near Schenectady, N. Y. Among the heirs who live in this city, is the wife of Postmaster Force, and the wife of James H. Force, the Hotel proprietor.

The principal features of Sunday night's service of song in the Crescent avenue church, were a duet by Miss Holmes and Mr. Elmer Runyon, Gounod's "The Christ is Born"; a solo, Van de Water's "Night of Nights," by Mrs. J. K. Myers; and the repetition of Barnby's "Holy Night," that was so favorably given at the morning service, by Mrs. Myers, Miss Holmes, Mr. Runyon and Mr. Gavett.

The growth of the Rev. A. V. V. Raymond's parish in Albany, has necessitated the engagement of an assistant pastor. That position was offered Secretary J. H. Manning, of the Y. M. C. A., but he declined the flattering and tempting offer. This will be welcome news to the Directors of the Y. M. C. A., as well as an entire surprise as the matter has been kept entirely secret by both the principal parties concerned.

The relatives and many friends of the late B. T. Mulford attended the funeral on Sunday afternoon from 147 Somerset street. The services were conducted by the Rev. Mr. Marsden, of Hoboken, a former pastor of the Congregational church in this city, and warm friend and spiritual adviser of Mr. Mulford. His remarks were very impressive and comforting to the mourners and friends. Interment was made in the Presbyterian cemetery, four sons-in-law and two grandsons acting as pall-bearers.

Mrs. J. Kirtland Myers tendered her lady choir associates an informal luncheon at her home Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. S. B. G. Willet of Sucasunny, N. J., spent Sunday and Monday with friends in the Borough.

Mr. J. B. Cleaver has been confined to his home in North Plainfield for a few days past suffering from a severe cold.

Mr. Stephen McIntyre of North avenue, was the recipient of a New Year's gift on Sunday, in the shape of an eleven pound h-iress.

The two lady operators in the telephone office, each received a handsome gift from Mrs. C. W. Case of Rockview avenue, North Plainfield.

J. H. Willet, proprietor of the Union House, Califon, N. J., with his wife and daughter, Miss Mabel, spent a few days with friends in North Plainfield.

Dr. Berg of this city was summoned to New Germantown, N. J., on Sunday to attend a female patient who was suffering from the effects of a broken hip.

Miss Smith of Asbury Park, a guest of Miss Chandler whose home was burned on Sunday morning, also lost all the clothing she had with her except such as she was wearing.

A masked party was tendered to Mr. and Mrs. I. H. Boehm, at their West Front street home, last evening. About fifty young people were present, and enjoyed an evening of uninterrupted pleasure.

The second dance this season of the Tuesday Evening Club, was held last evening at the home of Miss May Sandford. It was, if possible, even more enjoyable than any previous affair of the kind in the Club's existence.

The Rev. C. E. Dunn, of Albany, who with his family has been spending the holidays at the home of his father in this city, preached on Sunday morning and evening in the pulpit of his college mate, the Rev. Mr. Green of Cranford.

Mrs. John Shotwell, of Duluth, Minn., daughter of Mr. Andrew Vanderbeek, assisted with the music in Reform Hall, Sunday evening. Her fine voice was a great treat to those present, and her services were thoroughly appreciated by those officially interested.

The death is announced of Carl Morris, which occurred at his home in Montclair, N. J., on Sunday. The deceased was formerly a resident of this city, but a year or so ago he went to Buffalo, N. Y., where he was recently taken ill, and was obliged to return to Montclair. The funeral took place today.

Colonel Heppenheimer, who will be elected Speaker of the House of Assembly at Trenton, this Winter, is the only member who is beginning a service of four consecutive years. Ex-Judge Ulrich, of this city, however, is starting on his third year and will reach Heppenheimer's record next term.

Today begins the 30th year of Mr. C. Potter, Jr's business career as a maker of presses and printing machinery. The growth of the establishment and its output has been marvelous, and emphatically evidences the patience, shrewdness and indomitable will of the Company's head. Mr. Potter is a model example of a self-made man.

The marriage of Mr. Charles L. McBride, of this city, and Miss Henrietta Ambler, took place at the home of the bride's father, Mr. Henry W. Ambler, 24 State street, Sing Sing, N. Y., yesterday afternoon. After a brief wedding tour Mr. and Mrs. McBride will make their home in Plainfield. Mr. McBride is a member of the civil service at Reynold's pharmacy.

A pretty home wedding took place yesterday afternoon at the residence of the bride's parents in Washingtonville, where Mr. Walter Titus and Miss Emma Bilyeu were joined in marriage by the Rev. Cornelius Schenck in the presence of a host of friends of all concerned. Miss Fanny Titus, sister of groom, acted as bridesmaid, while Mr. Albert Titus was the groom's best man.

Martin Thorn's North avenue friends have heard several times from him during his journey Westward. Too much praise cannot be given his piscatorial friend of Cranford, who furnished him with a medical companion in the shape of a bottle of seven-year-old apple jack as a needed "transfer" and escape from the changeable water of the West. Mr. Thorn is due today at Santa Barbara.

CHRISTMAS AT TRINITY REFORMED CHURCH.

Music, Addresses, and Gifts by Santa Claus Himself.

The Christmas festival held in Trinity Reformed church, Friday evening, for the enjoyment of the teachers and others of the old folks, as well as the scholars, was largely attended. Superintendent E. R. Anthony was unable to be present on account of illness, and sent his best wishes by letter to the school.

The pastor, the Rev. Mr. Schenck, presided. Mr. Horace J. Martin lead the singing, and Mr. A. L. Titsworth accompanied on the organ. The programme opened with, "Glory to God in the Highest," and closed with "Coronation." The pastor offered prayer, made a short talk, and pronounced the benediction.

Editor Wm. J. Leonard of the Central Times, delivered an address bearing on Selfishness and Self Sacrifice, that was well received. The Masters Eddie and Robbie Clark sang a pleasing duett. After all this Santa Claus, impersonated by Mr. Horace Martin, came in the front door passed up the centre aisle and addressed the children from the platform. He closed his talk with a vocal solo, "Santa Claus" which was followed by a general distribution of gifts.

THE FIRST BAPTISTS' ENTERTAINMENT.

An Unusually Pleasing Programme—Santa Was Also There.

The lecture room of the First Baptist church was crowded Friday evening upon the occasion of the Sunday school's Christmas festival. Superintendent Rufus K. Case presided and a very pleasing programme was rendered. There was a telephone put in connection with his most important Highness, Mr. S. Claus, and during the evening he was heard from, much to the little ones' delight, as on his way to the corner of Front and Grove streets.

The programme entire was as follows:

Piano solo—Miss Josie Compton.
Vocal solo, selected—Mrs. Mosher.
Recitation, "Little Jerry"—Willie Thiers.
Song, selected—Four little girls and two boys.
Song—Gracie Elliot.
Song—Four little girls.
Solo—Mrs. Mosher.
Recitation—Lois Randolph.
Song—E. T. Barnes.

Santa Claus with a voice and figure much resembling Mr. Harold Serrell, came in through one of the windows at the close of the programme, and presented dolls, candies and other nice things to all the scholars.

La Grippe Among the Carriers.

Postmaster Yard, of Trenton, notifies the citizens that owing to one-fourth of his carriers being down with the grip, persons living on the outskirts of the city would probably receive but one mail delivery daily until the carriers recovered.

Plainfield has so far been more fortunate. Postmaster Force states that but one of his carriers has yet succumbed. Should more be compelled to give up, the number of deliveries may be lessened for a few days. Two substitutes, however, Adam Blair and William VanWinkle, have been appointed.

OBITUARY.

B. T. MULFORD.

Mr. B. T. Mulford died at his home, 147 Somerset street, North Plainfield, Thursday. Mr. Mulford was born at Pottersville, N. J., March 28, 1808, and was married in 1833 to Margaret A. Todd, of Bedminster, N. J. He came to Plainfield from Chester, N. J., in 1852, and followed his trade of mason and builder. Among some of the buildings he erected now standing are the City Hotel, Pope's store, Front and Somerset streets, Stephenson's building, Laing's Hall, the Somerset House, Washington Rock Hotel, and First Presbyterian church on Front street, now replaced by the new edifice; he also worked on the oldest First Presbyterian church of all, years ago, when a young man learning his trade, and many large private residences.

He retired from business about fourteen years ago and has since resided with his daughter, Mrs. Andrew Lufkins. His wife died in June, 1875. He leaves a family of seven children, five daughters and two sons: Mrs. Elizabeth Chapin, Mrs. J. B. Hurlburt, Mrs. J. T. Case, Mrs. A. Lufkins, Mrs. L. A. Hummer, Mr. M. T. Mulford and Mr. L. B. Mulford, residents of this city and the borough. During his life he made many warm friends who will deeply mourn his loss. A kind and loving father, he will long live in the memory of his children. The funeral took place from his late residence, 147 Somerset street, at 2:30 P. M., on Sunday.

HOLY CROSS SUNDAY SCHOOL FESTIVAL.

The Entertainment and Those Who Were Prominent in its Success.

The Christmas festival of the Holy Cross Sunday school was held in the church, Thursday. The school, preceded by the choir, entered the church at 7:30 o'clock and took their seats in the centre aisle. A short service followed after which the rector, Rev. T. Logan Murphy made a few appropriate remarks and the Christmas gifts were distributed by Superintendent H. R. Phillips.

An offering was then taken for the Children's Home which netted twenty-one dollars for that institution. Mr. Frank S. Browne, on behalf of the teachers of the school, presented Superintendent Phillips with an elegant standing lamp. A recessional carol was then sung and the school returned to their rooms.

All the handsome decorations which graced the church on Christmas day remained, and to these were added two monster evergreen trees, each over twenty feet in height. These were furnished with countless bright colored ornaments, and lightened up by powerful reflectors, the effect being a most striking and delightful one.

The singing of the carols by the choir and school was hearty and beautiful, for which result much credit is due to Choir-master Charles W. Kellogg, who trained the school for the occasion.

FESTIVAL OF CONGREGATIONAL SCHOLARS.

A Fine Programme of Music and Recitations and a Present to the Pastor.

Christmas was pleasingly celebrated by the Congregational Sunday school, Thursday. A carol service issued by the Congregational Publishing Society of Boston, and entitled "Coronation of Jesus, King of Kings," was used. Several young misses and lads of the school gave recitations in a manner that was very creditable to themselves and also to those who had so carefully drilled them.

A Christmas sermon was called for, and much to the pastor's relief, a young lady stepped forward and delivered one. It was said that she preached as well as the minister. Superintendent Whiton was asked to give an address, but as the school voted for a story instead he told impressively the "Legend of Ofero."

The pastor, the Rev. C. L. Goodrich made a few remarks and presented a prize to Master Philip Suffern, who had proved himself the best recruiting officer in the school during the past year. Mr. Whiton in behalf of the pastor's class, then presented Mr. Goodrich with an elegant edition of Hawthorne's Marble Faun. Last but not least, candy and oranges, which had been piled upon the platform and beneath the large and prettily trimmed tree, were distributed to the members of the school.

Those who varied the programme of music with entertaining recitations, and their subjects, were: "The Night After Christmas," Ernest Suffern; "The Christmas Tree," Julia Belknap; "The Land of Nod," Clara Van Fleet; "Shoes and Stockings," Fred Overton; "Visiting Santa Claus," Grace Overton. Miss Johnson also recited a pleasing selection. To Mrs. B. T. Barnes is due most all of the credit for the great success of the musical portion of the affair which was the greater part of the evening's festival.

CHRISTMAS FESTIVITIES.

Interesting Programmes of Music, Recitations, Etc., Rendered by the Various Sunday Schools, Last Evening—A Host of Good Things for the Children.

Several of the Sunday schools of this city held their Christmas festivals on Thursday, and in each instance the exercises were of a special nature. At the Park avenue Baptist Church, Prof. Chase of Brooklyn, the illusionist, entertained the scholars of the school in an agreeable manner, occupying almost the entire evening with his sleight-of-hand performances. On Sunday afternoon the school held special Christmas services and on Sunday evening, Dr. Lowry's "Monarch in the Manger" was rendered.

HOPE CHAPEL.

At Hope Chapel, Superintendent Squires presided, and Mr. Fred Andrews led the singing. The programme included singing by the school, recitations by members of the infant class, and the distribution of dolls and toys to the younger members of the school. Candy and oranges were provided in abundance for all of the scholars. Mr. Benjamin Hand performed the part of Santa Claus in a highly creditable manner.

MT. OLIVE BAPTIST.

The Sunday school of the above named church held its Christmas festival in the lecture room, on Thursday, Mr. S. B. Joseph presiding. Everything passed off smoothly, and especially noteworthy was the singing by the school, led by Mr. A. M. Vanderbeek. Mrs. Shotwell presided at the organ: Following is the programme:

Singing......School
Prayer......By the Pastor
Singing......School
Recitation......Miss [illegible]
Solo, by request......Miss Shotwell
Recitation......Master [illegible] Mitchell
Singing, (selected)......Seven Little Girls

The presentation of toys and the serving of iced cream and candies brought the entertainment to a close.

Those Absconding Merchants of North Avenue.

Chief Carey has traced the goods removed from their store on North avenue, by Brown & Co., to an auction place in New York.

The goods were obtained through Samuel Drieir, the pawnbroker at the corner of Front street and Madison avenue. He is out by the transaction just $1,307.50, of which $800 was borrowed money. Two New York detectives have been engaged to catch the absconding merchants if possible.

A PLAINFIELD LODGE INSTITUTED.

Union, No. 48 of New Jersey, Ancient Order United Workmen.

The above named lodge was launched upon the sea of its fraternity Thursday, under the most favorable circumstances. Through the courtesy of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., who opened the doors of their hall, those interested were thus aided to institute their lodge in one of the finest lodge rooms in the city. Consequently the members of Union Lodge, No. 48, are very grateful and the favor will not be forgotten.

The Grand Master Workman, John W. Diefendorf, of Wilmington, Del., called the meeting to order and was assisted by the following Grand Lodge officers and prominent members of the Order in the services of institution: Grand Overseer Wm. B. Foulk, of Wilmington, Del.; Geo. Norris, Chairman of Committee on Laws, Jersey City; E. H. Colyer, Master Workman of Newark Lodge, No. 21, Newark; Theodore Schultz, Success Lodge, No. 11, of Newark; Master Workman Bennett of Elizabeth, No. 29; J. V. F. Ryerson, of Raritan No. 6, of New Brunswick, and now one of our prominent citizens; and a number of other visiting brethren.

Over fifty names were appended to the charter list, forty-two of whom had passed the examination and been approved. The following named officers who were elected to preside over this lodge for its first term, is sufficient guarantee to the citizens of Plainfield of its stability, and the character of those who compose this lodge:

Past Master Workman—Norman C. Magee.
Master Workman—Salmon G. Baker.
Foreman—W. A. Westphal.
Overseer—Louis E. Blackford.
Recorder—E. A. Thorne.
Financier—J. C. Pierson, Jr.
Receiver—Wm. E. Brokaw.
Guide—Wm. E. Northup.
Inside Watchman—Robt. W. Fulton.
Outside Watchman—Geo. W. Clark
Medical Examiner—O. L. Jenkins, M. D.
Trustees—L. M. French, 3 years.
Chas. H. Randolph, 2 years.
S. C. Shann, 1 year.
Rep. to Grand Lodge—Norman C. Magee.

By request of the lodge, the Grand Master Workman allowed the charter to remain open until Thursday of this week to allow those who could not possibly sign before to come in as charter members. This gives anyone who desires to join the chance to avail themselves of the low charter fee, but they must present themselves to Dr. Jenkins at once for examination. As the Doctor has been a member over six years, he can vouch for all statements made by the Grand Master or published in THE PRESS, as can also Mr. Ryerson, who has been in eight years.

After next meeting THE PRESS will publish a full list of the charter members. The lodge adjourned to meet at the same place, Thursday evening, Jan. 2, 1890, at 8 o'clock sharp.

PROVING THEIR APPRECIATION.

Presentation by Holy Cross Choir Guild.

Before the service in Holy Cross church on Christmas day, a meeting of Holy Cross Choir Guild was held at which a number of invited guests, including the members of St. Andrew's Guild, were present. The meeting was opened with prayer by the Rector, Rev. T. Logan Murphy.

President William H. Hardy briefly addressed the meeting and calling upon Mr. Charles W. Kellogg, the choirmaster, presented to Mrs. Kellogg through him, a handsome frame containing the photographs of the members of the Guild—nineteen in number. Mr. Kellogg was much surprised, and thanked the Guild most heartily for his wife. Following this a like frame was presented to Mrs. Chas. J. Taggart in appreciation of her untiring zeal and devotion in the interests of the choir. Mr. Kellogg then took the floor and, after a few words in which he expressed his thanks to all the choir for their good work during the past year and wished them all a Merry Christmas, he presented a book to each boy and a pair of kid gloves to each young man.

In making his presentation, President Hardy said: "Mr. and Mrs. Kellogg I am called upon to perform a very pleasant task this morning. We, the Choir Guild, would not forget that you gave very valuable assistance in getting up the entertainment that we think was such a great success, and your untiring efforts to make it such. I take great pleasure in presenting this token of esteem, hoping you will appreciate it, and accept it in the same feeling in which it is given, and when we are through singing in this choir, that we may all join that heavenly choir. Please accept this with a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year from the Choir Guild.

The President also took occasion to thank Mrs. Taggart for her untiring zeal and labor with the choir from its infancy, and also for her untiring efforts to make the entertainment a success.

A "SHAKSPEAREAN BEVY

Progressive Euchre Played by the Heroines and Heroes of Comedy and Tragedy.

A progressive euchre party was given last evening in the spacious parlors of Mr. A. E. Faber's residence on Rockview avenue, by the Shakspeare Club, a coterie of literary young ladies. Miss Della R. Storm was the hostess, and the affair was one of the most select and recherche of the season. The pretty blue stockings had invited just enough young men to make it real nice and sociable, and it is unnecessary to add that the young men enjoyed the literary exercises exceedingly.

Seldom are euchre tables graced by such assemblages. As one glanced over the gay party he was carried back in mind to the days of the bard of Avon—he could see before him the fair Rosalind, the sweet Ophelia, the dainty Imogen or the blushing Juliet, accompanied by their ideals the worthy Orlando, the heroic Hamlet, the haughty Leonatus and the festive Romeo. The way the young ladies played euchre did great credit to their Shakspearean researches. Handsome prizes went to the victorious literary ladies and appropriate "booby" prizes to the less enlightened young men. Refreshments were also gone through and the whole affair was an unqualified success.

Much praise is due to Mr. and Mrs. Faber, Miss Storm and the ladies of the club for the pleasure they bestowed. Prominent in the club are the Misses E. N. and Annie Hasbrouck, Bertha Mooney, Agnes Smith, Della Storm, Maggie Long, Emily Thompson, Annie Murphy, Ida Acken, Helen Warman, Daisy Mulholland and Grace Brown.

A Thief in the Club House.

Between six and seven o'clock of Wednesday evening, a thief is supposed to have entered the Crescent League club house through one of the windows opening into the bowling alley.

Some of the best of the bowling shoes, $3.50 out of the cash drawer, and a few bottles of soda water disappeared. The cash drawer was found locked, however, and some other money was left untouched in it.

Mr. Rice Sues Mr. Shotwell For $20,000

Wm. H. Shotwell was served Saturday with a summons in a suit for $20,000 damages, brought by R. W. Rice.

But what for does not appear, and THE PRESS was unable to discover. The suit is brought in the Supreme Court where Mr. Shotwell commenced suit against Mr. Rice for $10,000 a few days ago.

NETHERWOOD CRAVES ATTENTION.

Councilman-Elect Johnson and Spangenberg Nominated for the Street Committee.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—As your journal is ever ready to point out the shortcomings of the city's officials as it is to praise when occasion calls for it, I beg the privilege of a small space in the columns of your paper to be heard.

Will some one explain why the Street Commissioner has stopped work on South avenue after repairing the part that required it the least, and the section that was washed out by the heavy rains of the past Fall is left in an almost impassible condition. About a year ago the Street Commissioner acting under orders of the Street Committee, made an abortive attempt to put the said street in good shape for travel but signally failed in doing so.

I understand that South avenue from the Terrill road to Richmond street, has been taken out of the hands of the county. If such is the case, it is a great pity, as under the present management of Street Commissioner Angleman, there is but a slim chance of having a good road. I would like to see Councilman-elect Johnson placed on the Street Committee when the new Council convenes, as I think he is well qualified to look into matters concerning the streets, and is always in Plainfield during the day time and therefore would have a chance to show the Commissioner how to fix a macadamized road without using dirt or refuse from a foundry.

Mr. Spangenberg would be an excellent man also to place on the Street Committee as he manifests great interest in good streets. In a few weeks South avenue will be macadamized from Elizabeth to Plainfield and will be much traveled over and ought to be in as good shape as the part done by the county.

A LOVER OF GOOD ROADS.

An Evening Sociable

Was held at the residence of Mr. E. Ten Eyck on Centennial avenue, between New Market and Bound Brook Friday, at which there were present guests from Bound Brook, Dunellen, New Market and this city. Prof. France furnished the music, and dancing was indulged in until a late hour. The committee of arrangements consisted of Messrs. E. Ten Eyck, W. G. Giles and E. S. Schenck.

The German Children's Christmas.

One of the most enjoyable of all the Sunday school festivals this season, was that in the German Reformed chapel, the Rev. Mr. Koechli, pastor, on Christmas day. All those present were thoroughly pleased.

There was singing of Christmas songs and selected recitations from the Bible. The children had well learned their lessons and did much credit to their teachers. They were all rewarded with plenty of gifts.

Says His Child is Dead.

The public in general is notified to be on the lookout for an imposter who is alleged to be going about the city soliciting pecuniary assistance. The man invariably states that his three-year-old child died "last night" from croup, and that he is securing aid in order to give the child a decent burial. The man is single and his story is a hoax. Among those who have already been victimized are Postmaster Force and one of the letter carriers.

Gone But Not Forgotten.

Mr. Samuel Drieir, the pawnbroker of West Front street, who was swindled out of $1,800 by the absconding clothing firm of "I Brown & Bro." who suddenly took their departure from this city early on Christmas morning, received a telegram from one of the firm on Sunday. It read as follows:

"MONTREAL, Dec. 27th, 1889.
"To Samuel Drier;
"Am in Canada; going further; will write.

An Unprecedented Record.

The year which ended this week, says a New Brunswick paper, will go upon record as having the heaviest rainfalls of any in the memory of the present generation. Out of the 334 days up to Dec., 1st there were only 77 entirely clear days, while there were 87 entirely cloudy ones. On 136 of those days it rained hard and in that time there has fallen 73.71 inches or over six feet on the level. This is a remarkable amount of water. The greatest amount that fell in one day was 3.28 inches on July 30. This was when the big floods occurred all over this section of the country. The largest number of rainy days, however, was in September, when it poured down on 17 days, and the sun shone brightly through the whole of only three days. Last month almost came up to this record when there were 16 rainy days and 11 cloudy ones.

—A joint public installation of Winfield Scott Post No. 73, G. A. R., and the Woman's Relief Corps, No. 10, will be held in the post room on Tuesday evening, January 14. The open camp fire announced for Tuesday evening, has been indefinitely postponed.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always makes wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

AN AMUSICAL LAMENTATION.

A Choral Subscriber in Tedious Distress About His Clothes.

MR. EDITOR:—An Englishman, the World over, if in distress, writes to The Thunderer. A Plainfielder, in dis-dress, writes to THE PRESS. My "tale of woe" is this: I was asked to subscribe to the revivified Choral Society. Being a lover of good music I did so with pleasure. To the subsequent request for a check I responded with alacrity. Shortly afterward I received printed information as to where and when I could select my tickets, and down in the left hand corner of the circular, in what you printers call, I believe, "fat" letters, (but which made me feel extremely thin), was the announcement of "Evening Dress."

Now, Mr. Editor, doesn't this verge a little on what the learned limbs of the law call "ex post facto," to receive one's money and then to insert an obligation which was not previously "nominated in the bond?" My situation might be likened unto that of one of the aforesaid lawyers, who thought he had bought a full plot of ground, whereon to build his house, but found, forsooth, that he had only a half plot. Nay, my situation is worse, for having paid ten dollars, for instance, for my plot, must if "I's gwine to occupy de land," expend four or five times as much more to remove an obstruction, so to speak.

For be it known, Mr. Editor, that inasmuch as I am neither a gentleman nor a waiter, but simply a plain every-day American citizen, (a hewer of wood and a drawer of water, if you will), I am not the possessor of an evening dress.

Now, what am I going to do about it?

And, one more question, is the rejuvenated Choral Society, (which has done so much to endear itself in the hearts of all lovers of good music and which is such a resounding credit to Plainfield), a Society for the encouragement of music among all respectable classes? or is it a society for the encouragement of dress in one class and for the discouragement of the love of music among the

Indigestion

IS not only a distressing complaint, of itself, but, by causing the blood to become depraved and the system enfeebled, is the parent of innumerable maladies. That Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best cure for Indigestion, even when complicated with Liver Complaint, is proved by the following testimony from Mrs. Joseph Lake, of Brockway Centre, Mich.:—

"Liver complaint and indigestion made my life a burden and came near ending my existence. For more than four years I suffered untold agony, was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength to drag myself about. All kinds of food distressed me, and only the most delicate could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians treated me without giving relief. Nothing that I took seemed to do any permanent good until I commenced the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has produced wonderful results. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could see an improvement in my condition. My appetite began to return and with it came the ability to digest all the food taken, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of faithful attention to your directions, I found myself a well woman, able to attend to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life."

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT ?

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road, magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reason it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to the Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnepeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan, and the journey to the Pacific Coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. PARIS' BILLIARD SCHOOL.

It Is In an Ill-Ventilated Resort in a Dingy Parisian Alley.

Sporting Life in France—A Talk With a Wisconsin Boy Who is One of Vignaux's Pupils—A Daily Game Between Celebrated Professionals.

[illegible]

In one sense the French know nothing of sport. In another they are passionately devoted to it. They have no national game, no athletic clubs or tournaments, yet sport is one of the few English words adopted directly and placed with its various derivatives in the vocabulary of everyday French. "Sport" in French applies almost exclusively to horse racing, so nearly that one occasional exception is not worth noting. Every little cafe is an agency, or the headquarters of an agent for the [illegible] as the [illegible] are many of the barber shops, and in some places a street corner, with a doorway convenient in case of rain, answers the purpose of the bookmaker and his patrons. At every agency, whether it be cafe, corner or barbershop, the man with the book is expected daily at a certain hour, and his customers are always on hand. They comprise every order of human being, women by no means excepted. Those who have time and money to spend in going to see the races reserve their bets until they meet the bookmakers at the course. The vast majority find their diversion and their daily hope in the brief call at the cafe where the reports of yesterday's events are posted, in the careful weighing of probabilities and the placing of their money. If they were successful yesterday they also experience the satisfaction of cashing their tickets.

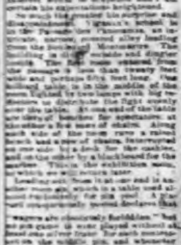
It cannot be that all the petty gamblers win, or that all can afford a daily outlay of even five francs, but so far as I have been able to observe, the same faces are at the same cafes every day when the agent sits down over his coffee and cognac to register the bets. It is no uncommon thing to see a woman with a huckster's cart stop pushing and bawling her wares long enough to enter what we would call in New York a saloon, here "cafe," and place five francs on a favorite runner, or the wife of the proprietor of the same cafe come from behind the bar during a lull in business to back or oppose her husband's play; or two or three kits of tools stowed under tables while their owners are knitting their brows over records and announcements. Where these get their money, or what proportion of it goes annually to swell the purses of the bookmakers, we do not know and cannot surmise. It is evident simply that such sport as the French have partakes very largely of gaming.

These things reflected, all sports in France might be dismissed from consideration were it not for billiards. No account is taken, of course, of the games of the green table, but the mention of billiards tempts one to admit that the French have a national game; but they can hardly lay claim to it inasmuch as it was invented long before France was known and has since become universally cultivated. Billiards, however, is cultivated more systematically in France than elsewhere, and there are doubtless a greater number of good players here than in any other country; yet the atmosphere of gaming is as dense about this game as it is about the race track, and in this as in other things the French appear to think first of the wager and second of the game.



BETTING ON THE MATCH.

One of the most interesting institutions in Paris is the school of billiards kept by the great Vignaux. Any lover of the game who should come here would naturally inquire for Vignaux's hall. He would naturally expect to be directed to a large, elegantly appointed room, containing many tables, all as magnificent and attractive, at least, as similar places in America, kept by such noted players as Slosson, Schaefer, and Daly. If incidentally to his inquiries he should hear of the Vignaux school, his interest would be deepened and I am certain his expectations heightened.

So much the greater his surprise and disappointment. Vignaux's school is in the Passage des Panoramas, an intricate, narrow, covered alley leading from the boulevard Montmartre. The building is dingy outside and dingier inside. The first room entered from the passage is less than twenty feet wide and perhaps fifty feet long. One billiard table is in the middle of the room lighted by two lamps with big reflectors to distribute the light evenly over the table. At one end of the table are tiers of benches for spectators; at the other a few rows of chairs. Along each side of the room runs a raised bench and a row of chairs, interrupted on one side by a desk for the cashier, and on the other by a blackboard for the marker. This is the exhibition room, to which we will return later.

Leading off from it at one end is another room, in which is a table used almost exclusively for [illegible] pool. A placard conspicuously posted declares that "wagers are absolutely forbidden," but no pin game is ever played without at least one silver franc for each contestant on the middle pin, and whenever that pin is knocked over in any but the reliable way, the unfortunate player adds another franc to the pile. I saw one game between two good players that passed with so many misadventures that the original two francs on the pin had been increased to twenty before they fell from a proper stroke and were pocketed by the player.

A narrow, dirty stairway winds from this room to the upper floor of the school. An attendant conducted me up this on the occasion of my first visit when I had called with a friend to play a game in Vignaux's place. I [illegible] that here at least something might be found corresponding to the comfort and elegance which are combined in the average American hall. But the upper floor consisted of two small rooms, each just large enough for one table, two chairs, a cue rack and a small stand for the inevitable coffee, brandy or absinthe that accompanies Paris diversion. I do not recall that the dull walls were graced with a single picture, and I am certain that the chairs were not cushioned. The table and implements were fairly good.

And this comprises the whole of the business plant of the most expert billiard player in France. If there are other rooms in the institution they are not for billiards. Some others, in fact, are needed, judging from the public patronage. The upper rooms are in so slight demand from casual players that I doubt seriously whether the income derived from them would be considered profitable by an American.

Vignaux employs several of the best billiard players in France. It is their business to play against each other during the hours just mentioned. The public knows that the playing will be of a high order and that it will be strictly honest. None of these hired experts could afford to play other than his best, for the patrons would speedily discover it, refuse to back his game, and then his occupation would be gone. These games are played in the room first described. When the contestants have been appointed by the manager, the style of game decided and the odds ascertained, for it is seldom that players are evenly matched, the spectators crowd about the table to make their bets. The players stand at either end of the table, each with a book in hand to register the bets laid on himself and to collect the money. After all who wish to bet have deposited their money and named their choice, the books are closed [illegible] on the cashier's desk. The game then proceeds, and at the end the backers of the winner receive their money less twenty per cent. This amount is divided for division equally between the players. It sounds like a heavy tax, but no admission is charged and the [illegible] equipment, refreshments are served at ordinary prices. Still, if any American sport feels that he would object to laying fifty francs for the sake of winning thirty in a game where the chances had been as evenly adjusted as the handicap of odds could effect that, I shall offer no arguments against his attitude.

The games, as I have said, are of a very high order, and it would naturally be thought that all pains would be taken to secure the best conditions for play. The table is as good as possible. It is thoroughly renovated at intervals of a few days. The players, of course, use their own cues, and good balls are provided; but the atmosphere is so exceedingly bad that the balls must deteriorate rapidly. All who wish to—and that means nearly everybody, smoke constantly, and the arrangement of the windows and doors, opening for the most part into covered areas or passages, would [not] give proper ventilation; even with the most brilliant play in progress it is difficult to keep the eyes open.

Among Vignaux's employees this winter and autumn was Mr. Eugene Carter, the remarkably expert cushion player from Wisconsin. He has been in receipt of a good salary and plenty of distinction, but he has not experienced unalloyed happiness.

"I can't do myself justice here," he explained; "the atmosphere is so bad that both balls and cushions get out of order quickly, so that fine playing is almost out of the question. I feel as if I were using sledge-hammers half the time. Besides that I have the most dreadful 'off' days. It's reasonable enough, for if the air has an effect on ivory that the player can distinguish, why shouldn't it affect the player himself? That I might pass without complaint if it were not for the fact that my experience here is not teaching me anything. I cannot improve under such conditions, and besides, one of the chief inducements under which I came here was that I should have the privilege of playing with Vignaux. I beat him at cushion caroms several times and then he went off into the country [illegible] rather than take any more defeats from an outsider. The other players, while magnificent billiardists, are excessively jealous and hard to get on with. I have to play all sorts of games at all hours every day and be in call all the time whether I am to appear or not."

The Vignaux "school" is not entirely misnamed. The salaried experts give lessons in the morning to ambitious amateurs, using generally the tables in the upper rooms. From these lessons and their percentage on the bets laid they make from $12 to $15 daily the year around. It would seem that Vignaux's income from the establishment must depend largely upon the sale of drinks, but in addition to this he does a business in billiard implements and repairs.

Two small points to conclude with. There are no buttons on a wire to count with here; the score is kept either by turning a knob at the side of the table which registers the score on a dial somewhat like a street car conductor's punch, or by marking with chalk on a [illegible] blackboard kept in the rail.

RURAL MINISTER—"None of the brethren whose duty it is to pass the plates are here to-day. Would you object to taking up the collection?" Modest Worshiper—"I never passed the plate in church in my life, and I'm afraid I'd be rather awkward." Rural Minister—"Oh, never mind about that. It won't be noticed. Most of my congregation become absorbed in their hymn-books about the time the plate goes round."

BLACK (an expert stenographer)—"Say, Green, the boy from the Journal office is here after the transcript of that temperance lecture. Is it most finished?" Green (a novice)—"All but a short scrawl in about the middle of it, and I can't make out from my notes what it is." Black—"Just insert 'great applause' and let it go." Green acts upon the suggestion, and the lecture is sent to the Journal office for publication with the doctored part reading: "Friends, I will detain you but a few moments longer." [Great applause.]

As a Western paper significantly states it: "The commerce of Lake Superior, amounting to over $100,000,000 annually, may be said to hang by a thread, and that thread is the old Soo canal. An accident to that little waterway paralyzes the business of the whole lake."

A RAMIE company, with a capital of $[illegible], has been organized at Philadelphia, to encourage the cultivation of ramie and to build machines for the decortication of the fiber on the plantations, and establish mills to bleach and spin the product. It promises to be a great success, and will bring a new and valuable source of revenue to farmers [illegible].

DR. TALMAGE AT BEYROUT

HIS CHRISTMAS TIME SERMON ON CHRIST'S EARTHLY KINGDOM.

[illegible] Suggestions of the Day and Place—"The Sky Anthem"—The Armies of the New Kingdom Were Not as Armies of [illegible].

BEYROUT, Dec. 25.—The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., of Brooklyn, who is here with his party, preached to-day to a group of [illegible] "The Sky Anthem." His text was Luke ii, 14: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men;" and [illegible] he delivered the following discourse:

At last I have what I longed for, a Christmas [illegible] Holy Land. This is the time of year that Christ [illegible]. He was a Demi-[illegible] [illegible]

[illegible]

DIGNITY IN POVERTY.

My subject, in the first place, impresses me with the fact that indigence is not always significant of degradation. When princes are born, [illegible] announce it, and cannon thunder it, and flags wave it, and illuminations set cities on fire with the tidings. Some of us in England or America remember the time of rejoicing when the Prince of Wales was born. You can remember the gladness throughout Christendom at the nativity in the palace at Madrid. But when our glorious Prince was born there was no rejoicing on earth. Poor and growing poorer, yet the heavenly recognition that Christmas night shows the truth of the proposition that indigence is not always significant of degradation.

In all ages there have been great hearts throbbing under rags, tender sympathies under rough exterior, gold in the quartz, Parian marble in the quarry, and in every stable of privation wonders of excellence that have heard the joy of the heavenly host. All the great deliverers of literature and of our times were born in homes without affluence, and from their own privation learned to speak and fight for the oppressed. Many a man has held up his pine knot light from the wilderness until all nations and generations have seen it, and off of his hard crust of poverty has broken the bread of knowledge and religion for the starving millions of the race. Poetry, and science, and literature, and commerce, and laws, and constitutions, and liberty, like Christ, were born in a manger. All the great thoughts which have decided the destiny of nations started in obscure corners, and had Herods who wanted to slay them, and Iscariots who betrayed them, and rabbles that crucified them, and sepulchers that confined them until they burst forth in glorious resurrection. Strong character, like the rhododendron, is an Alpine plant that grows fastest in the storm. Men are like wheat, worth all the more for being flailed. Some of the most useful people would never have come to position of usefulness had they not been ground and pounded and hammered in the foundry of disaster. When I see Moses coming up from the ark of bulrushes to be the greatest lawgiver of the ages, and Amos from tending the herds to make Israel tremble with his prophecies, and David from the sheep cote to sway the poet's pen and the king's scepter, and Peter from the fishing net to be the great preacher at the Pentecost, I find proof of the truth of my proposition that indigence is not always significant of degradation.

My subject also impresses me with the thought that it is while at our useful occupations that we have the divine manifestations. Had those shepherds gone that night into Bethlehem, and risked their flocks among the wolves, they would not have heard the song of the angels. In other words, that man sees most of God and heaven who minds his own business. We all have our posts of duty, and, standing there, God appears to us. We are all shepherds or shepherdesses, and we have our flocks of cares and annoyances and anxieties, and we must tend them.

"DILIGENT IN BUSINESS, FERVENT IN SPIRIT."

We sometimes hear very good people say: "If I had a month or a year or two to do nothing but attend to religious things, I would be a great deal better than I am now." You are mistaken. Generally the best people are the busy people. Elisha was plowing in the field when the prophetic mantle fell on him. Matthew was attending to his custom house duties when Christ commanded him to follow. James and John were mending their nets when Christ called them to be fishers of men. Had they been snoring in the sun Christ would not have called their indolence into the apostleship. Gideon was at work with the flail on the threshing floor when he saw the angel. Saul was with great fatigue hunting up the lost asses when he found the crown of Israel. The prodigal son would never have reformed and wanted to have returned to his father's house if he had not first gone into business, though it was swine feeding. Not once out of a hundred times will a lazy man become a Christian. Those who have nothing to do are in very unfavorable circumstances for the receiving of divine manifestations. It is not when you are in idleness, but when you are like the Bethlehem shepherds, watching your flocks, that the glory descends and there is joy among the angels of God over your soul penitent and forgiven.

My subject also strikes at the delusion that the religion of Christ is dolorous and grief infusing. The music that broke through the midnight heavens was not a dirge, but an anthem. It shook joy over the hills. It not only dropped upon the shepherds, but it sprang upward among the thrones. The robe of a Saviour's righteousness is not black. The Christian life is not made up of weeping and cross bearing and war waging. Through the revelation of that Christmas night I find that religion is not a groan but a song. In a world of sin and sickness and sepulchers, we must have trouble, but in the darkest night the heavens part with angelic song. You may, like Paul, be shipwrecked, but I exhort you to be of good cheer, for you shall all escape safe to the land. Religion does not show itself in the elongation of the face and the cut of the garb. The Pharisee who puts his religion into his phylactery has none left for his heart. Fretfulness and complaining do not belong to the family of Christian graces which move into the heart when the devil moves out. Christianity does not frown upon amusements and recreations. It is not [illegible], it is not a sloven, it [illegible] laughter, it [illegible] light, it delights in art. Among the happy, it is the happiest. It is just as much at home on the playground as it is in the church. It is just as graceful in the charade as it is in the psalm book. It sings just as well in the flowery garden as it prays in the [illegible]. Christ died that we might live. Christ wailed that we might smile. Christ wept that we might laugh.

Again, my subject impresses me with the fact that glorious endings sometimes have very humble beginnings. The straw pallet was the starting point, but the shout in the midnight sky revealed what would be the glorious consummation. Christ on Mary's lap, Christ on the throne of universal dominion—what an humble starting! what a glorious ending! Grace begins on a small scale in the heart. You see only men as trees walking. The grace of God in the heart is a feeble spark, and Christ has to keep both hands over it lest it be blown out. What an humble beginning! But look at that same man when he has entered heaven. No crown able to express his royalty. No palace able to express his wealth. No scepter able to express his power and his dominion. Drinking from the fountain that drips from the everlasting Rock. Among the harpers harping with their harps. On a sea of glass mingled with fire. Before the throne of God, to go no more out forever. The spark of grace, that Christ had to keep both hands over lest it come to extinction, having flamed up into honor and glory and immortality. What humble starting! What glorious consummation!

"AS A GRAIN OF MUSTARD SEED."

The New Testament church was on a small scale. Fishermen watched it. Against the uprising walls crashed infernal enginery. The world and anathema. Ten thousand people rejoiced at every seeming defeat, and said: "Aha! aha! so we would have it." Martyrs on fire cried: "How long, O Lord, how long?" Very humble starting, but see the difference of the consummation when Christ with his almighty arm has struck off the last chain of human bondage and Himalaya shall be Mount Zion, and Pyrenees, Moriah, and oceans the walking place of him who trod the wave cliffs of stormed Tiberias; and island shall call to island, sea to sea, continent to continent, and the song of the world's redemption rising, the hosannas like a great [illegible] shall strike back the shout of salvation to the skies until it rebounds again to the throne of God; and all heaven rising on their thrones, beat time with their scepters. Oh, what an humble beginning! What a glorious ending! Throne linked to a manger, heavenly mansions to a stable.

My subject also impresses me with the effect of Christ's mission upward and downward. Glory to God, peace to man. When God sent his Son into the world angels discovered something new in God, something they had never seen before. Not power, not wisdom, not love. They knew all that before. But when God sent his Son into this world then the angels saw the spirit of self denial in God, the spirit of self sacrifice in God. It is easier [illegible] the God who would not allow the most insignificant angel in heaven to be hurt—give up his Son, his Son, his only, only Son, they saw something that they had never thought of before, and I do not wonder that when Christ started out on that pilgrimage the angels in heaven clapped their wings in triumph and called on all the hosts of heaven to help them celebrate it, and sang so loud that the Bethlehem shepherds heard it: "Glory to God in the highest."

But it was also to be a mission of peace to man. [illegible]

[illegible]

If all the blood that has been shed in battle could be gathered together it would upbear a navy. The [illegible] earth has its echo in the butcheries of all ages. Edmund Burke, who gave no wild statistics, said that there had been spent in slaughter thirty-five thousand millions of dollars, or what would be equal to that; but he had not seen into our times, when in our own day, in America, we expended three thousand millions of dollars in civil war.

ARMIES OF THE PRINCE OF PEACE.

Oh, if we could now take our position on some high point and see the world's armies march past! What a spectacle it would be! There go the hosts of Israel through a [illegible] of Red sea—one of water, the rest of blood. There go Cyrus and his army, with infuriate yell rejoicing over the fall of the gates of Babylon. There goes Alexander leading forth his hosts and conquering all the world but himself, the earth reeling with the battle crash of Arbela and Persepolis. There goes Ferdinand Cortez, leaving his butchered enemies on the table lands once fragrant with vanilla and covered over with groves of flowering cacao. There goes the great Frenchman, leading his army down through Egypt like one of its plagues, and up through Russia, like one of its own icy blasts. Yonder is the grave trench under the shadow of Sebastopol. There are the ruins of Delhi and Allahabad, and yonder are the inhuman Sepoys and the brave regiments under Havelock avenging the insulted flag of Britain; while cut right through the heart of my native land is a trench in which there lie one million northern and southern dead. Oh, the tears! Oh, the blood! Oh, the long marches! Oh, the hospital wounds! Oh, the martyrdom! Oh, the death! But brighter than the light which flashed on all these swords, and shields and musketry is the light that fell on Bethlehem, and louder than the bray of the trumpets, and the neighing of the chargers, and the crash of the walls, and the groaning of the dying armies, is the song that thrills this moment from the sky, swept as though all the bells of heaven rung a jubilee, "Peace on earth, good will toward men." Oh, when will the day come—God hasten it!—when the swords shall be turned into plowshares, and the fortresses shall be remodeled into churches, and the men of blood battling for renown shall become good soldiers of Jesus Christ, and the cannon now striking down whole columns of death shall thunder the victories of the truth.

MANY WILL BE SAVED.

When we think of the whole world saved, we are apt to think of the few people that now inhabit it. Only a very few compared with the populations to come. And what a small part cultivated. Do you know it has been authentically estimated that three-fourths of Europe is yet all barrenness, and that nine hundred and ninety-one one-thousandths part of the entire globe is uncultivated? This is all to be cultivated, all inhabited and all gospelized. Oh, what tears of repentance when nations begin to weep! Oh, what supplications when continents begin to pray! Oh, what rejoicing when hemispheres begin to sing! Churches will worship on the places where this very hour smokes the blood of human sacrifice, and wandering through the snake infested jungles of Africa, Christ's shod will bruise the serpent's head. Oh, when the trumpet of salvation shall be sounded everywhere and the nations are redeemed, a light will fall upon every town brighter than that which fell upon Bethlehem, and more overwhelming than the song that fell on the pasture fields where the flocks fed, there will be a song louder than the voice of the storm lifted oceans, "Glory to God in the highest," and from all nations and kindred and people and tongues will come the response, "And on earth peace, good will toward men!" On this Christmas day I bring you good tidings of great joy. Pardon for all sin, comfort for all trouble, and life for the dead. Shall we now take this Christ into our hearts? The time is passing. This is the closing of the year. How the time speeds by. Put your hand on your heart—one, two, three; three times less it will beat. Life is passing like gazelles over the plain. Sorrows hover like petrels over the sea. Death swoops like a vulture from the mountains. Misery rolls up to our ears like waves. Heavenly songs fall to us like stars.

I wish you a merry Christmas, not with worldly dissipations, but merry with Gospel gladness, merry with pardoned sin, merry with hope of reunion in the skies with all your loved ones who have preceded you. In that grandest and best sense a merry Christmas.

And God grant that in our final moment we may have as bright a vision as did the dying girl when she said: "Mother"—pointing with her thin white hand through the window—"mother, what is that beautiful land out yonder beyond the mountains, the high mountains?" "Oh," said the mother, "my darling, there are no mountains within sight of our home." "Oh, yes," she said, "don't you see them—that beautiful land beyond the mountains out there, just beyond the high mountains?"

The mother looked down into the face of her dying child and said: "My dear, I think that must be heaven that you see." "Well, then," she said, "father, you come, and with your strong arms carry me over those mountains, into that beautiful land beyond the high mountains." "No," said the weeping father, "my darling, I can't go with you." "Well," said she, clapping her hands, "never mind, never mind; I see yonder a shining One coming. He is coming now, in his strong arms to carry me over the mountains to the beautiful land—over the mountains, over the high mountains!"

Adventure with a Bear in Hungary.

A thrilling adventure with a bear occurred a few days ago at Wallendorf in Hungary. The following is the account given by Advocate Forster, who, as will be seen, narrowly escaped with his life: I went with a party of friends to the neighboring mountains to shoot roe deer. There were plenty of them, only the dogs bounded them away to the valley beyond. I consequently changed my place and took my stand at a spot which I knew to be favorable. Presently I heard the dogs coming, but fancied from their bark that they were chasing a bear. I quickly withdrew my shot cartridges and put in bullets, but what was my surprise to see a huge bear trotting quietly toward me, apparently regardless of the dogs.

When within seventy paces I fired and saw him fall, but nevertheless I thought it prudent to give him a second bullet, which likewise took effect. I afterwards proceeded to a hillock close by and called my companions, but hardly had I raised my voice ere the bear got up and made straight for me. I had just time to reload and fire when he was within five paces of me. It did not quite finish him off, for he fell upon me with a terrible howl and knocked me heavily to the ground. I managed to push the barrels of my gun into his open jaws and fired a second shot. Luckily also two dogs came up and seized him from behind. In a last effort he caught my foot between his teeth, and had enough strength left to bite through my high boots and slightly wound my ankle. When my friends came up they were greatly alarmed to see me covered with blood, but fortunately it was that of my shaggy victim, not my own.—London Standard.

To Keep Milk from Souring.

A German chemist of West Chicago has been experimenting for a number of years in the hope of discovering a process for purifying and refining milk and cream for the purpose of shipment to points distant from the place of supply, and he says he has found it at last. Milk ordinarily turns sour within twelve hours, unless packed in ice, and even then it will not keep more than two or three days. In cities like New York and London, situated far from the dairy districts, milk is expensive and hard to get. By this process much of the water is taken out and the ingredients are left unharmed in their natural state. All disease germs, it is also claimed, have been destroyed, and, if there has been a taste of bitter herbs, it has been removed. The milk, thus purified and refined, will keep sweet for fully thirty days, and can be shipped anywhere; and when the water has been replaced it is in as good if not better condition as when it left the cow, and cannot be distinguished from milk six hours old. The benefits of the results achieved by this process are obvious, but they are as nothing when it is said that by it milk will be sold in Chicago for less than three cents a quart. The inventor is now shipping the refined milk to New Orleans [illegible]—Chicago Times.

RELICS AND RARITIES.

A STONE [illegible] built by [illegible] on a farm near [illegible], N. Y., still stands.

A PETRIFIED rabbit and numerous old coins were found twenty-four feet below the surface in Portsmouth, O.

AT an auction sale of antiquities in Boston a cup made of wood from the ship Constitution brought $10.

A RESIDENT of Rockland, Mass., has a meerschaum said to have been smoked by General Robert E. Lee in the war days.

LINN COUNTY, Kan., has a hand corn-mill which is [illegible] years old. It was captured at Cave Garden and was the first corn-mill in the county.

A [illegible] of Washington, which was purchased for $10 at the recent sale of the Barnum Hotel effects in Baltimore, is now estimated to be worth $5,000, experts having pronounced it an original by Gilbert C. Stuart.

A FARMER of Wyandot County, O., recently dug up the remains of a sword, supposed to be the same that George Washington presented to Colonel Crawford, one of the heroes of the Indian war. It was found near the spot where Crawford was burned at the stake 107 years ago.

A CITIZEN of Germantown, Pa., recently sold an old Bible for $125. It was a Bradbury edition, published in Philadelphia, and one of the first printed in this country. Very few copies of this edition are now in existence. The purchaser was a descendant of the publisher.

A GENTLEMAN living in Richmond, Va., owns a violin which is associated with the early history of Virginia. It is one of the four violins connected with the early history of that section of the country. It is marked: "Nicholas Amati fecit, Cremona, 1651." This violin was brought to this country by Robert Bolling, the husband of Jane Rolfe, the granddaughter of Pocahontas, who was the daughter of the mighty Indian King Powhattan, of Virginia. The violin is of superior tone, volume and finish, and has been used by many prominent performers during the past century.

QUITE a rarity in the way of an old book is exhibited in a second-hand book store in Hartford. The volume is a well-preserved copy of the "Works of Lucius A. Seneca. Translated into English by Tho. Lodge, D. in Physics." It was published by William Stanley, in London, in 1620. Evidently it is a first edition. The typographical work is excellent, in quaint old characters, but very clear. The paper is of remarkably fine texture, and much thinner than usually found in works of that date. The volume itself, which comprises about one thousand folio pages, has been rebound by a modern binder.

INTERESTING STATISTICS.

IT is said that France is the largest consumer of wheat bread in the world, her consumption of wheat per head being about 8 bushels against 5½ to 5¾ bushels per head in Great Britain and Ireland.

FIFTEEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-EIGHT MILLION letters, or forty-one per head of population, were delivered in the United Kingdom during the year which ended on the 1st of last March. Besides that there were 800,000,000 postal cards, newspapers and parcels. The telegraph service showed a deficit of £340,000.

ACCORDING to a calculation made at the United States legation at Paris, it is estimated that 50,000 Americans have visited the exhibition. The Matin, reckoning the expenses at Paris of each of these visitors at 5,000 francs, calculates that the total sum they must have spent there can not be less than 250,000,000 francs.

SIXTY years ago railroads were unknown in the United States, which then had a population of 12,000,000 people. To-day there are in this country 165,000 miles of railroad, on which were transported last year 475,000,000 people and 600,000,000 tons of freight. Upon those lines over 1,000,000 men are employed, and their annual disbursements for labor and supplies are above $600,000,000.

THE total number of arrests made by agents of the Treasury secret service last year, assisted in some cases by local officers, was 437, the great majority of which were for manufacturing, dealing in or passing counterfeit American money and raising Treasury notes. The fines imposed by courts in these cases aggregated $14,845, and the sentences imposed to 272 years, 6 months and 21 days. Aliens are foremost among foreigners as counterfeiters in this country. The representative value of counterfeit and raised notes and other imitations of money captured during the year was $477,631.

FREEHOLDERS' PROCEEDINGS.

[OFFICIAL.]

ELIZABETH, N. J., Dec. 5, 1889.

Regular meeting of the board of chosen freeholders of Union county held on Thursday, Dec. 5, 1889, at 2:30 o'clock p. m.

Present—Director Hubbard, and Freeholders Briant, Doty, Donahoe, Howard, Houston, Jones, Kyte, Kleinhans, Pierson, Roll, Thompson, Vanderbeek, Van Saun, Wright, West, Whaley—17.

Absent—None.

The minutes of last meeting (omitting list of bills ordered paid) were read and on motion approved.

RESOLUTIONS.

By Freeholder Thompson:

Resolved, That the county collector advance to the sheriff five hundred dollars on account of court expenses for the October term of 1889.

Freeholder Vanderbeek moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder West:

Resolved, That all bridge work now unauthorized by this board of its properly constituted committee be and is hereby suspended for the balance of the present fiscal year, except such repairs as may be, absolutely necessary to protect property and save the traveling public from harm.

Freeholder Vanderbeek moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

A bill of D. M. Smythe, late editor and proprietor of the Summit Record, for publishing minutes of the Board, amounting to $25, was received and referred to legal committee and county attorney.

The following bills audited and approved were read and ordered paid unanimously:

Harper's Young People.

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY.

The Eleventh Volume of HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE, which begins with the Number for November 5, 1889, presents an attractive programme. It will offer to its readers at least four serials of the usual length, and others in two or three parts, namely, "The Red Mustang," by William O. Stoddard; "Phil and the Baby," by Lucy C. Lillie; "Prince Tommy," by John Russell Coryell; and "Mother's Way," by Margaret E. Sangster; two short serials by Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen. Two series of Fairy Tales will attract the attention of lovers of the wonder-world, namely, the quaint tales told by Howard Pyle, and so admirably illustrated by him, and another series in a different vein by Frank M. Bicknell. There will be short stories by W. D. Howells, Thomas Nelson Page, Mary E. Wilkins, Nora Perry, Harriet Prescott Spofford, David Ker, Hezekiah Butterworth, Sophie Swett, Richard Malcolm Johnston, etc.

A subscription to HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE secures a juvenile library. There is useful knowledge, also plenty of amusement.—Boston Advertiser.

TERMS: Postage Prepaid, $2.00 Per Year.

Vol. XI. begins November 5, 1889.

Specimen Copy sent on receipt of a two-cent stamp.

SINGLE NUMBERS, Five Cents each.

ST. NICHOLAS

The Century Co's Magazine for Young Folks. Enlarged and printed in New Type.

Since 1873, when under the editorial management of Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, the publication of St. Nicholas for Young Folks was begun, it has led all magazines for girls and boys. Nothing like it was known before, and today, as the Chicago Inter-Ocean recently said, "it is the model and ideal juvenile magazine of the world." Through its pages the greatest writers of the time are speaking to the youth of America and England, and the best artists and engravers are training the eyes of the boys and girls to appreciate the highest in art. Nobody knows how many readers St. Nicholas has. In the third largest public library in America—that in Indianapolis—more than 3,000 people read each month's number.

Since the first issue Mrs. Dodge has remained as editor. Early in its history other young people's magazines, "Our Young Folks," "The Little Corporal," "Riverside," etc., were consolidated with it, and its history has been one of growth from the first. Tennyson, Bryant, Longfellow, Whittier, Miss Alcott, Mrs. Burnett, Charles Dudley Warner, W. D. Howells, and almost every well-known writer of our time have contributed to its pages. There is only one way in which its conductors can make it better, and that is by making more of it, and so they announce that with the beginning of the seventeenth volume (November, 1889) St. Nicholas will be enlarged by the addition of eight, and sometimes sixteen, extra pages in each number. This enlargement is absolutely required to make room for the rich store of new material which has been secured for the benefit of St. Nicholas readers. The use of new and clearer type will be begun with the November number.

During the coming year there are to be four important serial stories by four well-known American authors. Athletics and outdoor sports will be a special feature (contributed by Walter Camp, of Yale, and others), and there will be stories of character and adventure, sketches of information and travel, outdoor papers, articles of special literary interest, suggestive talks on natural history, other scientific subjects, and the march of events. Both the December and January numbers are to be holiday issues.

The price will be the same as heretofore, $3.00 a year, 25 cents a number, and all dealers and the publishers (The Century Co., New York) take subscriptions. New subscribers should begin with November.

ILLUSTRATED.

A new Shakespeare—the Shakespeare of EDWIN A. ABBEY—will be presented in HARPER'S MAGAZINE, for 1890, with comments by Andrew Lang. Harper's Magazine has also made special arrangements with Alphonse Daudet, the greatest living French novelist, for the exclusive publication, in serial form, of a humorous story, to be entitled "The Colonists of Tarascon: the Last Adventures of the Famous Tartarin." The story will be translated by Henry James, and illustrated by Rossi and Myrbach.

W. D. Howells will contribute a novelette in three parts, and Lafcadio Hearn, a novelette in two parts, entitled "Youma," handsomely illustrated.

In illustrated papers, touching subjects of current interest, and in its short stories, poems, and timely articles, the Magazine will maintain its well-known standard.

Harper's Bazar.

ILLUSTRATED.

HARPER'S BAZAR is a journal for the home. Giving the latest information with regard to the Fashions, its numerous illustrations, fashion-plates, and pattern-sheet supplements are indispensable alike to the home dress-maker and the professional modiste. No expense is spared in making its artistic attractiveness of the highest order. Its clever short stories, parlor plays, and thoughtful essays satisfy all tastes, and its last page is famous as a budget of wit and humor. In its weekly issues everything is included which is of interest to women. During 1890 Olive Thorne Miller, Christine Terhune Herrick, and Mary Lowe Dickinson will respectively furnish a series of papers on "The Daughter at Home," "Three Meals a Day," and "The Woman of the Period." The serial novels will be written by Walter Besant and F. W. Robinson.

JOSEPH JEFFERSON.

"The Century Magazine" in 1890—Joseph Jefferson's Autobiography—Novels by Frank R. Stockton, Amelia E. Barr, and others—A Capital Programme.

DURING 1890 The Century Magazine (whose recent successes have included the famous "War Papers," the Lincoln History and George Kennan's series on "Siberia and the Exile System") will publish the long looked-for Autobiography of Joseph Jefferson, whose "Rip van Winkle" has made his name a household word. No more interesting record of a life upon the stage could be laid before the public. Mr. Jefferson is the fourth in a generation of actors, and, with his children and grandchildren, there are six generations of actors among the Jeffersons. His story of the early days of the American stage, when, as a boy traveling in his father's company, they would settle down for a season in a Western town, playing in their own extemporized theater,—the particulars of the creation of his famous "Rip van Winkle," how he acted "Ticket-of-Leave Man" before an audience of that class in Australia, etc.,—all this, enriched with illustrations and portraits of contemporary actors and actresses, and with anecdotes, will form one of the most delightful serials The Century has ever printed.

Amelia E. Barr, Frank R. Stockton, Mark Twain, H. H. Boyesen, and many other well-known writers will furnish the fiction for the new volume, which is to be unusually strong, including several novels, illustrated novelettes, and short stories. "The Women of the French Salons" are to be described in a brilliant series of illustrated papers. The important discoveries made with the great Lick Telescope at San Francisco (the largest telescope in the world) and the latest explorations relating to pre-historic America (including the famous Serpent Mound, of Ohio) are to be chronicled in The Century.

Prof. George P. Fisher of Yale University, is to write a series on "The Nature and Method of Revelation," which will attract every Bible student. Bishop Potter of New York will be one of several prominent writers who are to contribute a series of "Present-day Papers" on living topics, and there will be art papers, timely articles, etc., etc., and the choicest pictures that the greatest artists and engravers can produce.

Every bookseller, postmaster, and subscription agent takes subscriptions to The Century ($4 00 a year), or remittance may be made directly to the publishers, THE CENTURY CO., of New York. Begin new subscriptions with November (the first issue of the volume) and get Mark Twain's story, "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," in that number.

RHYMES OF RECENT DATE.

Winter.

Oh, Spring's a dainty little maid;
A lovely, gentle thing
Of budding leaves and waking birds,
Of love and dream, is Spring.
But Winter's a lover most bold,
And his hearty embrace
As it touches your face
Make Spring's gentle kisses seem cold.

Oh, Summer's a stately dame
With languid air and mein,
With star-set crown and flower-decked robe
As best befits a queen.
But Winter's a merry young lad,
And his jubilant airs,
As he does and he dares,
Make Summer's sweet quiet seem sad.

Oh, Autumn has the dignity
Of good work nobly done,
His golden haze on glorious days
Makes life and thought seem one.
A princely young noble is Fall,
But in spite of the best
To be found in the rest,
Sir Winter is king of them all.
—N. Y. Telegram.

A Cogitation.

The frostwrapt marshes seem to sleep,
The listless streams lie still and numb,
The winds a charmed silence keep,
The hills are white, the woods are dumb;
But nature wears a thoughtful frown
As of surprise with anger blent
(As one will cast ones eyelids down
In sudden study, deep and brown,
When met by problem strange, and bent
On finding out just what is meant).
So nature evidently sighs
O'er some deep riddle, pondered well—
I think it must be at the lies
That disappointed sportsmen tell.
—Madeline S. Bridges, in Puck.

Repression.

Every burden bravely borne
Lifts the striving soul, not crushes;
Great that strength is soon outworn;
Nobler is the soul that hushes
Its fierce sobs, with lips death-pale
Forcing back the rising wail.

Do the white stars in the heaven
Wail for very loneliness?
Or the mountain peaks, storm-riven,
Sigh for bloom their snow to bless?
Strong souls do not rail at fate;
Self-contained and calm they wait.
—Alice Williams Brotherton, in Christian Register.

A Beautiful Moth.

Doubt and I one summer day
Through green wood and meadow gay
Chanced in random mood to stray.

God was in the brooding air,
Round about us everywhere,
Thrilling, shaping all things fair.

But the will and way Divine
Were too subtle, deep and fine
For these careless eyes of mine.

Far about us, then, as still,
Woven threads of matchless will
Twirled the stars with awful skill.

But I stood owl-eyed at gaze,
Blinded by the noontide blaze,
Witless of the stellar maze.

Marvel not to hear that I
Learned of matters deep and high
From a gorgeous butterfly.

"Sure," I said, "some master mind
Such a dainty shape designed—
All these hues arranged, combined."

Doubt was silent. "Yes," I said,
"Twas an artist's hand that laid
These fine lines, these colors spread.

"He was one that dipped his brush
In the dawntime's virgin blush,
In the gray of twilight's hush.

"Here are tints that die or swoon,
Gold of sun and gold of moon,
White of winter, green of June.

"This symmetric, dainty thing,
This divine imagining
Chance ne'er fashioned"—Doubt took wing.

So it ofttimes haps, I wis,
They whose eyes the great see miss,
Hear the [illegible] brakes hiss.

God has writ our rightful creed
Both for wise and simple need—
Even they who run may read.
—George Horton, in Chicago Herald.

Winning Rosalinda.

Bright and lovely as a dream,
Unto me her dark eyes seem,
Sweet and winsome—
None so handsome
As my Rosalinda.

Stars do pale unto her eyes,
Winter melts before her sighs;
Very striking—
To my liking—
Charming Rosalinda.

Night's illumined by her glance,
And she holds in fatal trance;
Shoulders gleaming,
Tresses streaming—
Dashing Rosalinda.

Yet 'tis all the worse for me,
For my love she'll no more be;
Near doth hover
Dearer lover—
Witching Rosalinda.

But a railroad owner, I—
He—the porter, that is why
Me she's shaken,
Him she's taken,
Fickle Rosalinda.
—Boston Globe.

Thought Odors.

Not what we do, not what we say, speaks for us
To fine souls here, or to the Throne of Light.
Tho' words and acts be fair, gods will abhor us
And men distrust, if our hearts are not right.

Our secret aim, our hidden wish or longing,
Our silent thoughts of men or worlds above—
These are the tell-tale forces that come thronging
To point to us as ones to loathe or love.

Our thoughts are odors and we can not seal them
So close with actions but they will creep out;
And delicately-fashioned souls will feel them,
And know them sweet or vile beyond a doubt.

Good deeds fall dead if selfish causes guide them,
Good words fall flat that but from lips have birth;
And eloquent and noble seems, beside them,
The silence or inaction of true worth.
—Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in N. Y. Independent.

Lost and Found.

The low-browed clouds, with sullen mein,
Repulsive in their rags and dun,
Hung threatening o'er a rural scene,
Which shuddered ere the storm begun.

Pent up within that blackened sky,
Crouched flood and whirlwind for their leap,
While murky outposts eastward fly,
And cyclone is the scythe to reap.

The leash is slipped, and tumult reigns,
The gurgling brooks are choking fast,
And woodland giants, torn with pains,
Are swaying like a vessel's mast.

But, low! against the dingy fleece
Floats, whiter than a seraph's wing,
A hovering messenger of peace,
As if to tempt the birds to sing.

Not flock of vapor, silver-curled,
A truant from ethereal vale—
But something snapped and high had whirled
A weekly washing in the gale!
—Boston Transcript.

IRISH SUPERSTITIONS.

IT is very unlucky to meet in the early morning a barking dog or a bare-footed woman.

WHEN a corpse retains animal heat over long another member of the family is to die within a year.

IF the stacks are not circled each night by the noiseless barn owl a blight will fall upon next season's crops.

THE linnet pours forth the most melancholy song of all Irish birds, and honest-hearted peasants are often affected by it to tears.

WHEN the nest of the thrush or mavis is built unusually high in the thornbush this betokens a great calamity to a neighborhood.

OVER in Connemara to this day a funeral procession on its way to church will halt at some distance away and cast together a huge pile of stones.

ONE of the oldest of all Irish superstitions is the belief that if you chase and catch a butterfly you imprison the wandering soul of your grandmother.

ANY three idle strokes of a stick in the ashes or a spade or other farm tool in the soil making a figure resembling a coffin is certain to portend death in one's family.

WORK or study indoors carried on in an unnatural or cramped position of the body.

WEAKNESS or debility of body, however produced. This can only be remedied by proper nutriment.

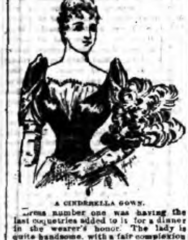
SEVERAL NEW GOWNS.

Worn Under the Holly and Under the Rose.

The New Things Seen in Metropolitan Drawing-Rooms—You Who Have Ball Dresses Prepare to Don Them Now—Fashions of the Season.

COPYRIGHT 1889.

Seldom have dinner and dance gowns been more graceful and picturesque than at the present moment, and I must confess that I was greatly pleased with two beautiful toilets shown me on Monday last by an American woman who has figured prominently and successfully in London society, and who is just now making a visit to New York to renew her acquaintance with her girlhood friends. Her husband, who is now dead, had a minor title and left her a big income. On these accounts and also, it is only fair to suppose, because she herself is charming, she is invited everywhere.



A CINDERELLA GOWN.

Dress number one was having the last coquetries added to it for a dinner in the wearer's honor. The lady is quite handsome, with a fair complexion and masses of hair just touched with an auburn tinge, which she curls loosely on the top of her head. The gown was a creamy white satin, brocaded in a raised design with pale peach color. The bodice was full and low and rather of the Josephine order. It was finished with a belt with gold traceries, through which was thrust an antique dagger set with jewels.

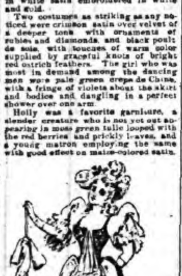
Dress number two was brought with her from England, and was meant, so I understood, to make its first appearance next Thursday evening at McAllister's New Year's ball. It was a noticeably magnificent toilet, having a petticoat of white brocade, a bodice and train of amber satin, with high papillon bows on the shoulders, to be worn with a quantity of diamonds.

I have heard a vivid account of a Christmas "Cinderella" in a Long Island country house, in imitation of the English dances, from a little friend who attended, and she says that the dresses were very pretty, the more so, perhaps, that they were very simple, as befitted the occasion.

One of the best gowns was of black tulle and jet with a bodice of black velvet and an enormous bouquet of crimson carnations tied with broad sash ribbons of the same color. A very becoming toilet was a delightfully simple Empire costume of white silk trimmed with posies of daisies. Two sisters who always dress well wore girlish gowns of soft, rose-pink crepe and silk, with fan and gloves just one shade paler in tone. A capital gown was maize tulle with beetle-wing panels and bodice of dark green plush. A pretty debutante wore white net, the skirt trimmed with rows of white ribbon, while her stately mother took part in the Sir Roger de Coverly in black tulle, ornamented with silver embroidery. A young bride made a charming picture in white satin embroidered in white and gold.

Two costumes as striking as any noticed were crimson satin over velvet of a deeper tone with ornaments of rubies and diamonds, and black poult de soie, with touches of warm color supplied by graceful knots of bright red ostrich feathers. The girl who was most in demand among the dancing men wore pale green crepe de Chine, with a fringe of violets about the skirt and bodice and dangling in a perfect shower over one arm.

Holly was a favorite garniture, a slender creature who is not yet out appearing in moss green tulle looped with the red berries and prickly leaves, and a young matron employing the same with good effect on maize-colored satin.



A MARIE TEMPEST GOWN.

A fancy dance a few nights since brought out some new and piquant costumes. Two of the cleverest were worn by cousins just across the water from London, who modeled their toilets on those worn by Miss Marie Tempest on the opening night of "The Red Hussar." The cousin who is petite and round had a dress of soft green silk, with a rose-colored petticoat and full frills and fichu of white muslin. A white hat trimmed with tea roses was set on her curly hair, and the bodice and tablier were trimmed with ropes of roses to correspond. The cousin who is tall and has a "presence," wore a gorgeous gown of yellow brocade, with the full sleeves turned back on the arm, caught at the shoulders and faced with white satin, while draperies of lace fell below the elbows. The chemisette and tablier were of crepe de Chine, embroidered with clusters of purple clematis. A large hat of white felt with yellow feathers was one accompaniment, and another was a tall white stick tied with white and yellow ribbons.

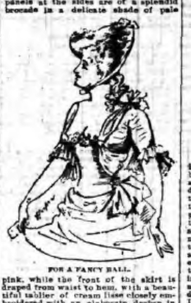
There will be no fancy dresses at the New Year's ball and no attempt at costuming after any particular period, so Mr. McAllister tells me. Most of the costumes for that great social occasion are finished and in the hands of their happy prospective wearers. Many toilets have been imported from Paris and London expressly for the night of the 3d of January. One which was finished at a leading New York house early in the week is to grace the person of a young married belle. It is a changing opal satin, draped in front with white lisse, which is embroidered with small bouquets of flowers, copied closely from nature, in shades of myrtle green, old rose and goblin blue. The bodice is very prettily cut, and is drawn to a point in front under a V-shaped band of opal-tinted passementerie.

Several of the debutantes have chosen Russian net, which is the prettiest and softest of the new transparent materials, for their ball gowns, and two girlish toilets of this order which were shown to me this morning were very pleasing. Both were made over white satin, but while one was draped full in Vandyke points across the front of the skirt, the other fell in long Greek folds with silver cords run through the meshes to give a little weight to the airy material. The beauty of both these gowns was in the floral garnitures. The first was looped with velvet tulips mounted with ribbon bows in white and crimson, and the second was festooned with white marguerites, threaded as children string them, encircling the waist and confining, elsewise, the puffs of yellow hair.

Miss Emily Price, the daughter of the Tuxedo architect, who has been declared to be the most beautiful of the season's debutantes, is to wear, I hear, a silver white tulle trimmed profusely with a costly white fur. The gown is made with a silver silk petticoat, bordered with a fur band. Over this hangs the tulle embroidered with far away shadows of witch hazel flowers which seem to belong to the fur and the snow. The bodice opens in a V edged with fur.

Miss Hope Goddard, the Providence beauty, is reputed to be intending to wear a lager beer colored gauze with ropes of chrysanthemums shading in color from gold to a deep red brown fastening the puffs of the floating airy material.

The most resplendent toilets seen will be, of course, the rich brocades which are now the right of matrons however young. An exceedingly handsome gown which awaits the eventful evening has a bodice and train of dark ruby velvet. The whole of the underskirt and the panels at the sides are of a splendid brocade in a delicate shade of pale pink, while the front of the skirt is draped from waist to hem, with a beautiful tablier of cream lisse closely embroidered with an elaborate design in fine pearls. The bodice is of dark ruby velvet arranged with a vest of brocade and a chemisette of mousseline de chiffon bordered with pearls.



FOR A FANCY BALL.

It is of no use to anticipate the diamond show further than to premise that several ladies, following possibly Mrs. Kendal's example, though the chances are that they wouldn't own it, have had the stones of bracelets and necklets reset in stars and suns.

The New Year's ball may do something to settle the vexed question of bouquet or no bouquet. At the dances thus far given few girls have carried flowers, but the bouquet, when used, has been one of many dollars. That which Miss Schreiner held in her hand on the night of the first Assembly was said to have cost $100, and her Patriarch bouquet last week was certainly not cheaper. If items of this sort are to be added to the necessary expenditure for a ball gown, there are many peres de famille who would vote without hesitation against the posy.

There were many fine gowns at the Union League Club's reception to the Pan-American delegates. One of these was a handsome gris de perle with train, and with the front of the bodice studded with diamonds. Another was a fawn-colored velvet, trimmed with yellow-toned Maltese lace. A third good dress was mouse-colored moire, draped with magnificent white Brussels lace. A dark, picturesque woman wore yellow poult de soie. One of her companions was in dove-gray moire, and another in maize-colored silk, trimmed with a harmonizing shade of green. Perhaps the smartest toilet of the occasion was a brown and yellow silk in stripes, brocaded with gold and black pompadour designs.

Every shade and gamut of color was represented in the toilets at a large dinner recently. The hostess was brilliant in pale pink moire, bordered with gold and silver passementerie, and worn over a petticoat of crimson velvet. And yet it is a good plan to remember that there are women who dress well on $100 a year.

ELLEN OSBORN.

THE NEW YEAR DRESSES.

A Striking Symposium on the Subject.

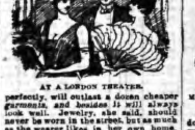
How, When and Where to Wear Diamonds and Other Jewels—What Mrs. Wm. Astor, Mrs. Frank Leslie and Margaret Sangster Say.

COPYRIGHT 1889.

How shall a woman array herself to appear at her best and in fashion?

A burning question, indeed, a never ending subject of discussion, and, after all, perhaps a mere matter of taste. Nevertheless the question was put to a host of well-known New York women this week and there is a sufficient variety in their replies to suit everybody.

As the leader of New York's most exclusive circle, Mrs. William Astor occupies a position in which she has no equal or rival. Her opinion is that the well-dressed woman is the one who arrays herself in the simplest costume, providing it be of the best material. In conversation with the writer she expressed herself in a charmingly free and frank manner. The one word simplicity, she insisted, covered it all. Then she went on to say how she disliked over-dressing, or over-trimming, especially when the material is of cheap quality. Some people she knew of preferred to own several gowns of poorer quality, rather than one good dress, but it is a great mistake, she said, as a dress of handsome goods, and fitting perfectly, will outlast a dozen cheaper garments, and besides it will always look well. Jewelry, she said, should never be worn in the street, but as much as the wearer likes in her own home, for evening wear, and here again more taste should be exercised. It does not look well to wear several different kinds of jewels with evening dress. An emerald here, a ruby there and a diamond somewhere else displays bad taste. Each set should be worn separately, and she prefers a gem of value rather than an infinite number of inexpensive jewels. For a ball dress or carriage costume, Mrs. Astor says, choose always the most elegant material, whether it be light or heavy goods, and have it made up in some simple way.

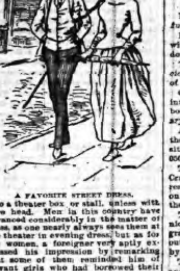


AT A LONDON THEATER.

Mrs. Frank Leslie replied to the question "What constitutes a perfectly dressed woman?" as follows:

"The first principle of a well-dressed woman is to be well shod and well gloved. No matter how shabbily a woman may be attired, if she has on a neat pair of boots, she can consider half the battle won, but not without. So many handsomely gowned women are "au fait" in every other respect and go about with the shabbiest shoes imaginable. Indeed, it has almost become a saying, that the poorer women and girls are much more particular regarding what they wear on their feet than the rich. If a woman must economize let it not be done at the extremities. A woman should dress very simply for the street, in rather sombre colors, and without any jewelry whatever. She can wear her handsome clothes in a carriage and deck herself as gorgeously as she pleases, but when I see a woman clad in gay raiment on the street, I always say to myself: 'You have no carriage. You would like to have; but you haven't.' I do not care for the now popular tailor made suit. It is too stiff and severe-looking, besides being very trying for most women to wear. A woman who goes to business should be clad in the plainest and neatest of gowns. I don't think any one ever described me in my office dress without talking about my elegant apparel, handsome jewelry, etc., when in reality I always wear a black dress of some soft material, made to fit perfectly, but in the simplest way imaginable, and with only plain pearl ear-rings and pin, because I think it the proper way for a woman to dress while at business. It is deplorable that our women make no especial toilets for the theater in this country. On the other side, if a play is stupid, one can find pleasure in looking around at the beautiful dresses, and in addition to this, it inspires the artists to greater zeal when they look out from the stage upon a handsomely clothed audience. In London, women do not go into a theater box or stall, unless with bare head. Men in this country have advanced considerably in the matter of dress, as one nearly always sees them at the theater in evening dress, but as for the women, a foreigner very aptly expressed his impression by remarking that some of them reminded him of servant girls who had borrowed their mistress' best gowns to go to the theater. A perfectly dressed woman should always wear a low neck dress in the evening. A Parisian would as soon think of going to a ball in a wrapper as in a high-neck gown. A friend said to me once: 'What! Go in a low-neck dress with such thin neck and arms as I have?' I answered: 'Cover them with tulle, but your dress must be low!'"

FRANK LESLIE.



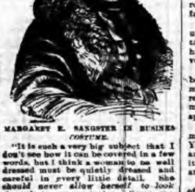
A FAVORITE STREET DRESS.

Miss Mary F. Seymour, the editor of "The Business Woman's Journal," answered the query thus:

"First of all, I would consider a woman's costume hygienically, and should never think her perfectly dressed unless health rules had been followed. I like the tailor made gowns very much, but they are much too heavy. Nowadays the heaviest and thickest material a woman can purchase is considered the most fashionable, and it is just such style of dressing that is the cause of half the weaknesses to which women are subject. I should not say much, it is true, for I am wearing a thick dress myself, but I really endeavored to get the lightest stuff I could find and had it made as simply as possible; still there is too much weight. I think a woman should dress in the plainest way possible on the street. I like the Philadelphia style of dressing. It resembles the English style, while New York reminds me of Paris. I do not think women should wear gay attire on the streets or dress in any way to attract attention. Women complain that they are annoyed by the staring of men; that men ogle them on the street and in the cars, when, if they did but know it, it is their style of dressing that calls forth all the trouble, their bright colored costumes, big hats, etc., which cause men to lower their newspapers and gaze persistently at them. That sort of dress should be confined to the carriage, where an elaborate toilet is perfectly proper, but simplicity should be observed in street and church dress, particularly the latter. We are supposed to attend church for devout purposes, and our outside attire should be such that it will not detract in the slightest from the solemnity of the occasion and in any way interfere with the worship of God. Let the material of the street or Sabbath dress be as rich as you please and fit perfectly, but it need not necessarily be ugly or disagreeable to the eye or unbecoming to the person. Have it made to suit the face and figure, but made simply and unostentatiously. There is a growing tendency among cultivated people to decry the loud fashion of dressing, and adopt the quiet and refined style. In fact, it is fast becoming the distinguishing element between the two classes. Black silk is a very good material for street attire, for it can be made as simply or elaborately as you like, and yet always be genteel. In complete contrast to this, I believe that an evening dress should be of the brightest and most cheerful hue, the brighter the shade and texture the better it looks. Let a woman at such a time make herself look as attractive as possible, never forgetting, however, to first study her face and form, and don that which suits her particular style, but no low-necked gowns should be worn. It is very bad for the health, being the cause of a great many deep-seated colds, etc., but more than all, it is demoralizing to both men and women. It removes, in a measure, the feeling of respect between the sexes. The custom should be abolished.

MARY F. SEYMOUR."

Margaret E. Sangster, editor of "Harper's Bazar," replied as follows:



MARGARET E. SANGSTER IN BUSINESS COSTUME.

"It is such a very big subject that I don't see how it can be covered in a few words, but I think a woman to be well dressed must be quietly dressed and careful in every little detail. She should never allow herself to look slovenly in any particular. Some one very aptly says 'that the consciousness of being well dressed will support a woman when religion and everything else fails.' A woman should always dress in subdued shades on the promenade with no jewelry whatever, for besides being in very poor taste, it is not a good thing from a moral point of view. It encourages theft by advertising what valuables you possess, and creates envy in the hearts of shop girls, who, when they see a customer come in the store decked in finery and quantities of jewelry, feel that they must endeavor in some way to do the same. Large hats may be worn in the street if becoming and of not too great dimensions, but a rule ought to be made that women over fifty should not wear round hats, as they are very inappropriate for them. I do not like veils and trust they may go out of fashion and remain so. A good complexion does [illegible] one and they make a bad [illegible] worse, besides hurting the [illegible]. How absurd it is to see a woman [illegible] theater with a heavy dotted veil drawn over her face! I am a firm believer in corsets, but one need not necessarily wear them tight. They give shape to the figure and are certainly essential in showing off a pretty costume. I admire the tailor-made suits and think they are very appropriate for out-door wear. I should always advise a woman to purchase the best material she can for her gowns. It is certainly more economical in the end. As Shakespeare says, 'The costliest material is cheap.' Common sense shoes should be worn for walking. They enable a woman to carry herself better and are much less tiresome than the popular high heeled boots. A woman going to business should be attired in a dress of some durable stuff which will attract little or no attention.

A woman's [illegible] for the carriage or evening can [illegible] be too costly or elegant, but in [illegible] as in other respects, good taste m[illegible] be exercised in choosing colors. [illegible] wear a thing simply because every [illegible] woman is wearing it. I do not [illegible] of the low-necked dress. I beli[illegible] in leaving something to the imagin[illegible]. The shoulders and bosom should [illegible] ways be veiled or the gown only [illegible] low enough to show the neck. L[illegible] gloves make a very pretty coveri[illegible] for the arms, and are the correct th[illegible]. Nothing is prettier in my eyes th[illegible] a gown made by a first-class modiste [illegible] who thoroughly understands the a[illegible]t fitting perfectly; a figure clothed [illegible] such a garment must be the ideal [illegible] a well dressed woman.

REFORMATION.

Several important and much needed Reforms are earnestly engaging popular thought at the present time and among all classes of people. Such reformations may be delayed by political pettifogging, but, as sure as daylight, it will eventually gain the victory, because of its intrinsic value and increasing necessity.

We will mention as follows:

First—TARIFF REFORM:

A thorough, equitable and practical business revision of the present war-founded, and now, in time of peace, tribute-rendering, monopoly-creating, and oppressive tariff.

A tariff revision that will levy duties and free duties in such a sensible manner that, while providing ample revenue for all the legitimate wants of government honestly administered, will afford full protection and encouragement to every kind and grade of American industry and enterprise, not discarding our once prosperous, but fast-decaying merchant marine, and by widening the sphere of labor and enlarging demands for its productions, permanently benefit not only wage-earners, but the employers of labor and millions of unjustly tax-burdened home consumers.

A tariff so revised as to totally and distinctly abolish every vestige of favoritism and sordid interests; substituting for the modern plan of making the few enormously rich at the expense of the toiling many, an unobstructed opportunity for all the people, the smallest capitalist on an equal footing with the largest, to freely enjoy the fruits of honest industry and trade, through the guarantee of law enacted for the sole purpose of promoting the general public welfare irrespective of sectionalism and monied combinations.

That is Tariff Reform.

Not a theory, but an absolute essential, based upon equal and exact justice.

Secondly comes another of like value, and that is BALLOT REFORM.

The making of elections what they were designed to be, a truthful and honest expression of the popular will, instead of being, as they have to a great extent become, foul reservoirs of bribery and intimidation.

The granting to every legally qualified voter perfect freedom and security to prepare such a ballot as his own individual judgment approves, and to deposit it in the box without espionage or hindrance of any kind or form or from any source.

To dignify American citizenship, strengthen representative institutions and stamp out of existence the evil efforts of corrupt politicians and their [illegible] and abettors.

That is Ballot Reform.

Also as essential for the safety and best interests of the people.

ANOTHER GONE.

Mrs. Hazell's Death Soon Follows That of Her Sister.

The especially sad news of the death of Ada E. Elden, wife of Mr. T. E. Hazell, will be received with unusual sorrow by the community who are acquainted with the pathetic and distressing circumstances of the occurrence. She died at about [illegible] o'clock of Wednesday evening, less than a week after the death of her sister, Florence Louise Elden, who had come from her home in Boston to nurse her sister here.

The shock of Miss Elden's death almost broke Mrs. Hazell's heart. She unjustly blamed herself for calling her sister to her side, when she remembered that Miss Elden was always affected more or less with a cold, by the air of North Plainfield. After her sister's death Mrs. Hazell seemed to have a premonition that she would soon follow her to the grave and join her in Heaven. She urged that Miss Elden's body be not taken at once to Portland to be laid beside their father, but to wait a little while and they might take them both together.

Mrs. Hazell died suddenly and without pain of heart failure. Her disease was pneumonia. She had two trained nurses and the best of medical attendance, including the celebrated Dr. Janeway of New York in consultation. She leaves a husband and four children—the youngest not quite three years of age. In life and character she was an unusually estimable Christian woman, and by her kindness of heart and sweetness of disposition she commanded the love of all who knew her.

The funeral services were held at Trinity Reformed church Thursday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock. Mrs. Hazell's former pastor, the Rev. A. V. V. Raymond, D. D., and the Rev. Cornelius Schenck, officiated. The remains were taken to Bailey's Island, Me., for interment.

The deaths of the two sisters leave their mother, Mrs. Mary L. Elden, alone in the World and sorely bereaved. Her husband died in June last, and the two daughters were all who were left of the family. Many a tear of sympathy with the living will flow with those of grief for the loss of the dead.

Board of Education.

The members of the City Board of Education met and organized Tuesday night by the election of Mr. J. K. Kirkner, President; Mr. J. W. Murray, secretary, and Mr. L. S. Clark, Clerk. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved, and the following claims were presented and referred for proper certification: [illegible] Bros., $1.25; S. S. Barnes & Co., [illegible]; Carney Bros., $2.85; W. F. Adams, [illegible]; A. M. Griffen, $2.05; H. P. Smith & Co., [illegible]; S. Conway, $3.75 and $3.50; John Lipberger, $1.05; W. Scott, [illegible]; L. Fang & Co., $12 00; W. Manning, [illegible].

The Collector reported to the Board that $19,716.12 had been collected for school tax for 1889, which amount had been credited to the Board of Education.

The President appointed the following standing committees for the year:

Teachers and supplies—Messrs Kirkner, Hurlbut, Babcock.

Accounts—Messrs Murray and Babcock.

Repairs and buildings—Messrs Probasco and Murray.

Fuel—Messrs Probasco and Hurlbut.

Mr. Hurlbut was appointed City Superintendent, and the compensation of the Clerk was fixed at $250.

The President reported that Miss Thyng had been obliged to resign as drawing teacher, on account of ill health, and that another teacher had been engaged in New York.

A request from Miss Faber for kindergarten supplies was granted, as was also a request from the scholars of the High School, asking for permission to hold a [illegible] to raise funds for the library. [illegible] was granted an increase of [illegible], and permission was given the scholars in the Irving School to raise money for the purchase of a flag.

Messrs Probasco, Babcock and Murray were appointed a special committee to consider the matter of securing flags for all the schools, and the Board adjourned.

CLOSING BUSINESS.

A BARE QUORUM OF THE DEPARTING COUNCIL MEETS.

City Judge Stillman, Chief of Police Carey and Fire Chief Doane, Present Their Annual Reports—A Statement Why the Electric Street Railway Project Was Not Consummated.

La Grippe had its clutches on the outgoing Council of 1889, and it was not until eight o'clock of Friday night that a quorum was obtained to carry out the closing acts of the year. Janitor Munday was sent for Councilman Squires, and the meeting was then called to order by President Dumont. Messrs. Dunham, Erickson, Moffett and Myers were the other Councilmen present—five Republicans and one Democrat, only two of whom were "hold-overs."

A petition "on behalf of the citizens of Plainfield," but not signed, was received but not acted upon, calling the attention of the Council to the street awnings some of which were hung so low as to strike the heads of pedestrians.

Claims against the city were referred to the proper committees, amounting to [illegible], for the the following accounts: Street lighting, $674.20; Printing, advertising and stationery, $146.85; Election and registration expenses, $721; Street repairs, crushed stone and crosswalks, [illegible].61; Police, and station house rent, [illegible].34; Salaries and rents, $744.03; Fire department, $549.22; Poor fund, $649.67. These claims were all subsequently ordered paid—the Finance Committee acting in place of the absent Auditing Committee.

Reports of the City Clerk, City Judge, Chief of Police, Chief of the Fire Department, City Collector and City Treasurer, were read and placed on file. Extracts from some of them are as follows:

To the Honorable the Mayor and Common Council of the City of Plainfield:

GENTLEMEN:—I herewith beg leave to present my report as City Judge from August 20, 1889, the date of my last report, to December 3, 1889, the date of the expiration of my term of office as follows:

The numbers of prisoners brought before me, was thirty-five of which number twenty-one were fined, eight were committed to the county jail and six were discharged.

Of those fined, all have paid their fines but three: One, who left his kit of tools with the police as security; another Patrick Newell, who still owes the city five dollars, on a fine of twenty-five dollars, and a third Michael Watson, who has appealed to the Union County Court and whose case is still pending there.

The appeal case of Harry E. Vail, reported to your Honorable body in my last report, has since been dismissed, Vail paying the fine of thirty dollars that had been imposed upon him.

I have received from fines during the above period, the sum of two hundred and forty-four dollars and fifteen cents, of which sum his Honor Mayor Male, inflicted or imposed fines to the amount of forty-one dollars.

I have paid to County Clerk Crowell for appeal costs five dollars and fifty cents, and to Chief Carey for expenses mostly for witnesses in the Watson, Sullivan and Newell cases and for carrying prisoners to Elizabeth, forty-eight dollars and twenty cents and at his request have left in his hands the sum of twenty-two dollars and thirty cents for immediate use.

I have also paid to Chief Carey the sum of twelve dollars and fifty cents, being one half of the Newell fine of twenty-five dollars, to which he was entitled under the city ordinance.

The costs taxed up against the city by County Clerk Crowell for several appeal cases, which have come up lately at Elizabeth have not yet been received, and as it is his custom to charge these directly to the private account of the City Judge, I have taken the liberty to reserve a fund from which to pay this bill when it comes in, the sum of twenty-five dollars. When settled any balance will be at once turned over by me to the City Treasurer.

I have paid over the balance or the sum of one hundred and thirty dollars and fifty-five cents to the City Treasurer, and have received his voucher for the same.

Of the above thirty-five cases brought before me, three were tried by Jury, viz: Joseph T. Sullivan, Patrick and Annie Newell. In the Sullivan case the jury disagreed and in the Newell cases Patrick was convicted and Annie Newell acquitted, so of the above all cases reported as discharged, two were done so by the jury, and four by my own decision.

I am most respectfully,
WM. M. STILLMAN,
Ex-City Judge.

December 31, 1889.

To the Honorable the Common Council:

GENTLEMEN:—It is a gratification that I am able to make so favorable a report of this year's work. In orderly conduct, and general quiet of the more rowdy element of society, there has been a very creditable comparison with last year. In 1888 there were 217 arrests made by the department, and during the past year 1889 it is my duty to report only 127 arrests, classified as follows: 115 men and 12 women; 32 for drunkenness; 30 for being drunk and disorderly; 26 for disorderly conduct; 14 for fighting; 4 for indecent conduct; 1 for indecent language; 4 for violating hack ordinance; 5 for theft; 5 for illegal liquor selling; 2 for gambling; 2 for resisting officers; 2 for obstructing streets; 2 for contempt of court; 1 for disorderly house; 2 for riding on railroad cars; 1 for peddling without license; 1 for throwing stones; 1 for [illegible]. Total amount of fines imposed for the year, $639.

All members of the police force have conducted themselves with becoming dignity and satisfactory efficiency. In every instance they have been prompt and fearless to act, and very discreet in dealing with that class of citizens requiring regulation and restriction.

In discharging their duties towards law abiding citizens, protecting their rights from violators of city ordinances pertaining to the morals, peace and good order of the community, the several members of the department have been vigilant day and night, and merit the commendation and approbation of all good people.

Respectfully submitted,
TUNIS J. CAREY,
Chief of Police.

To the Honorable the Common Council:

GENTLEMEN:—I herewith submit to you the annual report of the condition of the fire department, as required by the city ordinance for the year ending November 30, 1889.

The annual force of the department consists of one (1) chief and two (2) assistant engineers and one hundred and thirty nine (139) others, officers and men, an increase of nine (9).

The discipline of the department is as good as any volunteer department can be, there not having been a single case of insubordination during the year. I have nothing but words of praise for the men that turn out to alarms of fire. They obey all orders promptly and have worked together as though they were members of one company. The number of men answering an alarm of fire is a small percentage of the full number of members. An excuse is offered that the fire bell cannot be heard. This is a reasonable excuse and one that cannot be denied. The number of resignations during the year has been two (2) and five (5) expelled, and two (2) dropped for non-residence.

HOUSES.

There are four (4) houses occupied by the department, three (3) of which are owned by the city. The houses occupied by Gazelle Engine Co., No. 1 and Zephyr Hook and Ladder Co., No. 1, located at No. 26 and 28 West Second st. and owned by the city, needs additional room for the storage, and a hose tower. The wood work outside of the building and upper part of the house inside needs painting, otherwise they are both in good repair. The house occupied by Plainfield Engine Co., No. 2, located at [illegible] Front st. and owned by the city, has undergone extensive repairs during the year and has all the modern improvements and is in first-class order, except the old part which needs painting. The house occupied by Alert Hose Co., No. 1, located at No. 21 Madison ave. is rented by the city and kept in fair order by the company. This house should be owned by the city.

APPARATUS.

The apparatus of the department consists of two (2) steam fire engines, Amoskeag make, in first-class condition, three (3) hose carts in good condition, two (2) of which are owned by the city and one (1) by Alert Hose Co.; one (1) hook and ladder truck in good condition, also one (1) hand engine and one (1) four-wheeled hose carriage loaned to South Plainfield fire department.

HOSE.

There is in use in the department three thousand (3,000) feet of cotton hose, good, one thousand four hundred (1,400) feet of rubber hose, fair, six hundred and fifty (650) feet of rubber hose, bad, and one hundred (100) feet of rubber hose, worthless.

FIRES.

There have been ten (10) fires during the year, with a loss on building and stock of seven thousand eight hundred and fifty (7,850) dollars covered by insurance, amounting to fifteen thousand and twenty-five (15,025) dollars. From causes as follows: Sparks from locomotives, two (2); defective flues, four (4); lightning, one (1); lamp explosion, one (1); grease on fire, one (1); unknown, one (1). The small number of fires can partly be accounted for by careful inspections by the fire marshal, and I heartily congratulate your honorable body on the fact that we have not had a single incendiary fire during the year.

WATER SUPPLY.

The water supply for fire purposes is obtained from the following sources: Two (2) brooks, one Greenbrook, running the entire length of the city, and Cedarbrook running at nearly right angles with the first named two-thirds the length of the city; fire hydrant at freight house supplied by tanks; gas holders corner of Fourth and Washington-sts; fire hydrants at the Pond Tool Works; cisterns at Netherwood Hotel kindly placed at the disposal of the department in case of fire, and twenty-one (21) fire wells. Several of these wells are unfit for use, and I consider that our supply is inadequate, leaving a large portion of the city almost totally unprotected, and would earnestly recommend that if no other means is offered that more and larger wells be placed in the unprotected portions of the city.

CHEMICAL ENGINE.

Your committee on fire and buildings contemplated the purchase of a double tank four-wheeled chemical engine, but your committee, for financial reasons, did not purchase one. I think an apparatus such as was contemplated would be a valuable addition to the department. Several chiefs throughout the United States claim sixty per cent of their fires put out by them with very little loss by water.

FIRE ALARM.

Our present alarm consists of a bell weighing twenty-five hundred (2500) lbs located in a tower over engine house on Second st and struck by electricity from the District Messenger office. The sound of the bell can be heard in only a small portion of the city, and is hard to be distinguished from one of our church bells and the shaking of the tower is racking the house. I would recommend that the bell be sold and the tower taken down, and a steam gong be placed on the electric light station, the sounding to be controlled the same as the bell now in use. The Electric Light Company will agree to give us the use of steam at all times free of charge. I would also recommend that a suitable system of electric fire alarm be introduced in the city, with about twenty (20) boxes distributed throughout the city that fires may be more quickly located, as much valuable time is often lost in locating fires and sounding alarms, noticeably so in the case of the Catholic parsonage, when full twenty minutes were lost after the fire was discovered before an alarm could be given.

In my endeavors to maintain and increase the efficiency of the department during the past year, I have received the hearty co-operation of His Honor the Mayor, Job Male, the corporation counsel, Craig A. Marsh, the chief of police, Tunis J. Carey, and the members of the common council, and I heartily appreciate the support and consideration I have received from them. I also take this opportunity to publicly thank the members of the fire and water committee, Messrs. E. N. Erickson, J. K. Myers and E. D. Moffett, for their courtesy to myself and assistants. I also thank my assistants, E. A. Laine and J. A. Martin, for the ability they have shown in the discharge of their duties, ready and willing at all times to do any and all work pertaining to the fire department.

Respectfully,
T. O. DOANE, Chief.

In connection with the above report, Mr. Erickson submitted the following figures relating to the cost of the Department since it has been in charge of the city. The amount is so much less than might be expected, that it is very evident the Department has been in the hands of able and faithful Councilmen and under an economical Chief, for the past 21 months.

The Street Committee through Mr. Dunham reported on the once proposed electric street railway project, as follows:

To the Common Council:

Your committee on the Daft Electric Railway would submit their final report. They deem it proper that a full statement should be made placing the failure in the matter where it belongs. The committee have used every means in their power to induce Mr. Daft to carry out his proposition. They were assured by Mr. Daft in the beginning of the year that he had all the capital back of him necessary, and, that as soon as he could satisfy the Council by his trial car and be granted a franchise, he would construct the road inside of sixty days. Delaying the construction of the car was the only obstacle in the way Mr. Daft assured the committee. And when finally the car was brought to Plainfield and put on exhibition the committee thought the matter assured. The committee informed Mr. Daft the car was satisfactory and the Common Council were ready to grant the franchise as soon as Mr. Daft would comply with the formalities of the law. No further steps could be taken by the Council until Mr. Daft should organize a company and deposit certain monies with the Secretary of State.

At this point Mr. Daft intimated the want of some help from the citizens of Plainfield in the building of the road. Mr. Daft attempted to get such help but he found that those who were shouting the loudest for a street railway in front of their property were more than willing that some other man should pay for the improvement, and the matter has been practically abandoned. The committee regret that so much vital time was lost, and certainly would not have waited on Mr Daft so patiently except on his repeated assurance that he would build the road. Had they supposed, in the beginning of the year, that Mr. Daft would need financial backing from the citizens of Plainfield to any extent, they would have doubted the practicability of entertaining his proposition. Could the scheme have been carried out the City of Plainfield would have had a model road in every respect, and one to be proud of. In view of the foregoing facts the committee believe that no censure should attach to the Council or its Committee, and that none will. The Committee therefore beg to be discharged from further consideration of the matter.

F. E. MARSH,
M. M. DUNHAM.

Jan. 3, 1890.

The Council then adjourned until this evening when it will receive the bond of the Plainfield Water Works Company and adjourn sine die.

Plainfielders in the Courts.

The January term of Court opened at Elizabeth, Wednesday. Among the cases on the docket in which Plainfield people are interested, are the following:

M. B. Long, M. D., vs. estate of Antoine De Baud, for disputed bill for medical services. W. L. Hetfield, executor of the estate, is the defendant.

Joseph Lamb, et al., vs. Francis L. Schoonmaker, on contract; Nelson Runyon for plaintiff; Wm. K. McClure for defendant. Postponed until May term.

Augusta C. Lissignole vs. G. Warren Watson, on contract; Babbitt & Lawrence, for plaintiff; Craig A. Marsh, for defendant. This also went over until the next term.

The first is a suit in the civil court; the last two are supreme court cases.

HYDE—GODFREY.

The Swell Wedding on Fifth Avenue Tuesday Noon, That United a Plainfield Heir and a New York Belle.

The Church of the Heavenly Rest, Fifth avenue and Forty-fifth street, garnished in the evergreen decorations of Christmas, was the scene of a very interesting and extremely pretty wedding at noon Tuesday, when the many relatives and friends of Mr. Charles Livingston Hyde of this city and Miss Edith Godfrey, daughter of Mr. Charles H. Godfrey of New York gathered to witness the ceremony.

A particularly pleasing feature of the occasion was the choral work of the surpliced choir, numbering sixteen voices, under the direction of Mr. Henry Carter, the organist, who before the arrival of the bridal party played selections by Beethoven, Rossini, Raff, Schumann, Mendelssohn and Moskowski. Cadiska's processional was sung as the choristers marched from the vestry to the chancel, and as the bridal party entered the church and formed into line Dyke's "The Voice that breathed o'er Eden" was finely rendered. As the bridal party moved up the center aisle Mr. Carter played the "Lohengrin" march, and after the ceremony the choir sang "Deign this union to approve," to the music "See the conquering hero comes," from Handel's "Judas Maccabeus."

The bride entered the church escorted by her father and attended by Miss Minnie Wanamaker, daughter of the Postmaster-General; Miss Bertha N. Robinson, Miss Lizzie Glendenning, of Philadelphia, and Miss Helen Brice, daughter of the Hon. Calvin S. Brice, as bridesmaids; Miss Edith Hyde, the twelve-year-old sister of the groom, Miss Ada Godfrey, sister of the bride and Miss Mary Leech, young misses, as maids of honor. The four bridesmaids and two of the maids of honor wore very pretty gowns of fine white French wool, made with deep lace, apple-green sashes and Francois hats of green and white. Each carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley. Miss Hyde, the little maid of honor, was attired in a costume of white silk and silver, with a large white hat decorated with ostrich plumes, and carried a basket filled with lilies of the valley.

The bride was attired in a beautiful wedding gown, a creation of Worth, of cream white satin, point lace and orange blossoms, made with long train, high neck and long sleeves. The bridal veil of delicate silk tulle was fastened upon the head with orange blossoms and a diamond crescent, a present from the groom. She also wore a rose diamond brooch, which was selected from the French crown jewels. This latter was presented to her by her mother. Her bouquet was of white orchids.

The groom was attended by his brother, Mr. Louis K. Hyde, and the following young gentlemen served as ushers: Mr. Frank Plummer, Mr. Henry F. Godfrey, brother of the bride; Mr. Frank Cunningham, and Mr Frank Delacy Hyde, a brother. The Rev. Dr. Arthur Brooks, of the Church of the Incarnation, Madison avenue, performed the ceremony, assisted by the Rev. Dr. D. Parker Morgan, the rector of the Heavenly Rest.

Immediately after, the bridal party was driven to the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Godfrey, at No. 42 West Fifty-seventh street, where a wedding breakfast was served by Sherri. Small tables were placed about the two drawing rooms and also in the dinning room, in which latter apartment the bridal party were seated at one large table. The house was superbly decorated with choice flowers by Thorley, and Lander furnished the music during the feast.

Among the seventy-five or one hundred guests invited, who were relatives and very intimate friends of the Godfrey and Hyde families, present were the Hon. John and Mrs. Wanamaker, Col. and Mrs. Elliott F. Shepard, Miss Louise Shepard, Mr. and Mrs. Calvin S. Brice, Mr. and Mrs. John F. Plummer, Mr and Mrs. J. Hood Wright, Mr. and Mrs. Anthony J. Drexel, Mr and Mrs Halsey, Mr and Mrs. W. G. Choate, Mr. and Mrs. Edward D. Adams, Miss Plummer, Mr. and Mrs. Grosvenor P. Lowery, Mrs. Edgerton, Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Field, Mr. and Mrs. John S. Rutter, Mr. and Mrs. A. D Shepard, Miss Eleanor Shepard, Mr. Jas. F. Closson Mr. and Mrs. John Markle, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hyde, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph S. Decker, Mr. and Mrs. David C. Leech, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Glendenning and Mr. and Mrs. S. Leech. The young couple received many costly and beautiful presents from friends in this city, Philadelphia, London and Paris.

The Mildest Winter Yet.

The weather records for December show that this is likely to be the mildest Winter in the memory of man. Last Winter was an unusually mild one, but even then the average temperature during the month of December was eight degrees lower than it was in the month just past.

The Borough's Taxes.

A statement that has been frequently copied from a Trenton paper recently, to the effect that the School tax rate in North Plainfield is 2.61 on the hundred dollars, is false. North Plainfield's entire tax for borough, school, roads and everything else, is only 2.44. The school tax is only .77.

Prosperity of Warren Mission.

Mr. E. B Ryder, Sec'y of the Warren Mission, on Sunday rendered his report of attendance during the year 1889, which was as follows:

Number of scholars, 518; average attendance during the year for each Sunday, 380; new scholars admitted, 77; scholars left school, 44; net gain, 33.

The Central's New Route.

The N. J. Central Railroad Company, on Friday, commenced running through passenger trains over the Lehigh and Hudson road to Greycourt, thence to the Poughkeepsie bridge. Mail and freight trains are running regularly over this line. The company has established a telegraph office at the junction of the Hudson and Pennsylvania roads, and will build a new depot in a short time.

SEEN FROM AFAR.

What a County Paper has to Say of the Organization of Plainfield's Council.

(From Wednesday's Elizabeth Herald.)

Last evening the city council chamber at Plainfield was crowded to repletion with the expectation that the new members would organize. The crowd were not disappointed and the organization was made complete by the selection of Mr. Elmore D. Moffett, Democrat as president, and Joseph B. Coward, Republican, as clerk. The complexion of the council stands seven Republicans to four Democrats, and it is especially pleasing to see that the Democracy was recognized by the selection of so worthy a person for president.

The next meeting of the council will be held on Monday evening next when petitions for licenses to keep hotels will be received, referred to the proper committees, and as soon as possible, acted upon, it being understood that a majority of the members are in favor of renewing the licenses in Plainfield, thus giving the city a revenue of seven or eight thousand dollars additional, which through the efforts of a few cranks has for the year or so past gone over into North Plainfield, Somerset county, from which it is separated by only a narrow brook.

The better element are in favor of license as it is an undisputed fact that under the no license system upwards of sixty unlicensed places sold liquor from which the city gained no revenue.

FOUR OF A KIND BEAT A FLUSH.

A Good Democrat Will Preside Over the Republican Council of 1890—Last Evening's Organization With the Officers Named by THE PRESS.

As stated exclusively in THE PRESS of Tuesday, the seven Republicans who compose the overwhelming political majority of the Council of 1890, had not agreed in their choice of officers. And at eight o'clock, the hour fixed by the Charter for organization, they were still split wide apart.

Meanwhile the four Democrats, Moffett, Gallup, Hetfield and Spangenberg, were "laying low," holding the balance of power in their hands, and waiting to spring something that would astonish the natives, reflect creditably on their political sagacity, and shake the Republican party from stem to [illegible].

At seven o'clock Councilmen Dunham, Roberts, Rushmore and Smith of the Republicans, met in the office of Mr. Joseph B. Coward ostensibly to hunt for harmony but ready for mutiny Councilmen Newhall and Johnson were too ill to be present, and Councilman Jenkins was accused of staying away because he had promised to vote for both Mr. Coward and Mr. Anthony, as City Clerk.

At the same time the above Republicans were meeting, the four Democrats gathered in the parlor of the Miller Bros., hotel and congratulated one another upon having in their possession the key of the situation. Subsequently they also passed up the darkened stairway of No. 7 Park avenue and disappeared into the seclusion of Mr. Coward's office, but they found no harmony there.

The Republicans were divided on Councilman Newhall for President. Councilmen Smith and Roberts were dead set against electing any man who would not consult with his colleagues beforehand as to the make up of the standing committees. They held that all were equally elected by the people to represent their interests, and that all should have an equal right in the suggestion of the best committeemen to carry out such interests. "No One-man-power in the Chair!" was the battle cry of Messrs Smith and Roberts.

On the other hand Councilmen Dunham and Rushmore held that Mr. Newhall's ability and experience particularly fitted him for the presidency, his labors of the past year in the matter of bringing about the very favorable water works contract that had been secured deserved a reward of honor, and they were most willing to leave the selection of the committees to his good judgment and sense of justice. But they had a battle cry, too. It was, "No Newhall, no Coward!"

At 8:20, when all present adjourned to the City Council room, the fight was still on. Before the meeting was called to order, a few words were passed back and forth by the Republicans in the privacy of a Committee room. Councilman Dunham seized his hat and coat and threatened to leave with Councilman Rushmore, but remained where he was when informed by Councilmen Smith and Roberts that there would be enough to organize without them. Then there was some talk of postponing the organization, but Councilman Smith said, "You may as well fix it tonight. The same condition will as probably occur a week from tonight, as now."

The four Democrats listened but said nothing. The time for their coup d'etat was at hand. As the saying is, "Nobody didn't say nothing more to nobody," and the new Councilmen of 1890 filed into the Council room and took their seats. A crowded house was waiting expectantly as Clerk Leonard called the roll. Present—Councilmen Dunham, Gallup, Hetfield, Moffett, Roberts, Rushmore, Smith and Spangenberg. The body assembled to organize was a tie politically, and those few in the audience who had not read Tuesday's PRESS, thought there would be a deadlock.

Councilman Hetfield, seconded by Councilman Smith, moved that the Council proceed to the election of a President. This was seemingly unanimously carried, as was also a motion to vote by ballot. Councilman Dunham nominated Henry B. Newhall, and was seconded by Councilman Rushmore. Councilman Gallup nominated Elmore D. Moffett, and was seconded by Councilman Hetfield. Messrs Dunham and Hetfield were appointed tellers by Clerk Leonard, and the PRESS reporter's derby was used as the ballot box.

The result was the election of Councilman Moffett as President. Messrs Gallup, Hetfield, Moffett, Roberts, Smith and Spangenberg, cast their ballots for him; while Messrs Dunham and Rushmore voted for Mr. Newhall

President Moffett took the Chair and thanked the Council for the honor conferred upon him. The election of a City Clerk then followed. Messrs Dunham and Rushmore nominated Mr. O. B. Leonard, and Messrs Roberts and Smith nominated Mr. J. B. Coward. The latter was elected by the votes of Messrs. Gallup, Hetfield, Moffett, Roberts, Smith and Spangenberg. Messrs Dunham and Rushmore voted for Mr. Leonard. Mr. Wm. V. Munday, the present janitor, was the only nominee for that office, and was re-elected unanimously.

On motion of Mr. Dunham, the rules of order that governed the Council of 1889, were adopted as the rules of order for 1890. The Clerk was instructed to present the bonds of the City Collector and the City Treasurer at the next meeting, and the Council of 1890 then adjourned until Monday evening, January 13.

The Last Sad Rites.

The funeral service following the death of Miss Florence Louise Elden, who died at the residence of her brother-in-law, Mr. T. E. Hazell, on Duer street, North Plainfield, Thursday morning, took place from the house Friday afternoon at three o'clock Rev. Cornelius Schenck officiated and besides his remarks he offered an impressive prayer. The floral display was exquisite, and included a beautiful pillow. The remains were taken to Portland, Maine, where additional services were held Saturday.

Mrs. Hazell, a sister of the deceased, is lying dangerously ill with pneumonia, the same complaint which resulted in Miss Elden's death.

Good Jim's Contribution to Joe.

(From the Bound Brook Chronicle.)

Mr. James Bemis of Plainfield has contributed to THE CHRONICLE pharmaceutical department a box of salve which is recommended as a sovereign remedy for chronic and other sores.

At a recent dramatic entertainment in Plainfield the ceiling above the stage fell directly upon the head of Mr. Joseph Eder, son of Philip Eder of this place, who carried the principal role. Mr. Eder was fortunately unhurt and actually had the audacity and presence of mind to pass the occurrence off upon the audience as a part of the regular performance.

Faithful as of Old.

Much credit is due to the ex-members of the disbanded No. 3 Engine Company of North Plainfield, who yet worked gratuitously and successfully as of old on Tuesday morning's fire. They greatly helped in keeping the flames from spreading beyond the old carpenter shop, which it was rumored that a woman living on Duer street saw some man set on fire.

SINE DIE.

The Council of 1889 Winds Up Its Business and Unrolls Itself—A False Claim Against the City Left a Legacy to Their Successors—An Engineer Who Will Supervise The Water Works for Less Than Rudolph Hering.

It was about nine o'clock of Saturday evening before the departing Council succeeded in getting a quorum. Messrs Marsh and Newhall were still too sick to attend; Messrs Moffett and Gallup who also belong to the incoming Council, were not interested in the death of their late colleagues; and there was more money for Councilman Jenkins, M. D., in prescribing pellets for his hundred or two La Grippe patients, than in attending Council meetings. The latter was subsequently corralled, however, and induced to fill out a quorum with President Dumont and Messrs Myers, Squires, Erickson and Dunham.

Mr. Erickson presented the Bond of the Water Works Company of Plainfield; the Contract duly executed; and a certified copy of the Certificate of Incorporation The Bond was for $50,000, and signed by James Moore, Chief Engineer of the Central Railroad Company; Charles E. Moore, his son, one of the contractors to whom the water works franchise has been given; and ex-Congressman John Kean, Jr.

This Bond after examination by every member of the Council present; and endorsed as correct in form by Corporation Counsel Marsh; was referred back to the Council and approved by a unanimous vote.

The contract was then signed by Mayor Male on the part of the city, and attested by City Clerk Leonard.

Mr. J J. Henderson, C. E., a resident of Rock View avenue, sent a communication to the Council stating that on November 25, he had made application to Councilman Newhall. for the position of Supervising Engineer in the construction of the Plainfield water works. With such application he had presented recommendations of the very best regarding his capability and fitness. He had supposed the application would at least have been submitted to the Council, but as it was not he now addressed that body directly. He fixed his compensation at $300 per month.

President Dumont stated that the Council had already entered into a contract with Mr. Hering to do the work specified. Thereupon on motion, the communication was filed.

Messrs Newhall and Erickson submitted a communication in the handwriting of the Corporation Counsel, regarding a false claim of T. W. Morrison which the City Clerk had refused to audit, but which nobody else had had the sand to refuse to pay in so many words. The ostensible writers of the communication said that they had been so busy for many weeks on the water works' matter, they had had no time to look into the correctness of the claim nor reach any conclusion regarding it, so it was returned to the Council with the recommendation that it be referred to the Council of 1890 for further action.

The minutes of the meeting were read by the Clerk and approved. The President then stated he would cheerfully entertain a motion to adjourn sine die, which was made and unanimously carried.

INVENTOR CLAY'S DEATH.

He Was Too Busy to See a Doctor.

Robert J. Clay, whose death in this city was told of in THE PRESS, Saturday, was well known in the New York jewelry trade and manufacturing circles. He had an inventive mind and made many useful improvements, and was awarded more than sixty patents by the United States Patent office. Mr. Clay was the organizer and promoter of many manufacturing industries, which have attained great success. His life was very active until the day of his death, and by careful business prudence he amassed a large estate.

A few days before his death, he stopped in the baggage room of the Plainfield station, on his way to New York, and told Mr. Garretson that he felt very bad and that he supposed he had "the grip." He was advised to go home and see a doctor, but he said he was too busy.

Death of William Moore.

At his home on East Second street, about five o'clock Sunday morning, occurred the death of Mr. William Moore, better known as "Uncle Billy." He was 77 years of age, and his illness only dated back for a period of about four days. He leaves a wife and one son.

On Tuesday of last week, Mr. Moore while working about the barn in his shirt sleeves, contracted a severe cold which the next day developed into pneumonia and subsequently resulted in his death.

Mr. Moore was born in the County Limerick, Ireland, in the year 1813, and he came to this country when but sixteen years of age, working as a laborer for sixty cents a day. About thirty-five years ago he associated himself with Judge Reilly and built the Broad Mountain Railroad in Pennsylvania. Since that time he has been successful financially, and at the time of his death he leaves a fortune variously estimated at from $250,000 to $300,000, mostly in real estate in this city, Rahway, Paterson, Somerville and Rutherford, besides owning an eighth interest in 93,000 acres of land in Florida. The other railroad ventures in which Mr. Moore was interested, was the building of the Mahoney and Ashland Railroad, a branch of the North Cumberland Railroad, the Boston, Hartford and Erie Road, now known as the New England Road, from New Town to Bennett's Bridge; the Connecticut Western Railroad from Tarriville to Scotland, a branch of the Holyoke & Westfield Railroad from Thompsonville to Holyoke. His latest contracts were the building of the High Bridge Branch of the New Jersey Central Railroad which he completed in 1875, clearing, it is said, $75,000 on the contract, and the Brighton Beach Road from Atlantic avenue, Brooklyn, to the Beach, which was completed in 1879.

He also built the water works in Baltimore, and he was interested in several other large water works contracts.

Mr. Moore was both well and favorably known all over the State. At the race track he was a familiar figure, and his knowledge of horse racing was envied by those who knew him.

Tuesday Morning's Fire.

At a quarter after one o'clock Tuesday morning fire was discovered in the East corner of Mr. Charles Bock's bottling establishment on Emily street, North Plainfield. The fire spread rapidly, and in a short time the entire structure was enveloped in flames. No. 1 Engine Company of the Borough located their apparatus on the Race street well, and did excellent service in keeping the fire from spreading to nearby buildings. The building was totally destroyed, together with the contents.

A valuable horse owned by Mr. Andrew Love, stabled in the building was rescued with much difficulty by Messrs. H. K. Voorhees and Michael Koller.

The building was owned by Mr. Koller, and was worth about $1,000. It was insured for $400. Mr. Bock estimates his loss on the contents at $1,800, and he was insured to the extent of $500.

The fire was undoubtedly of incendiary origin, as there was no fire in the stove which serves to heat the place. Mr. Bock says the fire was evidently started by some one through pure deviltry or out of spite. About two years ago his Second street residence and saloon were destroyed by fire.

TO-NIGHT'S ORGANIZATION.

Will the New Council Make any "Bad Breaks" in Its Beginning.

[From The Daily Press, Jan. 6.]

At eight o'clock this evening the members of the Common Council of 1890 are expected to meet and organize by the election of a President and a City Clerk. Whether or not they will do so, and how harmonious to themselves and how satisfactory to the people, will be their choice of officers, remains to be seen.

The Council politically stands—Republicans, 7; Democrats, 4. But although their majority is so large, the former are having a hard time choosing a President and Clerk. Up to this moment the matter is as undecided as it was election day.

Councilman Newhall was the first and oftenest spoken of for President. He had the experience, dignity and prestige. It seemed beyond a doubt that he would be lifted right in the chair without a murmur, and as Mr. Joseph B. Coward's right to the City Clerkship as a reward for his long and faithful service to his party, was just as unanimously assented to, a speedy and harmonious organization was to be expected.

But somebody broke the slate. The Clerkship is still Mr. Coward's. The candidacy of Mr. E. E. Anthony—reported exclusively in THE PRESS of some days ago—has not developed strength, and Mr. Eugene V. Lorton, the latest aspirant, has not the requisite "pull," either. So unless some change of plan is adopted between six and eight o'clock this evening, City Clerk Coward will succeed City Clerk Leonard.

But Mr. Newhall's chances for the Presidency have grown very slim in the past few days. Why this is so is known only to those on the inside. Maybe he insisted on choosing the standing committees to suit himself, and announcing them only after his election. Therefore it might have been feared by the license-men that he would appoint only no-license Councilmen on the License Committee; or the incomers feared he would give all the best places on important committees to the hold-overs, and nominate the latter to Alms, Auditing, Street Light and Ordinance committees.

However it is futile guessing why Newhall stock is quoted low, just now, and why those on the inside are taking none in his selection. This evening at seven o'clock the Republican Councilmen will meet together in seclusion and decide on their officers for 1890 if they can. At half-past seven the Democratic Councilmen will be invited in, but not, however, to be offered anything in the way of an office. All hands will then adjourn to the Council room and the result of their deliberations made known.

Right here if THE PRESS may be allowed a suggestion, wouldn't it be a very handsome thing on the part of the Republicans to give the Presidency to their friends the enemy? What's the matter with Councilman Moffett for the chair? This is worth thinking about. He would fill it to the advantage of the city, with credit to the Council and honor to himself

WARMLY WELCOMED.

The Rev. Mr. Skellenger Received With Words of Cheer.

There was a large and enthusiastic gathering of the people of the Fourth Presbyterian church of Albany, last Thursday evening in its chapel to welcome the Rev D. W. Skellenger, who has gone from Dunellen to aid the Rev. A. V. V. Raymond, formerly of this city, in his work. Words of welcome were spoken by the Rev. Dr. Raymond, Henry D. Enos in behalf of the Viaduct Mission, Abram Lansing of the Y. P. S. C. E.; A. S. Kibbee of the home school, and the Rev. Mr. Dooly.

Mr. Skellenger's response was in cordial sympathy with the spirit of the occasion. Music, flowers and evergreen decorations, with abundant refreshments, furnished by the ladies of the church, added much to the enjoyment of the evening.

Mr. Skellenger will enter upon his work with the cordial support of the church and congregation, and hearty well wishes from his hosts of friends here.

The Week of Prayer.

The above will be observed in the Trinity Reformed church as follows:

Monday, Jan. 6—Tarry Until—Luke 24: 49; Acts 1-14.

Tuesday, Jan. 7—The Holy Spirit Promised—John 14: 16-17.

A banquet followed the installation.

Funeral of Mr. Wm. Moore.

The last sad rites following the death of the late William Moore, who died early on Sunday morning, took place from St. Mary's church Tuesday, at 10:30 A. M. The church was comfortably filled with the relatives and friends of the deceased, many of the latter being the older residents of this city.

Rev. Father Smyth was the celebrant of the solemn high mass, assisted by Rev. Father Stafford as deacon, and Rev. Father Freeston of North Plainfield, as sub-deacon. A choir of male and female voices from Father Corrigan's church at Elizabeth, furnished special music for the occasion.

The pall-bearers were: James Smith of Easton; John H. Staats of Somerville; H. Rehill and Patrick Sheridan of Elizabeth; D. S. Roberts, Jas. Whalen, Thaddeus Horan, and Peter Flynn, Sr., of this city. Interment was made in St Mary's cemetery.

Reform Hall Meeting.

A fair sized audience met in Reform Hall last evening, but owing to sudden sickness, the appointed speaker for the occasion was prevented from attending. President Harper and George M. Angleman filled the gap by delivering short addresses, in course of which they both vigorously upheld the importance of total abstinence from all kinds of intoxicating liquor as being the only safe foundation to stand upon. Five came forward and subscribed to the pledge. Mr. Vanderbeek's choir included Mrs. Shotwell and Mr E. D. Titsworth who kindly took the places of Mr and Mrs. King, who were unavoidably absent.

The President made the following announcements:

On Thursday evening the newly elected officers of the Reform Club will be duly installed, and a full attendance thereat is requested.

Next Sunday evening Mr. Samuel A Haines will deliver in Reform Hall his able and eloquent address on "Responsibility."

The meeting closed with the Doxology.

The NEW YORK Sun.
1890.
Some people agree with THE SUN's opinions about men and things and some people don't; but everybody likes to get hold of the newspaper which is never dull and never afraid to speak its mind.
Democrats know that for twenty years THE SUN has fought in the front line for Democratic principles, never wavering or weakening in its loyalty to the true interests of the party it serves with fearless intelligence and disinterested vigor. At times opinions have differed as to the best means of accomplishing the common purpose; it is not THE SUN's fault if it has seen further into the millstone.
Eighteen hundred and ninety is the year that will probably determine the result of the Presidential election of 1892, and perhaps the fortunes of the Democracy for the rest of the century. Victory in 1892 is a duty, and the beginning of 1890 is the best time to start out in company with THE SUN.

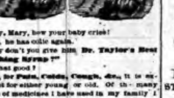
BEFORE TAKING. AFTER TAKING.



Why, Mary, how your baby cries!
Yes, he has colic again.
Why don't you give him Dr. Taylor's Best Soothing Syrup?"
Is that good?
Yes, for Pain, Colds, Coughs, &c., it is excellent for either young or old. Of the many kinds of medicines I have used in my family I have found none to equal it.
Thank you, Jane. I will try it. Margaret Ann, go as soon as you can to either REYNOLDS', or SHAW'S Drug Store, and get a bottle of Dr Taylor's Soothing Syrup. 1-3-6m

DEATHS.

BORST.—In North Plainfield, Jan 5, of effusion of blood on the brain, John W. Borst, aged 34 years.

WEBER—In this city Jan. 3, suddenly, S. Luvina, wife of Herman C. Weber, in her 29th year.

When baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she was a Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

The BREATH of a chronic catarrh patient is often so offensive that he becomes an object of disgust. After a time ulceration sets in, the spongy bones are attacked and frequently entirely destroyed. A constant source of discomfort is the dripping of the purulent secretions into the throat, sometimes producing inveterate bronchitis which in its turn has been the exciting cause of pulmonary disease. The brilliant results which have attended its use for years past properly designate Ely's Cream Balm as by far the best and only cure.

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—Oh, for a Y. M. C. A. building.

—Oh! could we but have that freight house moved away.

—The passenger traffic on the Central railroad is said to have doubled in the past year.

—A large flock of blackbirds passed over the city, early on Monday, going to the Northward.

—Few persons in this city have escaped a severe cold this Winter, and the latter has not yet fairly begun.

—The Lenten season, says an exchange, commences this year earlier than usual. Ash Wednesday will fall on Feb. 1[illegible].

—There were forty-five pupils present at the night school held in the High school building, Wednesday evening.

—The unsettled condition of the weather for the past few weeks, the doctors say, is the cause of so much sickness.

—The physicians of the city are now overworked in attending to the numerous cases of pneumonia, resulting from La Grippe.

—One of the constables selected as court officers for the January term at Elizabeth, Wednesday, was Amos Moffett of this city.

—In one of the classes in the parochial school, Tuesday, out of a total enrollment of [illegible] pupils, only 21 responded to the roll call.

—The new loan for the Central Railroad Company has been subscribed at a premium of [illegible]. The interest only aggregates about four per cent.

—The thirty-fourth annual meeting of the New Jersey Editorial Association will be held at the State House, Trenton, on Monday, February 3, at 11 a. m.

—At the morning session in the public schools, Tuesday, there were 296 pupils absent, and in the afternoon 275 were absent. Two teachers were also on the sick list.

—The sensational report published in the New York morning papers Monday referring to a certain Plainfielder dying at Arlington from leprosy, is false in every particular.

—The husband of a Third Ward lady who hung up her stocking on New Year's eve, considered that the most appropriate gift would be the title to a tract of land in Texas.

—It is quite probable that the night school for girls will be discontinued, as the attendance is not large enough to pay the teacher's salary. The attendance Tuesday night was [illegible].

—The Fireman's Herald published in New York, says: "Plainfield needs more hose," but it does not state whether the kind needed is for fire department purposes or for foot wear.

—The members of Cypress Commandery, No. 6, K. T., of this city, went to Elizabeth on New Year's evening and attended a reception given by Lincoln Lodge, No. 7, F. and A. M., of that city.

—In the Congregational church, prayer meeting will be held every evening this week except Saturday evening. The pastor earnestly desires that the members of the congregation will take pains and attend.

—The Newark M. E. Conference, of which Plainfield is a part, will be held in the Centenary church, Newark, commencing Wednesday, April [illegible], presided over by Bishop John P. Newman, D. D., LL. D.

—An agent from the Northern Insurance company of England, was in the city on Saturday, and satisfactorily settled the claim for damages to Mr. John Chandler's furniture which was occasioned by the recent fire.

—A Christmas and New Year's entertainment combined will be given by the Sunday school of the First Church of Christ at Reform Hall to-night. The entertainment will be free, and a good time is expected.

—Chief Carey directed his attention [illegible] to the complaints made that some [illegible] on the [illegible] street railroad bridge and frighten school girls who pass by shouting at them. The Chief says the offence shall cease.

—Prof. Wm. R. Harper, who is to lecture on Bible study in the Crescent Avenue church January 31, represented Yale University at the recent annual meeting of the Chicago Yale Club in that city, and spoke on "Yale's Poverty."

—Some comment has been made upon the action of the City Council in engaging the services of a New York engineer to superintend the construction of a water works system here when there are four competent engineers residing in this city.

—Justice V. W. Nash collected about $100 more of the dog taxes, Thursday, but there is yet a considerable amount due the city for delinquent taxes. One man whom the justice called upon, stubbornly refused to make any provision for even the payment of a part of his bill, until threatened with arrest.

—Special Officer James Babbitt would like to know who is responsible for his services during the past three and a half years that he has performed police duty in the neighborhood of Mt. Olive Baptist church on Sunday nights. He says he was detailed to do duty there, but he has never been paid for his services.

—The Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias have each leased a lodge room in the new Hand building on West Second street, each lease to run for a period of five years. Mr. Nathan Guttman has also leased one of the stores on the ground floor, which he will open as a wholesale and retail [illegible] store.

—A hopeful exchange remarks: Three years hence it will be a hard task to find a cigarette on sale. The craze has gone with the toy pistol, the young men of the country having at last been convinced of their baneful effects upon the system. One-fourth of the cases of insanity it is said, were traced directly to cigarettes.

—A drunken coachman who is employed by a family living on Grant avenue, was driving recklessly about the city on Friday when Officer Grant ordered the man to halt. Chief Carey subsequently took the fellow to the station house, where he now languishes, and an officer was detailed to drive the team home.

Mr. Chandler's Additional Loss.

Included in the loss sustained by Mr. John Chandler, by the burning of his dwelling house, recently, and upon which there was no insurance, was a collection of books which Mr. Chandler had been gathering for the past thirty-five years. The books treated almost entirely upon work similar to that in which the owner is engaged, and one of the books, printed in 1817, Mr. Chandler says he would not have lost for $100.

The Days are Growing Longer.

As THE PRESS has before stated the shortest day in the year was on Saturday, Dec. 21, when the day's length was nine hours and eight minutes. Since Christmas the "Clerk of the Weather" has shifted the machinery so as to lengthen the days at the rate of about seventy-five seconds, until the 21st of June, when the day is the longest of the year. The sun from Christmas on, using the common phrase, returns Northward to drive back the Winter, but the latter has acquired some momentum and for a time the contest will be unequal.

PERSONALIA.

Mr. John D. Titsworth is very sick with pneumonia at his home on Madison avenue.

Miss Ida Musgrave, of Washington Park, is visiting friends in Washington, D. C.

Ex-Councilman Ted A. Regnolle is recovering from his recent attack of pneumonia.

Abbie, wife of Cutler Dobbler of Terrill Road, died Wednesday morning, aged eighty years.

Mr. A. T. March of New York city is spending a few days with his mother on West Fifth street.

Mr. Samuel Allen of Mountain avenue, entertained his friends at his residence, Tuesday evening.

Mr. Joseph P. Miller, one of the popular proprietors of Laing's Hotel is among the latest to be confined to the house by illness.

Miss Louise Green will return to Wellesley College on Wednesday, after spending the holidays with her mother in this city.

The death is announced of Robert J. Clay, which occurred at his home No. 56 East Fifth street, on Saturday, from pneumonia.

Miss Lizzie Drane and Miss Gertie Darby of New York are visiting the Misses Jennie and Julia Allen of Duer street, North Plainfield.

Miss Sadie Stillman of Westerly, R. I., is visiting Miss Ernestine Smith of New street, and also Miss Mary, daughter of Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis.

At her home, No. 19 Liberty street, Tuesday morning, occurred the death of Miss Josie Fowler, daughter of Mr. Jesse Fowler, aged twenty-two years.

Mr. Thomas Martin, of Deckertown, N. J., returned home Tuesday after spending three weeks with relatives in this city, North Plainfield and Dunellen.

The regular sewing meeting of the Woman's Home Missionary Society will be held at Mrs. H. B. Newhall's, 20 East Seventh street, Friday at 2 o'clock.

Mr. Henry T. Smith, of Broadway, has purchased a beautiful little house of Mr. Loizeaux, on Bay street, and expects to take possession about the first of February.

It is understood that the will of the late William Moore, leaves the bulk, if not the entire estate to his wife. The will, it is said, was drawn up but two days previous to his death.

Miss Della, daughter of Officer Geo. W. Grant, was tendered a birthday party by her parents, at the latter's residence on West Seventh street, Thursday from four until seven o'clock P. M.

Miss Gussie Bagot, of Schermerhorn street, Brooklyn, N. Y., who is always a welcome guest, is spending the week among her large circle of relatives and friends in this city and North Plainfield.

Messrs Ernest R. Ackerman, Joseph W. Gerott, Benj. R. Force and Jos. W. Santoop are the members of the Grand Jury from this city, sworn in at the January term of court which opened in Elizabeth, Wednesday.

Letters from Mrs. Jacob Kirkner in Europe state that despite cold weather and snow throughout Germany, La Grippe is alarmingly prevalent. The younger Miss Kirkner who has been very sick, is steadily recovering.

Prof. Wm. R. Harper, of Yale, who is to lecture in Plainfield on January 31, recently declined the offer of the Presidency of a Western University in order that he might continue as instructor in Bible study in Yale.

Mr. Edward B. Ryder of this city, representing the high grade sporting goods firm of Merwin, Hulbert, & Co., of No. 26 West 23 street, New York, will start on Thursday for a five weeks trip in the South, stopping at Richmond and Jacksonville.

The condition of Miss Burt, formerly a teacher in the public schools in this city, who is now confined in a hospital in New York, is but little improved, and the physicians in charge do not think that she will be able to leave that institution before Summer.

It is reported that upon their return from their wedding trip, Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Hyde—nee Miss Edith Godfrey—will reside on Madison avenue, New York. Among the wedding presents noted was a check for $100,000 to the bride from her father.

The marriage is announced of Mr. George Wyckoff and Miss Mamie McCord, both of this city, which occurred at the residence of the bride's parents at Deckertown, N. Y., on New Year's Day, Rev. Mr. Thorben officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Wyckoff will reside in this city.

Miss Ella Conkey was agreeably surprised by a few of her near friends and acquaintances, at the home of her aunt, Mrs. N. W. French on West Fourth street, Friday night. The guests spent a night of uninterrupted pleasure, interspersed only with the serving of refreshments.

The death is announced of John W. Hoose, which occurred at his home in North Plainfield, Sunday, from effusion of liquid on the brain. The deceased was 24 years of age. The funeral took place from the house Monday night at 8 o'clock. Interment at Wellsboro, Pa.

Mr. Robert Gorton, basso, and Mrs. E. H. Bird, contralto, members of Trinity Reformed church choir, were unable to keep their engagements Sunday on account of illness. Their places were ably filled by Mr. A. Thomas and Miss N. Randolph, the latter a member of the Seventh Day Baptist church choir.

Weekly letters are received from Mr. Frank Vermeule of this city, who is stationed for the Winter at Fort Brown, in the extreme Southern end of Texas. He reports the climate there as being delightful, with no rain for weeks. On Christmas day the soldiers were treated to a turkey dinner with all the holiday accompaniments.

The funeral of the late John A. Laible, Jr., who died on Sunday, took place from the house, corner of Somerset and Race streets, North Plainfield, Wednesday, at 2 o'clock, P. M., Rev. C. L. Goodrich, officiating. The members of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics were present in a body. Interment was made in the Methodist cemetery.

The funeral of the late Rev. William Patton, father of Mr. Wm. L. Patton, of East Ninth street, this city, who died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Martin Welles, at Westfield, early on Tuesday of last week, took place from the Congregational church there Thursday afternoon, at 2:45 o'clock. Rev. Cornelius Patton, the pastor, who is also a son of the deceased, officiated.

Mr. Chas. Bullman, of Third place, will sail for Colon, Friday, en route for Buenaventura, the principal port of Colombia, on the Pacific. From Buenaventura he will go to the interior of El Choco, traveling in a canoe the entire trip of from ten to fifteen days. A journey to Popayan, the capital of Cauca, is also contemplated by Mr. Bullman. One of the English Admiralty charts especially mentions this place for the excellence of its iced cream, the ice being brought by Indians from the neighboring peaks of the Andes. To reach Popayan 8 or 10 days in the saddle are required.

Mrs. Abigail Lorton, mother of Eugene V. Lorton, of this city, died at 2:30 o'clock on Friday, at her home in Jamaica, L. I. She was 90 years of age on Christmas day. Four brothers of Mrs. Lorton were in the war of 1812, only one of whom was killed. She had four sons in the late civil war, and only one of those was killed. The coincidence is further remarkable because the four brothers were the same age as the four sons, when they enlisted.

Mrs. Althea R., wife of Mr. Hiram H. DeCamp, passed away quietly on Sunday last at her home in Chester, N. J., after a lingering illness and much suffering from heart trouble. Mrs. DeCamp was the only surviving sister of Mr. John W. Laing of this city, and had many friends and acquaintances in this vicinity, where she was born. She leaves a husband, two sons, John and Hiram, and one daughter, Mrs. Clifford DeMott of New York city, to mourn her loss.

There was a pleasant gathering of members of the congregation of the Clinton Square Presbyterian church at Albany, the other evening, in the lecture room. During the evening Elder John McEwan addressed the popular pastor, the Rev Charles E. Dunn, son of Mr. S. F. Dunn, of this city, and concluded by presenting him on behalf of the congregation with an elegant gold watch and chain valued at over $300. The recipient was entirely surprised. He responded in a feeling manner.

CHRISTMAS TREE AND FESTIVAL.

The Germans Commemorate Christmastide in a Commendable Manner—Presents for All, Old and Young.

The Christmas tree and festival of the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein was held in the Gesang and Turner Hall, on New Year's Eve., and to say that all the preliminary arrangements were carried out in every detail, goes without mention. The committee who had the entertainment in charge consisted of the following persons:

Ladies—Mrs. Bohnacker, President; Mrs. Krone, Secretary; Mrs. Danckias, Treasurer; and Mrs. Fisher and Mrs. Wunderlick.

Gentlemen—Joseph Bremer, President; M. Heubner, Secretary, and Eugene Hoerster. The Reception Committee were Messrs. H. Haurand and Charles Dressolt. Mr. Chas. Myer was Floor Manager.

At 9:30 P. M., Mr. Martin Heubner, the teacher, had the scholars of the German school, 76 in number, march up before a heavily ladened tree, and each pupil received a gift of more than nominal value. After a few recitations by the pupils, President Weigman on behalf of the Society presented Mr. Heubner with a box of choice cigars and a meerschaum holder, to which the recipient of the gift responded ably.

At eleven o'clock, all the children in the hall got a present, and the ladies were also given candy and oranges. Dancing followed until an unusually late—or rather early—hour.

What!

(From the Elizabeth Journal.)

Plainfield has decided to have water works. But what under the sun has Plainfield been having for the past two or three years under prohibition?

The Biggest Score Yet.

D. W. Littell, of the Crescent League, surpassed on Saturday, all past scores by rolling 247 with 8 strikes and 2 spares. This takes the cup, and probably will be the top score in the Club for many months.

No Monument Chosen Yet.

As either influenza or the Choral Society's concert was claiming the attention of the members of the Soldiers Monument Committee, the stated meeting of Thursday to view other plans was adjourned for one week.

Death of Mrs. Herman Weber.

At her home on West Front street, about 7 o'clock Thursday night, occurred the death of S. Lovina Weber, wife of Mr. Herman C. Weber, in the 27th year of her age. The funeral took place from the late home of the deceased, No. 120 West Front street, on Sunday at 2:30 P. M.

Pansies on New Year's Day.

To THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—It may be worth putting on record, in regard to this remarkable Winter of 1889-1890, that here in Plainfield, in the open grounds of one of your readers, pansies are blooming on the first day of January.

Moreover, there has been no day through this Autumn and Winter when those modest beauties have not greeted us from the beds where they have grown and flowered since early Spring, and that without any extra covering or care.

REYNOLDS.

January 1, 1890.

Christmas Festival of the Unitarians.

The last of the Sunday school entertainments of the Christmas season was that of the Unitarians, which took place on New Year's afternoon. A handsomely trimmed Christmas tree and other symbols of the season adorned the church parlors, which were quite too small to accommodate comfortably the company which met to enjoy the festivities.

The programme embraced several songs and recitations by the children and a charming original "Christmas Story in Rhyme," by the pastor, the Rev. W. P. Tilden. The first gift bestowed was a token of esteem presented in a few appropriate words, in behalf of the school, by the Superintendent, H. B. Wells, to His Honor, Mayor Male, the generous patron of the new society. This was followed by the entrance of Santa Claus in a striking costume, who brought forth from his well filled pack a present for each pupil of the school and, to add to the jollity of the occasion, a toy for every one present. Then the tree was stripped of its stocking-shaped ornaments that were filled with confections and pop-corn, and all, young and old, shared in the distribution of them.

Dr. Oliver's Mysterious Disappearance.

Dr. Allen H. Oliver, Superintendent of the Sunday School of All Saints' Episcopal church, at Fanwood, has disappeared. The doctor built a house near the station, but his business was not remunerative. While his wife was visiting relatives Dr. Oliver left the village. Mrs. Oliver went to live with her mother near Wilkesbarre, Pa. It is believed that business troubles are the cause of his sudden retirement.

When a PRESS reporter called at the doctor's house, on Monday, which is situated on a slight knoll less than a hundred yards Northwest from the station, he found a stranger in charge. The latter said that he came from Wilkesbarre that day with instructions from General Paul A. Oliver, of New York, to pack the household goods preparatory to sending them away. The house, which is nicely furnished, has been vacant since December 16, on which day the doctor left Fanwood. Mrs. Oliver went home some two months ago.

A rumor was afloat at Fanwood, some little time since, coupling the doctor with a pretty village maiden, and it is thought by some that this was the cause of his mysterious disappearance, and also the cause of his wife going home.

The household effects are being prepared for shipment, but it will probably be several days before the house will be vacated. The premises belong to the Land Improvement Company. Gen'l Oliver, the missing one's uncle, has paid all the Doctor's outstanding indebtedness in the town.

CHORUS, SOLOISTS AND ORCHESTRA IN A GRAND PROGRAMME.

The Plainfield Choral Society Gives its Opening Concert of the Season—An Audience of Plainfield's Best People in Evening Dress—The Rendition Vastly Pleasing.

The first private concert of the Plainfield Choral Society of this season, was given at Music Hall, Thursday, before a gathering of subscribers that included all the best people. Evening dress prevailed and the effect was particularly pleasing, while the compliment to the Society was as marked as it was well deserved.

Mr. R. J. Fitzhugh was the conductor as of past seasons, and the Society was assisted for the occasion by Madame Henriette Beebe-Lawton, Soprano, Miss Marion S. Weed, Contralto, Mr. Wm. H. Lawton, Tenor, Mr. Carl E. Dufft, Baritone, Miss Jessie Utter, Accompanist, and an orchestra from the New York Philharmonic Society, which included an unnecessary drum that was off the key.

The principal feature of the programme was Gaul's fine work, "The Holy City." Although in places it lacks depth and breadth, never was a musical composition given in Plainfield so good in so many of its parts, and with words throughout so beautiful. The instrumental introductions to the first and second parts, "Contemplation," and "Adoration," were exquisite, but as a whole the orchestra was uncertain in several places, and the trumpet coming in out of tune threw the chorus out in their opening, "No Shadows Yonder," and spoiled what would otherwise have been a fine effect.

The Chorus, although somewhat lessened in numbers by sickness, showed care and perseverance on the part of Mr. Fitzhugh in their training. The attacks were well made and the shading excellent. The parts were also well balanced, although the sopranos might have been thought a little too strong on one or two occasions. In "The Holy City," the chorus that closed the first part, "Thine is the Kingdom," was probably the finest; although "Let the Heavens Rejoice," a double chorus and fugue, and the finale, "Great and Marvelous are Thy Works," a heavy chorus and fugue, were very well sung.

Those who sang the special parts of Gaul's work, were Mrs. Lawton, Miss Weed, Mrs. Asa Collier, Miss Julia Ketcham and Messrs. Lawton and Dufft. The quartette for female voices sung by those above mentioned, was one of the evening's gems. Mrs. Lawton's solos, however, were not well received and did not deserve to be. She showed her possession of a perfect method but a passe voice. She improved somewhat on her first appearance as the programme continued, and in her duett with Miss Weed, "They Shall Hunger no More," the blending of the voices was most agreeable.

Miss Weed's voice is a fresh, rich contralto, that everybody present decidedly approved of. Her singing of Goring Thomas' "Summer Night," called forth such loud and persevering applause that she was compelled to give another, Becker's "Spring Song." Her solo, "Eye Hath Not Seen," in "The Holy City," was an exquisite thing and perfectly sung; and another, "Come Ye Blessed," was beautifully rendered by her followed by an unaccompanied quartette by the principal soloists, well sung. Mr. Lawton's voice is rather good though not remarkably sweet. He received a recall to his solo in the first part, but in his modesty he had not provided an encore piece. His solo, "My Soul is Athirst for God," in "The Holy City," was especially fine.

Mr. Dufft, who THE PRESS has had occasion before to commend, has a voice of fine quality. His selections in the beginning of the evening, however, were not calculated to show off such a voice as his, and were also too quiet to awaken any response from a naturally cold audience so early in the programme. But his solo in "The Holy City," with the chorus "Holy, Holy!" sung by the Chorus pianissimo, thoroughly aroused the enthusiasm of all and called forth an involuntary applause.

Of the part songs and choruses that composed the first part, Dudley Buck's "Hymn to Music" can alone claim any personal character. Part songs are seemingly all made over the same last, but the one spoken of above is rather a classical composition. It was well sung, too, but appreciated only by those who make such music a study. The basso part was most difficult but rendered even better than they themselves expected. "Love and Summer," a part song by John E. West, was a most charming thing that so delighted the audience its repetition was demanded and accorded.

The Society is favored in having an accompanist among its members so valuable as Miss Utter. She displayed her talent in that direction in playing perfectly from the orchestral score, the piano part of "The Holy City" without any previous rehearsal, and also in playing at sight the difficult accompaniment to Reinhold Becker's "Spring Song" a piece with which she was unfamiliar. The piano used, however, was a wretched one, and to a highly tempered ear the instrument at times marred things considerably.

The officers of this year's society as already published in THE PRESS, are:

President—W. W. Howland.
Vice President—C. W. McCutchen.
Secretary—Nelson Runyon.
Treasurer—Wm. T. Kaufman.

A REMARKABLE RECORD.

An Official Report of the Weather in Plainfield for 1889.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—The following, from the report made from Plainfield to the State Weather Service, and from thence to the Chief Signal Officer, U. S. A., Washington City, is in reply to your request for data concerning clear days of the year past (1889). There were recorded 175 clear days; 108 cloudy days; and 82 fair days. The Signal Service instructs its observers to record the state of the weather at each observation as clear, when the sky is not more than three-tenths covered with clouds; fair, if from three-fourths to seven-tenths covered; cloudy, when more than seven-tenths covered.

It may be of interest, also, to know that appreciable precipitation, that is, more than .01 inch, occurred on 110 days. The rainfall, with which is included melted snow, was 52.37 inches. The total snow fall was 14 inches. The average temperature, from maximum, minimum and the mean of tri-daily observations was for January, February and March, 35.12 degrees Fahrenheit; April, May and June, 60 22; July, August and September, 69.08; October, November and December, 43.78; and, for the year, 52 05. The maximum temperature occurred on the 8th of July, 92.00; the minimum, one degree below zero on the 24th of February. Frost was recorded on 26 days; thunder storms on 17. Christmas day was the warmest day in December, and sixteen degrees warmer than the Christmas of 1888, also called unusually warm. The prevailing winds of Fall and Winter were from the North; of Spring and Summer, East.

Respectfully,
M. S. SIMPSON, M. D.

Officers Installed.

D. D. G. C., Chapman, assisted by Past District Deputy John Charles and other officers, installed the officers-elect of Perseverance Lodge, No. 74, K. of P., Friday. Reports were also read showing the lodge to be in a prosperous condition in membership as well as in finances.

The new Pythian hall, in the Hand building on Second street, will be ready for occupancy on April 1, and it is proposed to furnish it so that it shall be the best Castle Hall in this section. The Charter of the lodge has been ordered draped for a period of six days in memory of Justus H. Rathbone, the founder of the Order, who died recently.

Election of Officers.

Plainfield Lodge, No. 366, Order of Tonti, met on Saturday evening and elected the following officers for the ensuing year:

Past President—Geo. E. Stillman.
President—W. R. Codington.
Vice President—J. H. Hubbard.
Secretary—J. C. Randall.
Treasurer—F. A. Tignham.
Chaplain—Rev. C. Schenck.
Marshal—Edwin D. Finck.
Guard—Thos. B. Gardner.
Sentinel—L. T. Titsworth.
Trustees—Robt Gotshall, E. W. Titsworth, L. A. Hummer.

The officers will be installed on the 4th Thursday in January, when it is expected that one of the Supreme officers will be present and conduct the exercises. Three new members will be initiated into the Order on Thursday evening next.

AN UNBIASED COURT.

No Saloon License for Linke.

The Court at Somerville, on Friday, very properly refused to grant Frank Linke, of Somerset street, North Plainfield, a saloon license. Judges Magie, Bartine, Jamison and Ten Eyck were all present, and it being shown that Linke who has a bottler's license, permitted beer to be drunk about his premises—although outside his building and out of his sight—application for a saloon license was refused.

R. V. Lindabury appeared for the applicant and Borough Counsel Charles A. Reed against the application. Fifteen witnesses were examined on both sides of the case. On cross-examination Linke asserted it was none of his business where his customers drank the beer after they left his place. The Court informed him differently.

The Camera Club Exhibition.

The second annual public exhibition of their work will be given by the members of the Plainfield Camera Club in the Y. M. C. A., rooms, beginning on Thursday evening, January 30.

The first evening the display will be on view to members of the Y. M. C. A., exclusively, but on all subsequent evenings the public will be welcome.

ST. JOSEPH'S CHURCH FINANCES.

The North Plainfield Parish in a Flourishing Condition—Over $2,000 of the Funded Debt Paid in 1889.

The financial statement of St. Joseph's R. C. church of North Plainfield, for the past year as made by the Rev. Nicholas M. Freeman, rector, and Messrs Michael Powers and James Hurley, trustees, is as given in full below.

The prosperity of the church financially under the careful management and economy of those gentlemen, is plainly shown by the figures. Over two thousand dollars have been paid on the church debt alone. The figures are as follows:

You Can Mail Letters on the Train.

(From the Somerville Gazette.)

The Pennsylvania Railroad has recently issued an order to the effect that hereafter no employe of that company will be allowed to mail a letter on the train. This is done to discourage a growing custom and one that is not allowable by the post office authorities. So many people take mail matter to the depot and entrust it to any employe who will be kind enough to handle it. Hence it is thought by not allowing employees to be mail carriers the practice will be abolished.—Exchange.

The impression conveyed by the above excerpt, which has been widely published, is that the post office authorities forbid the mailing of letters on the trains. This is wrong. Every route agent or postal clerk is required to receive from the public all mail matter properly prepaid by stamps affixed thereto and not canceled.

Death of Mr. John A. Laible, Jr.

The death of Mr. John A. Laible, Jr., the popular tonsorial artist, of North Plainfield, occurred at his home corner of Somerset and Race streets, at about eight o'clock on Sunday evening, from consumption, in the 25th year of his age.

Mr. Laible leaves a wife and one daughter, Lima May, fourteen months old. Mr. Laible married Miss Mamie Hodges, daughter of Mr. Ephraim Hodges, the tinsmith, of Madison avenue, about two years ago. He was also a member of Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M.

DON'T PAY THEIR STATE TAX.

Two Plainfield Companies Proceeded Against by the Attorney General.

The Attorney General of the State, John P. Stockton, gives notice that he will apply to the Chancellor at the State House on the 21st inst., for an injunction to restrain the "Plainfield Land Improvement Co.," its officers and agents, from the exercise of its franchise or the transaction of any business, because of the non-payment of the tax of one per cent. on the amount of its capital stock for 1888 amounting to $45.

The "Plainfield Improvement Co.," also is similarly notified of the same action against it, for the tax of 1888 amounting to $75.

NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

What the People at Scotch Plains Find to Talk About.

Miss Susan Crosby, an aged lady, died on Monday of heart failure. The funeral took place from the residence of Mr. James Fancher, Thursday morning at 10:30 o'clock. Rev. Mr. Park's officiating. Interment was made in Greenwood.

Mr. Cottrell, a resident of Fanwood died suddenly at the home of his mother in Connecticut, early Thursday morning, from Bright's Disease. The deceased was forty-five years of age, and leaves a wife and seven children.

The work on the new public school building is progressing favorably. The structure is now enclosed, and the work of fitting up the interior will be rapid.

Mrs. Caroline Brooksby, of Albany, N. Y., is visiting Mrs. Thomas S. Young of Fanwood.

Walter Frasee, the young man who mysteriously left his home several weeks ago, is still among the missing, and his parents and friends now firmly believe that he is dead.

Seeley's paper mill at Feltville is being rebuilt on an enlarged plan.

Borough Council Meeting.

Mayor Cooley and Messrs Buckle, Emmons and Smalley were the only members present at the regular meeting, held on Friday. After the minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved, Collector H. N. Spencer reported as follows:

To the Honorable the Mayor and Council of the Borough of North Plainfield:

GENTLEMEN:—Herewith please find statement of borough taxes collected for the year 1889, since last report:

Alex. Thorn	4 25
H. Wilson	1 00
T. McDonald	3 10
do do	37 50
L. Conrad	2 00

Mayor Cooley reported, verbally, to the effect that himself and the Clerk had executed the street lighting contract.

Mr. Smalley stated that the committee would be ready to report on the matter of accepting a certain portion of Summit avenue, at the next meeting.

The Clerk reported that two notes on the road fund fall due as follows: One for $1,000 on January 15, and another for $200 on Feb. 1. Upon resolution adopted the Mayor and Clerk were authorized to draw warrants for the payment of the notes.

After the Auditing Committee made a report recommending the payment of the claims sent in during the evening, the Council adjourned.

Last of the Christmas Celebrations.

The Sunday school of the First Church of Christ gave its first Christmas entertainment in Reform Hall Friday night, before a well-filled house. The exercises opened with a prayer by Mr. J. B. Cleaver, followed by singing by the school under the leadership of Mr. John Goodman. The programme was as follows:

Dialogue—"Mistaken Identity," three young ladies.
Recitation—Miss Mabel Wilson.
Reading—Mr. Allen.
Recitation—"Richard and Dorothy," Miss Lilla Welcome.
Recitation—Miss Keller.
Dialogue—"Afternoon Call," 3 young ladies.
Recitation—Miss VanHorn.
Reading—Master Staats.
Farce—"The Ghost and the Tramp," Messrs Goodman and Allen.
Singing—Masters William and Frank Sater.
Recitation—"The Last Hymn," Wm. R. Mattox.
Recitation—Miss Minnie Nestar.
Dialogue—"The Little Dispute."
Recitation—Miss Ella Staats.

Mr. J. B. Cleaver delivered an address suitable to the occasion, after which the school and its friends were invited to the school-room in the basement, where re*freshments were provided for all present.* The scholars of the school received gifts from Santa Claus.

Death of James H. Caniff.

Mr. James H. Caniff, a well-known and respected resident of LaGrande avenue, died suddenly at his home, Sunday morning, aged forty-five years. Mr. Caniff was a victim of that dreaded disease, typhoid pneumonia, through which he had passed and was on the road to recovery when he had a relapse. Mr. Caniff was the cashier for the New York Life Insurance Company. He was a member of Anchor Lodge, No. 149, F. and A. M., of this city, and he was also the first member to die from Plainfield Council Royal Arcanum, since the Council was organized seven years ago. The funeral took place from the house on Wednesday at 10:30 A. M.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans, full weight.

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward D. Randolph Celebrate Their Silver Wedding—A List of the Guests, and Other Details.

A large number of the relatives and near friends of Mr. and Mrs. Edward D. Randolph, of Park avenue, gathered at the latter's residence, upon invitation, Monday evening, to take part in the anniversary exercises commemorating the twenty-fifth year of Mr and Mrs. Randolph's married life.

During the evening the Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, pastor of the Seventh Day Baptist church, made a few appropriate remarks, and the guests in general wished the host and hostess many future years of health and happiness. Miss Mabel Maxson also contributed some instrumental selections, in a very creditable manner. The gifts were numerous and of a high grade. Following is a list of the guests present:

Mr. Thomas Ewing and wife and Mrs. Helen Evans, of Cumberland county, N. J., Mr. J. E. G. Benjamin, of Providence, R. I., Mr. George Larkin and wife, of Dunellen, Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis and wife, Miss Grace Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Randolph, Miss Bessie Randolph, Miss Grace Smith, Mr Asa Randolph, Mr. Robert Randolph, Miss Florence Potter, Miss Mabel Potter, Miss Mattie M Maitland, Miss Amanda C. Randolph, Mr. Samuel Randolph, Mr. David Randolph and wife, Mr. Samuel Smalley and wife, Mr. John Freeman, wife and son, Miss Celia Hiscocks, Mr. Reuben Potter, wife and son, Miss Kate Potter, Mr. and Mrs. William Potter and son, Mr. George Titsworth and wife, Mrs. Joseph Titsworth, Miss Anna Titsworth, Mr. Edward Stillman and wife, Mr. Lewis Randolph, Mr. Herbert Randolph, Mr. Frank Randolph and wife, Mr. Reune Randolph and wife, Mr. Frank Randolph, Jr., Miss Mabel Maxson, Miss Bessie Titsworth, Mr. Peter Randolph and wife, Mr. Daniel Randolph and wife, Mr. C. H. Barnhart and wife of Trenton, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Tingley, Mr. G. W. Beaton and wife, and Messrs John Smalley, Walter Smalley, Carroll Tomlinson, James Clawson, Walter Harrison, Charles Griffen, Fred. Dunham and W. W. West, the latter of Long Branch.

During the evening the guests sat down to a sumptuous collation, and at a late hour the festivities came to an end.

AT THE CAMERA CLUB.

The New Corps of Officers' Successful Efforts to Make the Meetings Entertaining and Instructive.

The most enthusiastic meeting that has occurred since its organization, was held at the rooms of the Plainfield Camera Club on Monday evening last. There was a full attendance and many matters of importance to the Club's welfare were discussed and acted upon. Four new members were elected and action taken to have some instructive demonstrations at every regular meeting.

President Teale announced that he had already provided for entertainments for eight months ahead. A committee was appointed to report upon having a sky-light-background, a large camera, etc., and the cost thereof. The house committee announced that the Club would hold its exhibition in the Y. M. C. A. parlors on the 30th inst., for the benefit of the Y. M. C. A. For a few evenings thereafter, the exhibition will be on view for the pub*lic, and probably a flash-light picture of* the visitors will be taken each night at 9 o'clock sharp. A project is now in abeyance that will facilitate members in having their printing, mounting and develop*ing done by some competent person hired* by the Club.

After the business was finished the Club were entertained by Mr. Alfred W. Day, who successfully demonstrated the excellent qualities of a new flash-light device by taking two exposures of the Club in session, and they were afterward developed in the new developer "Eikonogen," much to the enlightenment of the members. Evidently the new corps of officers mean to make the Club not only attractive to its members, but also to be favorably known in its mother city. The Club now comprises over 30 active members, besides several honorary ones.

Prof. Wm. R. Harper, of Yale, to Lecture.

No one man has done more, probably, to stimulate Bible study and to make it interesting, than he who occupies the chair of that department in Yale University, Prof. Wm. R. Harper. He is considered by those competent to judge the greatest Bible teacher of the day.

The Young People's Association of the Crescent Avenue Church are very glad, therefore, to be able to introduce Prof. Harper to the people of Plainfield. He will deliver one of his entertaining lectures on some Bible topic in the Crescent Avenue Church on the evening of January 31, 1890. The lecture will be free and all will be welcome.

Wants More Police Protection.

A young lady who resides in North Plainfield, was approached by a man who was apparently under the influence of liquor, while returning home on Monday evening, and she writes to THE PRESS as follows, in the hope of securing additional police protection:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Dear Sir:—I think extra officers of the Borough are very much needed on Somerset street from Chatham street to Jackson avenue and beyond to prevent crazy or drunken men from annoying ladies. I hope the Mayor will attend to this matter immediately. By kindly inserting this in your paper you will greatly oblige.

"The banquet board must be spread with tempting viands when the guests arrive, else there is disappointment and disgust."

That's the secret of our success. Good advertisements are good, but Good Clothing is better. We think we excel in both, and we know we do in Clothing. The people have confidence in us. They know from past experience that we sell a reliable article at a moderate price. We have constantly backed up our words with facts; facts in Clothing that the people can see for themselves and appreciate. It is rumored that an experiment will be made with vessels of the Boston and Atlanta type in carrying fresh water in the space between the outer and inner bottoms and then, if possible, use fresh water in the boilers only. The biggest edible oysters in the world are found at Port Lincoln, in South Australia. They are as large as a dinner plate, and the same shape. They are sometimes more than a foot across the shell, and the oyster fits the shell so well he does not leave much margin. It is a new sensation when a friend asks you to lunch at Adelaide, to have one oyster set, beside you fried in batter or egg and bread crumbs. But it is a very pleasant sensation, for the flavor and delicacy of the Port Lincoln monstrosities are proverbial in that land of luxuries.

THE JOYFUL SURPRISE.

DR. TALMAGE IN VIENNA PREACHES ON THE SURPRISES OF RELIGION.

On His Way Home He Preaches on Jerusalem, Solomon and the Queen of Sheba—Lessons Taught the Christian—An Example for the [illegible].

VIENNA, Jan. 5.—The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., of Brooklyn, preached in this city today on "The Surprises of Religion." His text was I Kings x, 7: "Behold, the half was not told me." The sermon was as follows:

Appearing before you today, my mind yet filled with the scenery of the Holy Land, [illegible]

[illegible] flowers found in the ruins of that city such as are to be found in no other part of Palestine, the lineal descendants of the very flowers that Solomon planted. He heard that in foreign groves there were birds of richest voice and luxuriant wing. He sent out people to catch them and bring them there, and he put them into his cages.

Stand back now and let this long train of camels coming up to the king's gate, and the ox trains from Egypt, gold and silver and precious stones, and beasts of every hoof, and birds of every wing, and fish of every scale! See the peacocks strut under the cedars, and the horsemen run, and the chariots wheel! Hark to the orchestra! Gaze upon the dance! Not stopping to look into the wonders of the temple, step right on to the causeway, and pass up to Solomon's palace!

Here we find ourselves amid a collection of buildings on which the king had lavished the wealth of many empires. The genius of Hiram, the architect, and of the other artists is here seen in the long line of corridors and the [illegible] gallery and the approach to the throne. Traceried window opposite traceried window. Bronzed ornaments bursting into lotus and lily and pomegranate. Chapiters surrounded by network of leaves, in which imitation fruit seemed suspended, as in hanging baskets. Three branches—so Josephus tells us—three branches sculptured on the marble, so thin and subtle that even the leaves seemed to quiver. A laver, capable of holding five hundred barrels of water, on six hundred brazen ox heads, which gushed with water and filled the whole place with coolness and crystalline brightness and musical plash. Ten tables chased with chariot wheel and lion and cherubim. Solomon sat on a throne of ivory. At the seating place of the throne, on each end of the steps, a brazen lion. Why, my friends, in that place they trimmed their candles with snuffers of gold, and they cut their fruits with knives of gold, and they washed their faces in basins of gold, and they scooped out the ashes with shovels of gold, and they stirred the altar fires with tongs of gold. Gold reflected in the water! Gold flashing from the apparel! Gold blazing in the crown! Gold, gold, gold!

Of course the news of the affluence of that place went out everywhere by every caravan and by wing of every ship, until soon the streets of Jerusalem are crowded with curiosity seekers. What is that long procession approaching Jerusalem? I think from the pomp of it there must be royalty in the train. I smell the breath of the spices which are brought as presents, and I hear the shout of the drivers, and I see the dust covered caravan showing that they come from far away. Cry the news up to the palace. The queen of Sheba advances. Let all the people come out to see. Let the mighty men of the land come up on the palace corridors. Let Solomon come down the stairs of the palace before the queen has alighted. Shake out the cinnamon, and the saffron, and the calamus, and the frankincense, and pass it into the treasure house. Take up the diamonds until they glitter in the sun.

SHE WOULD SEE FOR HERSELF.

The queen of Sheba alights. She enters the palace. She washes at the bath. She sits down at the banquet. The cup bearers bow. The meat smokes. The music trembles in lost dash of the waters from the molten sea. Then she rises from the banquet, and walks through the conservatories, and gazes on the architecture, and she asks Solomon many strange questions, and she learns about the religion of the Hebrews, and she then and there becomes a servant of the Lord God.

She is overwhelmed. She begins to think that all the spices she brought, and all the precious woods which are intended to be turned into harps and psalteries and into railings for the causeway between the temple and the palace, and the one hundred and eighty thousand dollars in money—she begins to think that all these presents amount to nothing in such a place, and she is almost ashamed that she has brought them, and she says within herself: "I heard a great deal about this place and about this wonderful religion of the Hebrews, but I find it far beyond my highest anticipations. I must add more than fifty per cent. to what has been related. It exceeds everything that I could have expected. The half—the half was not told me."

Learn from this subject what a beautiful thing it is when social position and wealth surrender themselves to God. When religion comes to a neighborhood, the first to receive it are the women. Some men say it is because they are weakminded. I say it is because they have quicker perception of what is right, more ardent affection and capacity for sublime emotion. After the women have received the Gospel, then all the distressed and the poor of both sexes, those who have no friends, accept Jesus. Last of all come the greatly prospered. Alas, that it is so!

If there are those who have been favored of fortune, or, as I might better put it, favored of God, surrender all you have and all you expect to be to the Lord who blessed this queen of Sheba. Certainly you are not ashamed to be found in this queen's company. I am glad that Christ has had his imperial friends in all ages—Elizabeth Christina, queen of Prussia; Maria Feodorovna, queen of Russia; Marie, empress of France; Helena, the imperial mother of Constantine; Arcadia, from her great fortune building public baths in Constantinople and toiling for the alleviation of the masses; Queen Clotilda, leading her husband and three thousand of his armed warriors to Christian baptism; Elizabeth, of Burgundy, giving her jeweled glove to a beggar, and scattering great fortunes among the distressed; Prince Albert, singing "Rock of Ages" in Windsor castle, and Queen Victoria, incognita, reading the Scriptures to a dying pauper.

I bless God that the day is coming when royalty will bring all its thrones, and music all its harmonies, and painting all its pictures, and sculpture all its statuary, and architecture all its pillars, and conquest all its scepters; and the queens of the earth, in long line of advance, frankincense filling the air and the camels laden with gold, shall approach Jerusalem, and the gates shall be hoisted, and the great burden of splendor shall be lifted into the palace of this greater than Solomon.

THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN MUST BE SOUGHT.

Again, my subject teaches me what is earnestness in the search of truth. Do you know where Sheba was? It was in Abyssinia, or some say in the southern part of Arabia Felix. In either case, it was a great way off from Jerusalem. To get from there to Jerusalem she had to cross a country infested with bandits, and go across blistering deserts. Why did not the queen of Sheba stay at home and send a committee to inquire about this new religion, and have the delegates report in regard to that religion and wealth of King Solomon? She wanted to see for herself and hear for herself. She could not do this by work of committee. She felt she had a soul worth ten thousand kingdoms like Sheba, and she wanted a robe richer than any woven by oriental shuttles, and she wanted a crown set with the jewels of eternity. Bring out the camels. Put on the spices. Gather up the jewels of the throne and put them on the caravan. Start now; no time to be lost. Goad on the camels. When I see that caravan, dust covered, weary and exhausted, trudging on across the desert and among the bandits until it reaches Jerusalem, I say: "There is an earnest seeker after the truth."

But there are a great many who do not act in that way. They all want to get the truth, but they want the truth to come to them; they do not want to go to it. There are people who fold their arms and say: "I am ready to become a Christian at any time; if I am to be saved I shall be [illegible]." [illegible] The religion of our Lord Jesus Christ will not come to you; you must go and get religion. Bring out the camels; put on all the sweet spices, all the treasures of the heart's affection. Start for the throne. Go in and hear the waters of salvation dashing in fountains all around about the throne. Sit down at the banquet—the wine pressed from the grapes of the heavenly Eshcol, the angels of God the cup bearers. [illegible]

[illegible]

Again, my subject impresses me with the fact that religion is a surprise to any one that gets it. [illegible]

[illegible] vice, he exclaims with prayers, with tears, with sighs, with language: "The half—the half was not told me!"

I appeal to those who are Christians. Compare the idea you had of the joy of the Christian life before you became a Christian, with the appreciation of that joy you have now since you have become a Christian, and you are willing to attest, before angels and men that you never in the days of your spiritual bondage had any appreciation of what was to come. You are ready today to answer and say in regard to the discoveries you have made of the mercy and the grace and the goodness of God: "The half—the half was not told me!"

Well, we hear a great deal about the good time that is coming to this world, when it is to be girdled with salvation. Holiness on the bells of the horses. The lion's mane patted by the hand of a babe. Ships of Tarshish bringing cargoes for Jesus, and the hard, dry, barren, winter blasted, storm scarred, thunder split rock breaking into floods of bright water. Deserts into which dromedaries thrust their nostrils, because they were afraid of the simoom, blooming into carpetlike roses and silver tipped lilies.

It is the old story. Everybody tells it. Isaiah told it, John told it, Paul told it, Ezekiel told it, Luther told it, Calvin told it, John Milton told it—everybody tells it; and yet—and yet when the midnight shall fly the hills, and Christ shall marshal his great army, and China, dashing her idols into the dust, shall hear the voice of God and wheel into line; and India, destroying her Juggernaut and snatching up her little children from the Ganges, shall hear the voice of God and wheel into line; and vine covered Italy and wheat crowned Russia, and all the nations of the earth shall hear the voice of God and fall into line; then the Church, which has been toiling and struggling through the centuries, robed and garlanded like a bride adorned for her husband, shall put aside her veil and look up into the face of her Lord the King and say: "The half—the half was not told me."

HEAVEN THE GREATEST SURPRISE.

Well, there is coming a greater surprise to every Christian—a greater surprise than anything I have depicted. Heaven is an old story. Everybody talks about it. There is hardly a hymn in the hymn book that does not refer to it. Children read about it in their Sabbath school book. Aged men put on their spectacles to study it. We say it is a harbor from the storm. We call it home. We say it is the house of many mansions. We weave together all sweet, beautiful, delicate, exhilarant words; we weave them into letters, and then we spell it out in rose and lily and amaranth. And yet that place is going to be a surprise to the most intelligent Christian. Like the queen of Sheba, the report has come to us from the far country, and many of us have started. It is a desert march, but we urge on the camels. What though our feet be blistered with the way! We are hastening to the palace. We take all our loves and hopes and Christian ambitions, as frankincense and myrrh and cassia, to the great King. We must not rest, we must not halt. The night is coming on, and it is not safe out here in the desert. Urge on the camels. I see the domes against the sky, and the houses of Lebanon, and the temples and the gardens. See the fountains dance in the sun, and the gates flash as they open to let in the poor pilgrims.

Send the word up to the palace that we are coming, and that we are weary of the march of the desert. The King will come out and say: "Welcome to the palace; bathe in these waters; recline on these banks. Take this cinnamon and frankincense and myrrh and put it upon a censer and swing it before the altar." And yet, my friends, when heaven bursts upon us it will be a greater surprise than that—Jesus on the throne, and we made like him! All our Christian friends surrounding us in glory! All our sorrows and tears and sins gone by forever! The thousands of thousands, the one hundred and forty and four thousand, the great multitudes that no man can number, will cry world without end: "The half—the half was not told me!"

The Man with the Coonskin Cap.

One night a year ago there were half a dozen of us to go up to the village hotel in the rickety old 'bus; and among the crowd was a solemn looking old chap, dressed in very plain goods and wearing a coonskin cap. It was the typical village hotel landlord in the barroom, a very fresh young man behind the register, mighty little for supper, and that poorly cooked, and there was more or less growling. The man with the coonskin cap was treated very brusquely by the clerk, and the frowsy headed waiter girl didn't seem to care whether he had anything to eat or not. He didn't say much, but it was evident that he was mad.

After supper the landlord and "Coonskin" had a private confab. When it was ended the old man came down stairs, opened the front door, and then turned to the clerk and said:

"You git!"

"What do you mean?"

"I have rented this hotel. Skip!"

The clerk put on his coat and hat and walked out. Then "Coonskin" sent word to the cook and waiter girl to be out in half an hour, for the hostler to be gone by midnight, and for the barkeeper to vacate by noon the next day. He kindly allowed us to stop over night, but we had to get our breakfast at a bakery. By noon the doors of the hotel were nailed up, signs of "Closed" posted, and as we footed it down to the depot the solemn old man thawed out sufficiently to observe:

"I'm after seven more of 'em along this line of railroad, and if I can shut 'em up the public will be in my debt. I have figured it out to my entire satisfaction, and I truly believe that three-fifths of the crime in this country is incited by poor hotel keeping."—New York Sun.

Ants are caught and killed at Kew Gardens by flowers of the orchid class. The ants are too large for the flower, but they visit it for the sake of the honey and get caught in the mucilage. The flower, however, suffers equally with the ant.

Cart Loads of Lizards.

A great destruction of life took place upon the old Lawton farm, two miles up the river. For several generations there has been a muskrat pond about twenty rods from the Kennebec, consisting of a half acre or more, besides eight acres of splendid land which was made worthless by its surroundings, which was drained across to the river by laying a sewer under ground five to nine feet deep. When the water was drawn off to near the bottom the men noticed that it was charged with animated life, and as the bottom began to appear the struggle increased, and it was estimated there were from two to four cart loads of lizards from two to five inches in length, mixed with reptiles shaped like the tadpole, four and five inches long, and a promiscuous collection of bugs and smaller fry, some of which looked like green grasshoppers.—Skowhegan Reporter.

A Few Points for the Superstitious.

A German writing from Lisbon relates the following coincidence: "When the cathedral bell at Braganza, the ancient residence of the Portuguese royal family, was tolling for the death of Queen Maria II, mother of the late King Luis I, in 1853, it cracked. In 1861, when the castle ensign was hoisted [illegible] V, [illegible] last month, the cathedral bell again cracked, and the castle ensign was [illegible] the wind."—Galignani.

ITEMS OF INFORMATION.

The city of Washington is said to have been first called "The City of Magnificent Distances" by President Madison. It was so called on account of the wide, open spaces caused by the peculiar plans of the streets, and being originally laid out on a large scale.

Spires are erected on churches for ornamental purposes, and also to serve as hanging-places for single bells or a chime of bells, as the case may be. They have been in use, in various shapes, for ages. The earliest examples are the pyramidal roofs of the turrets of Norman date.

FACTS ABOUT FLOWERS.

A solution of tobacco soap will keep the aphis away from honeysuckles.

Cuttings should always be made from healthy plants, otherwise they are sure to be poor and diseased.

Florists say nothing is gained by starting gladioli in the house in advance of the outdoor planting time.

It is the nature of the poinsettia to drop its leaves after blooming when grown in the sitting-room. It often drops them before, unless a good deal of water is used on its foliage.

Among the most beautiful of the late autumnal blossoms may be mentioned several species of blue gentian. The gentian is one of very few flowers which may be described as a true blue—most of those generally called blue being in reality more of a purple order.

As a florist's flower the orchid will hold a far more important place in the near future in this country than in the past, and the day is not far distant when prices of the different orchid blooms will be quoted together with roses and other flowers in the horticultural bulletin, and there will be few retail florists that can afford to do without them.

The beautiful daisy opens at sunrise and closes at sunset, whence its name, "day's eye." The morning-glory opens its flower with the day. The "John-go-to-bed-at-noon" awakes a four o'clock in the morning, but closes its eyes in the middle of the day, and the dandelion is in full bloom only during the hours of strong light. This habit of some flowers is certainly very curious, and furnishes one of the many instances which prove the singular adaptability of every thing in nature.

The fringed gentian is the species commemorated by Bryant. It closely resembles its relatives, but the flowers are few and the stems and leaves simple. Its chief claim to distinction is its fringed lobes, not petals, as the flower is all one piece, like a trumpet. The corolla is open and the lobes are developed so as to resemble petals of a deep blue with fringed border. The gentians form an interesting family of themselves and include a great number of foreign species.

Chrysanthemums can be propagated by seeds and cuttings and by separating the old plants. The seed may be sown in February or March in well-drained boxes of mellow soil in which there is some sand. Sift a thin covering of fine dirt over the seed, press down into the soil with a block and water gently with a sprinkler. Keep moist and shaded. They will be up in about a week. When the little plants have three leaves sprout in a nicely-prepared bed in the garden, or, if the weather is cool, they may be put in other boxes or in jars, rather closely, say one inch apart.

Orchids are not short-lived under careful treatment. The constantly increasing demand (there now being five hundred cultivators where there was one when they were first imported) has kept prices up, and the likelihood is that, while flowers may be somewhat cheaper, good plants for florists' stock will remain about the same; again, the cost of collecting is constantly increasing; it being almost impossible to estimate the trouble and hardships undergone, especially as the plants in their native homes become scarce, and the collector must travel greater distances than heretofore.

A Wheeling (W. Va.) man caught a mouse with four ears in a trap in his store the other day.

A Paoli (Pa.) calf with five legs has a harder time to get along than a Doylestown pig with only three.

Sault Ste. Marie has a cat which has seven legs and eight paws, with one head, three distinct jaws, and to complete the combination it has two tails.

A remarkable sweet sugar pumpkin was raised on a farm in Stoneham, Mass. It was a "twin," two well-rounded, large-sized pumpkins being joined by skin and by stem, the weight being nineteen pounds.

York County, Pa., has an interesting freak of nature. It consists of six ears of corn grown together, something after the manner of the Siamese twins, from one stem. For about two inches from the stem the ears are all joined together as one ear. Above that point they branch out into five distinct ears.

In Dublin, a small town in Laurens County, Ga., there lives a blue man. He is a Caucasian, but instead of being white is a greenish blue, and is known as "Blue Billy." His whole skin is blue, his tongue and the roof of his mouth are blue, and where his eyes should be white is seen the same blue color.

A farmer living about three miles southeast of Akron has a hen which occasionally lays an egg of solid shell throughout, but whether none of any kind have been laid for several days. Six of these curiosities have already been secured. They are so hard that they can be thrown smartly against a wall without any visible effect.

A man thirty years old, with no hair on his head, no whiskers on his face and no eyebrows, is under treatment in a St. Louis hospital. He comes from Texas and claims to have been hairless from his birth. He has been married once, and another Lone Star belle has agreed to become his bride if the defects in his make-up can be remedied. That is why he put himself in the doctor's hands.

Two mild-eyed, pink-nosed, bawling calves are creating considerable of a sensation among the curious people of South Minneapolis. The calves are twins, about three months old, and they have only six legs between them. One of the creatures is without a fore-leg, and the other is minus a hind-leg, but they are pretty little animals and hop about as briskly as you please, apparently not understanding that nature had cheated them out of one of the legs that are the due of every well-regulated calf.

According to tradition Christ was crucified on Friday, on which account it has been customary for hundreds of years for hangings to take place on that day. Of late a sentiment against this strange notion has been developed, and the day is not selected as often as before, more particularly in the State of Pennsylvania.

It is to be noted that on the 14th of April, the day after Easter in 1360, King Edward III. lay with his army before the city of Paris, which day was full dark of mist and hail, and so bitter cold that many men died on their horse's backs with the cold, wherefore unto this day it has been called the "Black Monday."

In making sleighbells the ball is put inside a sand "core," or internal mold, just the shape of the inside of the bell. This sand core, with the jinglet inside, is placed in the mold of the outside, and when the melted metal is poured in it fills the space between the core and the mold. The hot metal burns the core so that it can all be shaken out, leaving the ball within the shell.

The two sides of the face are not alike. As a rule, says a German professor, the want of symmetry is confined to the upper part of the face. The left half of the brain overweighs the right half; the nose leans a little to the right or to the left. The region of the right eye is usually slightly higher than that of the left eye; while the left eye is nearer the middle line of the countenance. The right ear is also higher, as a rule, than the left ear.

The scale on which the universe is built becomes comprehensible in the presence of the fact that while these motions of the stars carry them hundreds of millions of miles in a year, yet so tremendous is their distance that we must watch them for centuries before they seem to us to have moved at all. The first result of the discovery that the fixed stars were in motion was speculation as to the center of their revolution. It was assumed that the heavens revolved around some center as the planets revolved around the sun. Now that idea is abandoned, but with the development of the law respecting the conservation of energy, still more startling views are entertained.

TRADE AND TRAFFIC.

About 1,000,000 eggs come to London every day, except Sunday, from Italy.

Chinese matches are competing sharply with the Swedish production in Europe.

The Pullman Car Company carried 4,232,542 persons last year in their palace cars.

There is considerable demand in Maine for eel skins with which to make "kid" gloves.

One merchant in Frederick, Pa., has this fall shipped 1,000 barrels of shellbarks to Eastern points.

The phosphate lands of Florida are to be developed by a New York company. They are said to be very rich.

Some Los Angeles fruiterers are planning to establish a permanent exhibit in New York City of an orange grove.

One thousand wild geese were purchased at Palmyra, Mo., the other day by a Hannibal firm engaged in the poultry trade.

The Elkhorn mine, one of the great mining properties of Montana, has been sold to an English syndicate for more than $500,000.

It is estimated that the output of coal for the present year will not greatly exceed 35,000,000 tons against 38,145,718 tons last year.

While choice imported bananas sell for twelve and a half cents a dozen in San Francisco a dozen ordinary California apples bring twenty-five cents.

A company of Hollanders which has been growing celery in Michigan finds the industry amplifying so that they now propose to buy up large sections of the New Jersey swamps and to turn them into celery fields.

The California oil supply appears to be giving out. All the productive wells, it is reported, are now at least six years old. The new drill-holes are barren and the flowing wells are gradually diminishing in output.

The exports of raw hides and skins from India in 1888 numbered 10,500,000 pieces. In five years 40,000,000 hides of oxen, cows, horses and buffalo, and 21,000,000 hides of sheep and goats were exported.

Recent widespread failures in the tea trade in China have had a curious effect on ruined merchants. Five of them have taken refuge in a monastery in preference to meeting their creditors. One committed suicide and many have disappeared.

At the recent celebration in Baltimore of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the bombardment of Fort McHenry and the composition by Key of "The Star-Spangled Banner," was present Samuel Sands, who is probably the oldest printer living, and who, while an apprentice in the office of the Baltimore American in 1814, first put that song into type from the author's original manuscript and distributed it through the streets of that city.

The loss of light in passing through glass has been tested by two physicists of Berlin. A simple translucent but not transparent glass diminished the light twenty-seven per cent.; cathedral glass, both white and with a slight ground tint, twelve-and-two-thirds per cent.; plain white Rhenish "double glass," ten per cent.; and plain thin mirror glass, ten per cent. Ground glass with cut stars and a white glass background, such as is found in house fanlights, obstructed sixty per cent. of the light; and plain ground glass with the background, forty per cent.

MISCELLANEOUS.

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT ?

Line may be very long one and yet be the short-est between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reason it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast, still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan, and the journey to the Pacific coast Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a lifetime once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba Pacific route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home seeker, the gold seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. Write to F. I. WHITNEY, G. P. & T. A., St. Paul, Minn., for maps, books and guides. If you want a free farm in a lovely land write for the "Great Reservation." Contentment.

They say that I am wasting my life away
 Out here in the country so far from town,
That genteel ways will never be mine,
 Nor fashion's approval, nor wide renown,
 So long as I work and my hands are brown,
And with homely work fill the book of "Time."

But they do not know how happy I am
 In filling the place of mother and wife,
That the waving grain and the birds' sweet call
 And the prattle of children is part of life,
 And better, far better than fashion's strife,
Yes, better than riches and fame and all.
—[illegible], in Good Housekeeping.

A Maxim for Young Wives.

Not love you as I did before
 We married? (This beefsteak, my dear,
Is badly scorched.) I love you more.
 (Your biscuits did not bake, I fear.)

You can not cook as mother did?
 I know it, sweet, and wish you could.
But talents, very oft, are hid—
 (This coffee has a taste of wood.)

When you have passed away from earth?
 O, do not speak of that, I beg!
Will praise and love your modest worth?
 (Why can't I sometimes have an egg?)

You try to please me all you can?
 I'm very sure you do, my sweet.
I am a reasonable man.
 (Pray was this omelet made to eat?)

My love will last until I die,
 (My, this oatmeal!) No matter, Leah,
But then I wish that you would try
 To have it boiled a little, dear.

Think more of eating than of you?
 Now that, indeed, you can not prove,
But this indeed is strictly true,
 A man must eat to live and love.
—C. H. Thayer, in Life.

By and By.

Down the stream where the tide is clearer,
 Farther on where the shores are fair,
Are the gracious forms we would fain be nearer,
 The names we speak in the voice of prayer.
Be the voyage long they will be the dearer
 When after while we shall greet them there
Farther on where the tide is clearer,
 Down the stream where the shores are fair.

By and by when the sun is shining,
 After while when the skies are clear,
When the cloud unfolds its silver lining
 And shores of the peaceful isles draw near,
We shall free our tongues from their dull repining
 And fill our hearts with the words of cheer—
After while when the sun is shining,
 By and by when the skies are clear.

Diamonds in Demand.

Once I wooed a maiden divinely fair,
Whose faintest smile dispelled my every care;
She led me on and sore my patience tasked,
Until, one eve, her heart and hand I asked.

She heard my plea, and in a frigid way
Accepted me, but would not name the day;
Elated and o'erjoyed I slyly thought:
"I'll fix the day now that my lady's caught!"

I pledged her with a circlet, gemmed and rare,
That matched the luster of her golden hair—
That caught from her bright eyes the starry gleams,
And flashed them back again in myriad streams.

The formal air she wore at once gave way
To keen delight, and in a manner gay
She kissed the pledge and brightly beamed on me,
Then freely vowed the truest constancy.

* * * * * * *

We're married now; whatever's mine is hers'
Of that I'm told whenever chance occurs.
The ring I gave her on that happy day
Has lost its charm and other things have way—

For instance—Now, alas! my lady dear
Demands a diamond for each tiny ear.
Ah me! at this rate I can plainly see
I soon shall need the mines of Kimberly.

Sure Road to Wealth.

A moment of leisure had come in his way,
 And rather than idleness choosing,
The coal-dealer's office-boy sat one day
 A book with attention perusing.

Then asked his employer: What is the book
 That you take such an interest in, sonny?
The boy at the title gave a look
 And answered: "The Way to Make Money."

Of plans to make money there isn't some
 Beside mine I am confident, sonny.
Give eighteen hundred pounds to the ton
 And you'll find that's the weigh to make money.
—Boston Courier.

What Matters It.

What matters it, my curious friend, where lies
 Our heavenly harbor and our land of rest?
Whether it be beyond the azure skies
 Or in some lower world, God knoweth best.
It offers safety from our cares, and so
What matters it whether it be high or low?
It offers rest; what more should mortals know

Rest from the weariness of burdened days,
 Of bitter longings and of evil hours,
Of duties leading us through darkened ways,
 And into efforts far beyond our powers,
Of dark temptations into secret sin,
Of constant labor, earth's poor gifts to win,
Of spirits deadened by the strife and din.

It matters nothing as to when or where
 We find the haven and the welcome home;
Let curious doubt give place to trusting prayer
 And no weak soul through speculation roam.
We seek for sealed-up secrets, hidden things;
Enough for us if on eternal wings
We reach the country of those better things.

Vex not thy spirit, O aspiring man!
 But live thy days as earnest workers must;
Nor try to pierce through God's mysterious plan
 Which obligates thee to a life of trust.
Some day, somewhere, while countless ages roll,
Thy hungry heart shall comprehend the whole,
The veil be parted for thy thankful soul.

IN Ireland a belt made with a woman's hair is placed about a child to keep harm away.

THE Grecian mother, before putting her child in its cradle, turns three times around before the fire while singing her favorite song to ward off evil spirits.

THE Turkish mother loads her child with amulets as soon as it is born: a small bit of mud, well steeped in hot water prepared by previous charms, is stuck on its forehead.

WELSH mothers put a pair of tongs or a knife in the cradle to insure the safety of their children. The knife is also used for the same purpose in some parts of England.

THE London mother places a book under the head of the new-born infant that it may be quick at reading, and puts money into the first bath to guarantee its wealth in the future.

ROUMANIA mothers tie red ribbons around the ankles of their children to preserve them from harm, while Ethiopian mothers attach bits of assafoetida to the necks of their offspring.

AN EDITOR'S WAY.

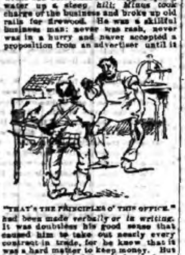
How Minus Wiggs Ran a Newspaper in Kentucky.

He Taught Opie P. Read the "Rules of the Office" and the Mysteries of the Craft. Slight Misunderstanding About Cap A's—Major Blogett's Courtesy.

COPYRIGHT 1889.

Hawksville, Ky., is situated on the top of a bleak knob in Allen County. The town was discovered by an unfortunate young man who got on a spree and wandered off from home.

A number of years ago a newspaper called the "Palladium" was published in Hawksville: T. Minus Wiggs and I were the editors and proprietors. I wrote the editorials and lugged spring water up a steep hill; Minus took charge of the business and broke up old rails for firewood. He was a skillful business man: never was rash, never was in a hurry and never accepted a proposition from an advertiser until it had been made verbally or in writing. It was doubtless his good sense that caused him to take out nearly every contract in trade, for he knew that it was a hard matter to keep money. But once when he had accepted an advertisement from a druggist, and agreed to take it out in porous plasters, I could not help muttering a complaint.



"THAT'S THE PRINCIPLES O' THIS OFFICE."

"I am sorry," said he, "that you do not understand business economy better than you do."

"What has business economy to do with it?" I asked.

"Has a great deal to do with it. Look! my pants need patching, now, and I have discovered that a porous plaster is the quickest and most inexpensive way of patching pants. Hang it, ain't you practical enough to know that a business man cannot afford to lie in bed while his pants are undergoing repairs; such a procedure would militate against a business man. It's well enough to be literary and all that sort of thing, but literature isn't everything. Be practical—open your eyes to the virtue of that shrewd management which spreads the plaster of economy over the wear and tear of this life."

I could say no more. Literature has ever been dumb in the presence of business. The advertisement is mightier than the editorial. Minus knew all this. He knew that when he wheeled me about and compelled me to face commerce, I stood at an abashed disadvantage.

The "Palladium" was printed on a novelty press. It was made of two slabs, and an impression was taken by pressing a lever which slapped the slabs together. We were very short on type; indeed, we had not quite enough to set up one page of our quarto publication, but we managed to fill out with blocks. We had to "work off" one page at a time and then distribute the type.

Minus had operated the paper before I joined him. I well remember my thrill of delight when I received a postal card from him, telling me that if I would edit the paper he would give me half the profits. He kept his word.

One day, shortly after my arrival, he turned to me and said: "Don't use any more cap A's."

"How's that?"

"I say don't write any more stuff with cap A's in it. We are out."

He was setting the type and I was doing the literary work. I did not quite catch his meaning.

"Can't you understand anything?" he asked. "You fellows that write never can learn to understand a business principle. We are short on cap A's at best, but it seems that you have been trying to spread yourself on them all day. You must not be so extravagant."

"If there are no more cap A's," said I, "how are we going to manage this notice of Andrew Allbright?"

He was stunned for a moment, and then, in a thoughtful manner replied. "Won't do to leave that out. It's a paid notice, and we are depending on it to get paper enough for the next edition. I'll tell you what we'll do. I can skirmish up one more A, and with that we can fix up Allbright."

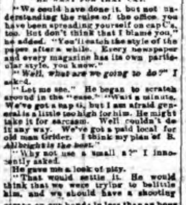
"Yes, but how are we going to fix Andrew?"

"We'll have to use a little shrewd economy, that's all. We'll use an initial—we'll call him B. Allbright. B is next to A. We will come within one of hitting the original text, and I don't think he ought to kick at that."

"Was he in the army?" I asked.

"Believe he was. Why?"

"Didn't know, but we might call him Colonel Albright."



"HE WENT FOR THAT CAT."

"We could have done it, but not understanding the rules of the office you have been spreading yourself on cap C's, too. But don't think that I blame you," he added. "You'll catch the style of the paper after a while. Every newspaper and every magazine has its own particular style, you know."

"Well, what are we going to do?" I asked.

"Let me see." He began to scratch around in the "case." "Wait a minute. We've got a cap G, but I am afraid general is a little too high for him. He might take it for sarcasm. Well couldn't do it any way. We've got a paid local for old man Grider. I think my plan of B. Allbright is the best."

"Why not use a small a?" I innocently asked.

He gave me a look of pity.

"That would settle it. He would think that we were trying to belittle him, and we should have a shooting scrape on our hands in less than an hour from the time the paper made its appearance."

"We might use a small cap," I suggested.

This set him to thinking. "That's a fact," he admitted. "We might take a small cap and bolster it up until it would make quite a respectable appearance. But wait a moment. He is a very particular man and might regard a small cap as a compromise measure, whereas he could not help but admit that a cap B is bold and outspoken. We'll let it go that way."

We rented our office from Major Blogett, a man of blustering destruction in the village. He was a lank fellow, with a heavy growth of fiery, red hair, of which he was exceedingly vain. He was a batchelor and slept in a room immediately below the office.

The first time I saw him was on a morning when he came in to collect his rent.

"Look here," he said, addressing Minus, "do you know how much you owe me?"

"Not exactly, Major."

"Do you recollect ever having paid me anything?"

"No; but you've been getting your paper regularly, haven't you?"

"I don't know, but I reckon I have."

"Well, that shows my good intentions toward you."

"Good intentions."

"Yes, for whenever I have anything against a man I chop him off the list."

"Look here," said the Major, "if you wasn't such a blamed fool, I'd turn you out. As it is, you may run on a while longer."

He was really a kind-hearted man, for he came around every month to see how we were getting along, and I do not know that I ever saw him take anything out of the office.

One night, while Minus and I were preparing a solution of concentrated lye, with which to wash the ink off the "forms," we heard the Major go into his room, and by his movements we could tell that he was drunker than usual.

"I hope he won't come up after his rent while he is in that condition," said Minus. "Look here," he added, "this lye won't do. Its too strong. It takes the dots off the i's and splits the dipthongs. I'll put the jar over here till morning. Then we'll tone it down with water. There isn't a drop up here, and I don't suppose you want to go after any to-night."

I said I did not, whereupon he remarked: "All right. We'll go to bed."

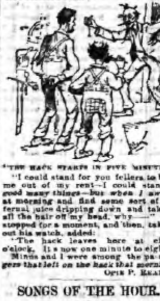
I had just dozed off to sleep when Minus awoke me by getting up.

"What's the matter?" I asked.

"An infernal cat has come in here to eat the paste, and I'm going to kill her. It's a good thing we sleep in the office. If we didn't we'd lose everything we've got."

He slammed around, scared the cat nearly to death, and turned over the jar of lye.

The next morning, just as we had dressed ourselves, we heard some one coming rapidly up the stairs, and the next moment Major Blogett rushed into the room. His hair was falling off in patches. He looked at us a moment, and, seemingly with an effort to control himself, said:



"THE HACK STARTS IN FIVE MINUTES."

"I could stand for you fellers to beat me out of my rent—I could stand a good many things—but when I awake at morning and find some sort of infernal juice dripping down and taking all the hair off my head, why——" He stopped for a moment, and then, taking out his watch, added:

"The hack leaves here at eight o'clock. It's now one minute to eight."

Minus and I were among the passengers that left on the hack that morning.

The Latest and Freshest Ballads Now Being Sung.

History of "Where Did You Get That Hat?" and How it Came to Be Written—Estimated Sales of Recent Famous Ditties.

COPYRIGHT 1889.

The man who perpetrated that musical atrocity, "Where Did You Get That Hat?" has been discovered. His name is Joe Sullivan. He is an actor. This is the only thing he ever wrote. At the present time he is playing with a traveling theatrical company in a distant part of the country, and is recognized as a comedian of no mean ability. Frank Harding, the New York music publisher, tells the story of how and where the author obtained his inspiration.

Tom O'Driscoll, the harum-scarum grandson of old Murtagh O'Driscoll, of Cobbynaul, in the County of Roscommon, Ireland, was famous for his personal peculiarities. One of these was an aversion to wearing a 'caubeen.' It was Tom's delight to wander through the country bareheaded and barefooted. The fact that he wore no shoes excited no comment, but his refusal to wear a hat was a matter of distress to his family. The fact is that Tom did not really need a hat, for he had been provided by nature with a shock of luxuriant red hair. He was known for miles around as the redheaded man, and his adornment brought down upon Tom the anger of his grandfather, Murtagh.

Just before his death old Murtagh conceived an idea which he was almost certain would bring his erring grandson to his 'sivin shmall sinses,' and a few days afterwards he died.

Tom refused to wear a hat, even at the funeral. On the return of the family from the churchyard, the will was opened and read by Father O'Hoolahan, and, to the surprise of all, it was found that Tom inherited 'everything, including the big stocking of "goold" that could be found "beehune the tick and the boulster in the ould four-poster,"' on condition that for the remainder of his natural life, he should wear his grandfather's hat on all occasions, in the open air.

This was regarded as a very hard condition by Tom, but, possessing his share of good common sense, he accepted the inevitable, and presented himself on the following Sunday at church, wearing old Murtagh's hat. His appearance was ludicrous in the extreme. Having neglected to get his hair cut, the hat was perched on the top of his remarkable crop of bushy and fiery hair, and the roars of laughter with which he was saluted made Tom almost wish he had not accepted the onerous condition of his grandfather's will. From all sides came jibes and cries of derision, the principal salutation being: "Mother o' Moses! Where Did You Get That Hat?"

During a recent trip in Ireland, Mr. Sullivan heard the story as related above, and, after a good deal of hard thinking, he produced the song, the title of which has since become a household word throughout the country. An excellent, yet simple piano arrangement was made for it by William Lorraine, a mere lad of 16, which materially aided its impetus to popularity. By the way, Lorraine is recognized among musicians generally, as one of the most efficient arrangers of comic and sentimental music in this country. This song is an illustration of what a single phrase will do in popularizing a ditty. There is of course nothing of a decided literary merit to commend it. It does not even possess the distinction of good rhyme. But it has an original jingle of melody and an easy arrangement that goes far in making it a "go" with the public. The following is a sample verse:

Now, how I came to get this hat 'tis very strange and funny;
Grandfather died and left to me his property and money.
And when the will it was read out, they told me straight and flat,
If I would have his money, I must always wear his hat.

CHORUS.

Where did you get that hat! Where did you get that tile?
Isn't it a nobby one, and just the proper style?
I should like to have one just the same as that.
Where'er I go, they shout hello! where did you get that hat?

This song sprung immediately into popularity. Two hundred thousand copies of it have already been sold, and the demand is still unabated. The credit of popularizing it has been claimed by many variety singers, but Gus Mills, Dockstader's female impersonator has undoubtedly done more to bring it to public attention that any one professional vocalist. Mills's makeup in singing the ditty is very funny. He appears attired as a dusky maiden, wearing a Gainsborough hat of enormous proportions, decked with Jack roses two feet in circumference.

As is usually the case with all popular songs, "Where Did You Get That Hat?" has been paraphrased by numerous burlesques and parodies. The latest of these is Willie Wildwave's "Where Did You Get That Face?" the chorus of which is as follows:

Where did you get that face! where did you get that mug?
Isn't it a handsome one, we'll put it in the jug,
I would like to have one for a six-day race;
When I go out they're sure to shout: Where did you get that face?

Within the past six months a number of songs have suddenly sprung into celebrity which had, prior to that time, grown dusty in the obscurity of the publisher's shelves. The chief reason for this desuetude is, that there are very few traveling theatrical companies on the road during the summer season, and, as these companies are the chief factors in the introduction of new songs, many new favorite ditties had not been brought to public notice. [illegible] these might be mentioned Mullaly's pretty song, "Mottoes on the Wall;" Kleak's, "Only a Picture;" Mitchell's, "Where Can the Wanderer Be?" and C. A. White's tender romanza, "Marguerite." White seems to be the most prolific of American composers in the sentimental vein. With the exception, perhaps, of Will S. Hays, he is also the oldest native song writer. Mr. White is a resident of Boston, and they say he has amassed nearly half a million of dollars through the sale of his songs. He writes both words and music of all his compositions, and in this respect he differs from many other authors. One of his earliest successes was "Put Me In My Little Bed." This was followed by "Come, Birdie, Come," which swept like a musical tidal wave over the entire country. One after another of his songs found their way into popular favor. In this category are "The Old Turnkey," "The Fisherman and His Child," "When The Moonlight," "When the Leaves Begin to Turn," and others of a like sentimental character. His latest and most successful inspiration was the now celebrated "Marguerite," which is being sung by all the romantic maidens in the country.

It is a fact not generally known that "Marguerite" was written while the author was suffering from cerebral troubles superinduced by overwork. The original text and melody he conceived while confined to his home and lying at death's door. Forbidden by his family physician the use of paper and pencil, the veteran composer scratched with his finger nails, upon the paint of the window sill, the rough outlines of the melody of his famous song, and on his recovery he had it transcribed and arranged. For a long time "Marguerite" lay upon the shelves and failed to strike a popular chord, but within the past six months the song has commended itself so universally that it is difficult to supply the demand.

It seems that the name "Marguerite" is a prolific theme with poets and musical composers. There are no fewer than six different "Marguerite" songs upon the market to-day. In the more classic vein, Helmud's German love ditty, "Margaritha," is eminently a favorite, while "Farewell, Marguerite," by Boardman, is an exceedingly popular song of to-day, and White's latest effort, "My Marguerite of Long Ago," bids fair to rival his better known production of a like character.

Monroe H. Rosenfeld's "With All Her Faults I Love Her Still," has attained the enormous circulation of 100,000 copies. This song is another indication that love furnishes an almost inexhaustible theme for the composer of sentimental music, and, if the theme is wedded to a catching melody, the production is sure to find its way to the attention of thousands of appreciative singers. It has always been a matter of great public curiosity to learn the average sale of famous musical compositions. A careful estimate shows the following results attained by some recent successes in the sentimental vein. This estimate can only be approximately made, as publishers are very chary about giving accurate information on this subject.

	Copies.
"Marguerite" (White)	250,000
"With All Her Faults I Love Her Still" (Rosenfeld)	80,000
"Farewell, Marguerite" (Boardman)	40,000
"Where Can the Wanderer Be?" (Harms)	30,000
"The Exile's Lament" (Mitchell)	20,000
"Mottoes on the Wall" (Mullaly)	10,000
"Here Lies an Actor" (Dresser)	5,000
"Only a Picture" (Smith)	5,000

The last three, "Mottoes on the Wall," "Here Lies an Actor" and "Only a Picture," are fast winning their way into popular favor. These songs include the elements which appeal most strongly to lovers of tuneful melody and sentimentality. Their sales within the next six months will probably be reckoned by six figures. Upon the last named song, "Only a Picture," which tells in sympathetic strains a story of maternal love,

"He was her pride,
And ever at her side," and which has scarcely been on the market six months, the relentless hand of the parodist has already been at work, to wit:

"Only a pitcher, only a pitcher,
Only a pitcher full of beer:
For it was her pride, and ever at her side,
Only a pitcher full of beer."

Comic songs as a rule, are short-lived. This is because they depend mainly for their popularity upon single phrases which catch the eye of the public and are repeated in daily conversation until they become antiquities. With the decay of the phrases which form the keynote to success, the song dies. Sometimes the most mediocre comic songs attain a large circulation merely on the strength of a popular idiom, although they may be full of grammatical and harmonic crudities. Notwithstanding this, some of the compositions attain to enormous sales. The list given below will furnish a fair idea of the ballads of this character at present in the market, and the estimated sales thereof:

	Copies.
"Where Did You Get That Hat?" (Sullivan)	200,000
"We've Been There Before," (Dockstader)	30,000
"Razzle, Dazzle," (Woodward)	20,000
"Down Went McGinty," (Flynn)	10,000
"Let Me Shake the Hand of Sullivan," (Rosenfeld)	8,000
"Paddy Shay," (Witmark)	5,000
"Slide, Kelly, Slide," (Harding)	3,000
"Near It," (Hitchcock)	3,000

Popular songs are not always written by successful musical composers, as is generally supposed. The ratio of comic songs which live and are sung by the people is not more than one in two hundred songs which find their way to the counters of the music stores. It is preeminently a question of the survival of the fittest in song-writing, as in any other production of human genius. Some of the most successful comic songs have been originated in the brains of variety actors. These men have possessed no knowledge whatever of musical theory, but their nightly appearance before a cosmopolitan public has enabled them to become keen judges of popular likes and dislikes. This knowledge has afforded them opportunities which more able musicians have not possessed. These men catch a strain of melody or a rhythmic phrase, and by turning it over in their minds for along time, they crystalize around it other phrases and a little more harmony. Then they buy a sheet of music paper, and laboriously pick out on the keys of a piano, with one finger, the skeleton of a melody which, perhaps, is destined to be sung from the pines of Maine to the slopes of the Pacific. The work of arrangement, of fixing up the poetry or of getting this nebulous material into a concrete form, is turned over to experts in musical composition and in the rhyming of words.

But after the song is created, it is not by any means before the public. The publisher must be found. The public is so erratic in its likes and dislikes, that the publisher always assumes considerable risk in publishing a song. It is a veritable lottery. It may prove to be a Golconda of wealth to the publishers, or a most lamentable "Jonah." Twenty-five dollars is about the limit paid for these compositions by publishers. The average price, however, is from $5 to $10.

The next thing in the progress of the song to popularity is to get some vaudeville specialist or minstrel to sing the song. This is generally done by offering the singer a pecuniary interest in the composition or by paying him or her a small sum of money. Some vocalists, however, of the better class, are glad to get a new song which possesses merit, as it is a valuable adjunct to their repertory.

MONROE H. ROSENFELD.

"PENNY FAMINE" is now what threatens the large cities of the West and Southwest. The people have learned to use the long-despised one cent coin, and the needs of circulation have increased far beyond the power of the Government machinery to supply them. The Philadelphia mint is two months behind with its orders for these pieces, in spite of keeping at work night and day turning them out.

FOR the first time on record a lady has been appointed a deputy collector of internal revenue. Miss Phoebe Cousins has been a deputy United States marshal and has wielded a revolver and carried handcuffs, but she never had to visit regularly the tough dives and more decent saloons of a wicked city and inspect Government licenses. This is what Miss Maud Cotton, just appointed a deputy collector for the Seventh Indiana district by Collector Throop, will have to do.

PEOPLE IN THE PAPERS.

IT is said that Senator Chace is the only Quaker now in public life at Washington.

PRINCE BISMARCK is ambitious for his son and is coaching him carefully for a great public career.

MR. GLADSTONE is writing a paper on "The Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture," to be published next year.

A PRIZE of a thousand francs has been awarded to Marion Crawford by the authorities of the French Exposition.

JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY, the bachelor poet, is in receipt constantly of letters from women who want to marry him.

BARON HAUSSMAN, who recreated Paris, has written his memoirs in four volumes. He is a vigorous old man of 80.

LOUIS KOSSUTH declares vehemently that he will not accept Italian or any other citizenship, but will die as he has lived, a Hungarian.

JOSEPH MULHATTON, who is known as the champion liar of the country, is really a very religious man and is superintendent of a Sunday-school.

GENERAL ALGER is working up an elaborate scheme to make an individual history, as far as possible, of every man who is now living who served in the war.

BRONSON HOWARD is one of the best-informed men in the country on our late civil war. In writing "Shenandoah" he was obliged to make historical researches which have fitted him to become a historian. He is a great admirer of Grant and Sherman.

IT is said that Edwin Booth is an inveterate smoker, indulging in cigars and enormous pipes of tobacco. Mr. Booth will smoke cigar after cigar and pipe after pipe in perfect silence. In fact, he dislikes to talk while enjoying the "weed."

REV. DR. BARTOL, who has just retired from the pulpit he has made famous in Boston, is one of the richest divines in the country. He made his fortune by lucky investments in lands along the Massachusetts coast at points now popular as summer resorts.

M. EIFFEL'S last triumph is a portable iron military bridge, which has just been successfully exhibited to M. Freycinet, the French Minister of War. The bridge can be carried along with an army, and is of iron altogether. It is one hundred and twenty feet long, and can be placed in position even in the most difficult country in fifty-two hours.

MR. WILLIAM MORRIS is undoubtedly one of the most remarkable men in England, and one of the busiest in London. He is socialist, scientist, poet, essayist, antiquarian, lecturer, designer, workman, editor of the Commonweal, manufacturer, with one factory out of London and more than one in it, merchant, with a shop on Oxford street and also on Union square, New York.

THE late John Gilbert, the actor, in his will followed the example of Booth and Barrett, and gave his theatrical library and valuable collection of old play-bills to the Players Club of New York. The library, although not a large one in numbers, nevertheless comprises a fairly complete history of the American stage up to date, and contains many valuable works of reference.

THE training of an animal should begin the first week of its life. It should early be taught to have confidence in its owner, and to follow him at his call. The influence gained over the animal in its early life will greatly lessen the difficulty of later management.

TOO MUCH land means taxes on that from which only partial crops can be obtained. It is the small plots, well manured, that yield the profitable crops. It is more expensive to attempt to secure large yields from a tract requiring a portion of the time to be lost in traveling over it than to concentrate all the labor on a small area.

THE impression that seems to be current to a great extent, that better butter can be made in factories, or as they are properly called, public creameries, than in private dairies, is an erroneous one. It is true that better butter is made in factories than is in many instances made in private dairies, but there is no reason why just as good butter can not be made at home on the farm as at any factory or public creamery.

THERE are inferior animals among all breeds. Records are made by individuals that can not be approached by other animals of the same breed. Improvement, therefore, has a wide field before it, and no farmer should be satisfied with simply grading his stock by a slight improvement for a few seasons, but aim to reach the highest possible limit to be attained. He may not reach it, but he will be amply recompensed in the increased capacity of his stock and the greater value obtained.

The Constitutionalist.

[illegible]

To condemn evil is to advance the cause of right.

A well-grounded impression prevails among observing people, that the Senate of the United States is degenerating into an organized coterie of sordid millionaires, the entering passports to which are dollars, in lieu of character and ability.

We say degenerating, and believe the term has truthful application.

The National Senate was once the pride of the Union, and justly so, because at that time it contained members selected as representatives of the States solely on the score of developed statesman qualifications and acknowledged patriotism.

Then the Senatorial judge was honestly acquired and honorably worn by such illustrious public men as Clay, Calhoun, Webster, Benton, Marcy, McDuffie, Cass, Preston, Crittenden, Southard, Clayton, Mangum and others of like and good repute.

They were Senators for the promotion of national honor and the general public good, not seekers after personal interests or base political schemes, and would have spurned with indignation the acceptance of a seat in Congress by virtue of aught else than an unpurchased and strictly honest election.

They were intellectual giants, not [illegible] pigmies.

Compare the American Senate as then constituted with that of today.

The contrast is vivid.

Degeneracy is surely a fitting word.

Far be it from us to cast discredit upon all the present Senators. It would be unwarranted, as there are among them gentlemen, both Democrats and Republicans, of high character and decided legislative ability, and whose credentials were never sullied by corruption of any kind.

It is the money-bag pretenders we are after.

What of them?

Had they been poor men, or men of moderate means, would the roll-call of the highest law-making body in the land ever echoed their names? NO!

Did brains or boodle elect them?

That's the question.

When Rome sold offices to the highest bidder Rome's grave was dug.

Let REFORM be the battle cry!

And may it grow louder and more incessant until every vestige of fraud and foul trickery shall be swept not only from ballot boxes at popular elections, but from all State Legislatures and the National Capital at Washington.

EVEN THE CLERGY NOT EXEMPT.

The Rev. Mr. Love, Mr. James McGee and the Rev. Mr. Honeyman, Preach for Brothers Who are Ill.

The Rev. E. Love, of this city, preached in the Trinity Reformed church, on Sunday morning, the pastor, the Rev. Cornelius Schenck being ill. Mr. Love's theme was "The Love of God," his text being the third verse of the thirty-first chapter of Jeremiah.

In the evening Mr. Schenck had intended to occupy his pulpit but was prevailed upon not to run the risk of a relapse. Mr. James McGee kindly consented to take Mr. Schenck's place, and although he had but a few hours notice, he preached an able discourse on "A Noble Life." His thoughts being gathered from the text as found in the thirteenth chapter of the Acts, and thirty-sixth verse.

The Rev. W. E. Honeyman occupied the pulpit of Dr. Ketcham's church in the evening, owing to the illness of the latter.

Another Real Estate Opening.

Now that the Beck fire has cleared the way, THE PRESS would suggest that Mr. Peter Wooden continue Vine street to [illegible] place, and thus bring into the market some more reasonably priced but desirable dwelling sites.

Miss Dodge to Speak in Plainfield.

Miss Grace H. Dodge will give a talk on Manual Training, at four o'clock on Thursday afternoon of this week, in the lecture room of the First Presbyterian church under the auspices of the Young Ladies' Mission Band. Admission free and all interested in the subject are invited to be present.

Always Ahead.

Manager Charles Runyon, representing the New Jersey Telephone company, in this city, closed the metallic circuit with Trenton, Monday, one day ahead of time. Mr. Runyon pushed the work so rapidly that the wire factories could not keep his men supplied. Otherwise the work would have been completed at a [illegible].

Constables Demand Cash Payments.

The Constables of Somerset county met in the court house at Somerville, recently, upon the call of J. W. A. [illegible], of North Plainfield, who was elected chairman. They discussed the change of fees proposed by Sheriff Codington and a committee brought him before the meeting to state his case.

The meeting afterwards agreed by ballot to accept 30 cents instead of 25 cents for serving subpoenas, and $[illegible] instead of $[illegible] for writs of replevin, to be paid in cash when the service is rendered without waiting until the settlement of the case.

An Accident Results in Death.

John O'Reilly died at Muhlenberg Hospital about six o'clock of last Thursday. He was one of the two men injured the day before by the fall of a scaffold at North Plainfield.

Last Thursday afternoon, as told in THE PRESS, O'Reilly was much improved and the doctors and his friends who saw him expected that he would be out in a few days. Towards evening, however, a change set in and the unfortunate man died from concussion of the spine.

He leaves a wife soon to become a mother. His companion when the accident occurred, was a workman named [illegible] who is now confined to his home on Westfield with a broken jaw and arm. Matthew Agony had just left the scaffold when it fell. He brought O'Reilly to the city, and supposed he was improving when he called at the Hospital to find him dead.

MANNING—PALMER.

The Wedding Bells Ring in Evona, and Dr. Yerkes Officiates.

For several weeks Evona Society has been on the qui vive, owing to its anticipation of a wedding, which was privately celebrated Wednesday evening, January 8th, at the residence of the bride.

The ceremony was performed at six o'clock by the Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes. The contracting parties were Mr. Daniel L. Manning, and Mrs. Harriet E. Palmer, both of Evona. The bride was tastefully attired in black silk. Mr. John Day acted as best man, and Miss May Palmer, as maid of honor to her mother. The bridal couple upon entering the parlors took their positions under an arch way, where the ceremony was performed.

The guests were as follows: Mrs. D. J. Yerkes, of Plainfield, Mr. Howard Randolph, of Sampton; Mrs. Katharine Randolph, of Sampton, and Mrs. Adaline Thompson, of Newark, both sisters of the groom; Miss Edith Manning and Master Clifford Manning, children of the groom; Misses May and Grace Palmer, daughters of the bride; Mr. P. Bedell and Miss Ellen Bedell, of Peapack, Mrs. Josephine Wright and nephew of Orange, Mr. John Day, and son and daughter, and Miss Margaret Kennedy, of Evona.

A supper was partaken of, after the ceremony, and was duly appreciated. The bridal party left by the 8:21 train from Plainfield, connecting with the 9:30 train at Elizabeth, for Washington.

ANOTHER BOLD ATTEMPT.

An Incendiary Sets Fire to Frank Linke's Beer Bottling Establishment Sunday Night.

About 10 o'clock Sunday evening while Mr. and Mrs. Frank Linke were entertaining some friends at their residence on Somerset street, Mrs. Linke had a presentiment that some one was prowling about the place. She opened the front door but saw nothing unusual. On opening the back door Mrs. Linke was surprised to see a bright fire burning in one end of her husband's beer bottling establishment, about fifty yards back of the house.

The flames were rapidly eating their way up to the roof, and Mrs. Linke immediately gave an alarm. Her husband and the other inmates of the house rushed out and with a few pails of water the fire was extinguished before much damage was done.

Upon investigation it was found that the building had been saturated with kerosene oil, which had been taken from a barrel standing in the yard.

No one was seen to apply the match, but the fire was doubtless started by an incendiary. This makes the second fire in North Plainfield within a few days.

A NEW ROAD TO PLAINFIELD.

[illegible] Newark by Way of the Jersey Central?

The signified willingness of the Central Railroad of New Jersey to build a spur leaving the city of Newark and skirting in the direction of South Orange, is considered significant. The General Superintendent of the line informs the West End Improvement Association that the proposed branch will make connection with the main line near Fanwood or Plainfield. This would take the line through a region that is growing rapidly. The spur would offer facilities to the people living in the suburbs of Plainfield and Newark and in the cities themselves, and would aid materially in developing the country round about. The proposed scheme will [illegible] the Pennsylvania railroad [illegible], it being understood that that road has a speculative eye on the traffic to be had by building a branch through the Oranges and the adjacent country.

The people of Newark are rejoicing at the prospect of having no longer to submit to the rates and charges, and delays and inconveniences of the Morris and Essex branch of the "Delay, Linger and Wait" corporation.

The Young Men's Auxiliary Election.

At the semi-annual election of the Young Men's Auxiliary of the Y. M. C. A., held on Tuesday, the following officers were chosen:

President—Harry S. [illegible].
Vice-President—William [illegible].
Secretary—A. J. [illegible].
Treasurer—Edward [illegible].

Clothesline Thieving.

Some time between eight and nine o'clock on Monday evening, some person or persons unknown, entered the door-yard of Mr. Geo. P. Mellick on Broadway and stripped the clothesline of a large quantity of valuable wearing apparel, which had been left out after dark to dry. Every article of clothing on the line was [illegible] and carried away, and the clothespins were found scattered about on the ground.

Endorsed by Everybody.

Numerous petitions are being circulated among the members of the Union County bar and other citizens, for the reappointment on the Supreme bench of Judge [illegible] Van Syckel, whose circuit includes Union and Ocean counties. The petitions have been signed by every lawyer of [illegible] in the county and officials and other prominent citizens, without regard to party. The papers will be presented to Governor Abbett when he is inaugurated.

Vincent—Palmer.

George E. Vincent, son of Bishop John H. Vincent, the Chautauquan leader, was married last week to Mary Louise Palmer, daughter of Ex-Attorney General Palmer. The groom is private secretary to his father and is a prominent Chautauquan also.

The ceremony was performed in St. [illegible] church, Wilkesbarre, Pa., in which city the bride's parents have long lived. A number of prominent Plainfield people were present. Mr. and Mrs. Vincent will make their permanent home in Buffalo, N. Y., where the headquarters [illegible] officers of the C. L. S. C. will in the future be located.

Funeral of Mrs. William Moore.

(From The Press of January 9.)

The last sad funeral rites following the sudden death of Mrs. William Moore, which occurred on Tuesday, took place from St. Mary's church this morning, at 10:30 o'clock. The church was well filled with the relatives and friends of Mrs. William Moore, many of whom were present at the service on Tuesday, when [illegible] was celebrated for the repose of Mr. Moore's soul.

The service today was a solemn requiem high mass, Father Stafford was the celebrant, assisted by Rev. Father Smyth as deacon and a visiting Father as subdeacon. The same choir from Father Corrigan's church of Elizabeth, which rendered the music on Tuesday, sang today. The pall-bearers were Messrs. Peter Flynn, Sr., D. S. Roberts, T. Mara, P. Sheridan, M. Shannon and John Kerwin. Interment was made beside her late husband in St. Mary's Cemetery.

The deceased was formerly Miss Kate [illegible]. She was the late William Moore's second wife, having been married [illegible] years.

It was not "Mr. Pliny Fisk's coachman," but John Watson, Mr. Charles [illegible]'s gardener, who was thrown from a [illegible] on Park avenue, Monday afternoon.

[illegible] General Kennedy, of the G. A. R., was administered the oath of office by Governor Green at the Executive Mansion, Trenton, on Monday, in the presence of a number of friends and State officials. He subsequently entertained the Governor and others, including [illegible].

INSTALLATION OF OFFICERS.

Winfield Scott Post and the Woman's Relief Corps Jointly Install Their Officers.

The joint public installation of the newly elected officers of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R. and the Woman's Relief Corps, No. 10, took place in the post rooms, on Tuesday, and there was a large number of spectators in attendance. Following are the officers of the Post installed—Commander Fisher of Jersey City, being the installing officer:

Commander—Isaac Brokaw.
Senior Vice Commander—Charles B. Stevens.
Junior Vice Commander—Wm R. Moore.
Quartermaster—S. C. Terry.
Surgeon—Wm. B. Northrop.
Chaplain—John A. Goodwin.
Officer of the Day—I. McVoy.
Officer of the Guard—Wm. H. Day.

Mrs. Jessie V. Atwood installed the officers of the Corps as follows:

President—Mrs. Jennie D. Smith.
S. V. P.—Mrs. Hannah Westphal.
J. V. P.—Mrs. Emma L. Stevens.
Secretary—Mrs. Jessie D. Brokaw.
Treasurer—Mrs. Julia C. Drake.
Chaplain—Mrs. Emma Cox.
Conductor—Mrs. Matilda W. Terry.
Asst. Cond'r—Mrs. Henrietta Moore.
Guard—Mrs. Elizabeth McVoy.
Asst. Guard—Mrs. Prosher.

The retiring President made a few very interesting remarks, after which a handsome basket of flowers was presented to her by four of her associate officers.

At the close of the installation services, Commander Brokaw, of Post No. 73, made a few appropriate remarks, thanking the installing officers.

During the evening, Mrs. Welcome and Mrs. Canfield contributed some excellent vocal music, and Miss Try Mattox and Miss Mabel Benedict each recited.

Included in the programme was also a speech by Commander Vickery of Wadsworth Post, No. 75 of Somerville, a speech and presentation by Col. J. T. Van Cleef of Somerville, a song by Mr. Sam'l Chivers, recitations by Col. VanCleef and Mr. J. H. Carney, and an address by Ex-Mayor L. V. F. Randolph.

A bountiful collation was afterward provided for all who attended, and at a late hour the gathering dispersed, every one expressing themselves as well pleased with the evening's entertainment.

AN UNUSUAL [illegible].

Over Seven Hundred Votes Cast at the Annual Election of First National Bank Directors.

In past years the total shares of stock voted on at the election of a Board of Directors for the First National Bank, has been about 70; Tuesday it was over 1,700. The following was chosen by the vote stated:

John Simpson, 1,782; P. M. French, 1,782; I. W. Rushmore, 1,548; W. McD. Coriell, 1,549; D. F. Randolph, 1,548; Charles Potter, Jr., 1,531; I. D. Titsworth, 1,526; H. M. Estil, 1,470; W. M. Stillman, 1,294.

The Board met Wednesday and elected the following officers of the Bank for the ensuing year:

President—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Vice-President—D. F. Randolph.
Cashier—[illegible].
Assistant Cashier—Frank S. Runyon.

Mr. Abram Dunlap, a stockholder, says the time stated in the notice sent him was wrong, and when he arrived at the meeting the polls were closed and he was debarred from voting for Directors. There was no other complaint of the same sort, however.

Everybody Has Cast-Off Clothing to Spare.

At this season of the year, the Relief Association has frequent calls for second-hand clothing, which, owing to the small supply on hand, it is unable to meet. In some cases children are kept away from school on this account.

Donations of clothing of all sorts—especially that for boys—will be gratefully received at the Association rooms, No. 46 West Second street.

E. R. LEONARD, Secretary.

City Bank Election.

The shareholders in the City National Bank met Tuesday and elected Directors for the ensuing year as follows: Messrs Chas. Hyde, E. R. Pope, J. F. Hubbard, J. B. Coward, J. T. Closson, J. K. Myers, C. Schepflin, J. F. MacDonald and F. H. Gardner.

The Directors met today and re-elected Mr. Chas. Hyde, President; Mr. E. R. Pope, Vice President, and Mr. F. H. Gardner, Cashier.

Decorations Unequalled.

A New York paper speaking of the floral decorations at the Hyde-Godfrey wedding and reception, says:

"Never were lovelier decorations seen before in the United States. Probably they have never been equalled either here or elsewhere. The large front room, where the reception was held, was a bower of American beauties and Palma violets. In the drawing room white violets and white orchids screened the walls. Every room in the whole house was decorated with flowers and plants, each in a different style, but all harmonizing, strong contrasts being avoided. A more wonderful and luxuriant, yet perfectly chaste, floral display has never been made on this continent."

Don't Mistake Us!

An explanation of the sentiments of THE PRESS in one particular, seems necessary. While it was natural and appropriate to praise President Moffett's enthusiasm for his party in appointing only Democrats on the Water Committee, yet such praise for such a reason was not intended as any approval of the good judgment of such partisan apportionment.

President Moffett's party must now shoulder the entire responsibility of all defects or accidents that may be laid at the door of the Water Committee. If but one Republican had been included in the committee, the "other party" would have had to bear a share of the just and unjust criticism and reproach that will befall the Water Committee.

Anchor Lodge Installation.

The above named lodge held its installation services on Tuesday, when Past Master C. M. Goddard installed the following officers:

Worshipful Master—Craig A. Marsh.
Senior Warden—H. H. Lowrie.
Junior Warden—Albert Venion.
Treasurer—J. E. Terrill.
Secretary—J. H. [illegible].
Proxy to Grand Lodge—O. T. Waring.
Trustees—W. A. Freeman, F. O. Harring, O. T. Waring.

Besides the above elected officers, the following remarkably fine list of appointees, chosen by the Worshipful Master, were also installed:

Chaplain—Rev. [illegible].
Senior Deacon—[illegible].
Junior Deacon—[illegible].
Masters of Ceremonies—O. T. Waring and [illegible].
Stewards—W. E. Lowe and F. O. Bowers.
Marshal—E. L. Freeman.
Organist—E. C. Howard.
Tyler—[illegible].
Committee on Finance—[illegible], M. Goddard, C. C. [illegible] and W. A. Freeman.
Committee on History, Library and Literary Records—E. C. [illegible], Charles A. Reed and [illegible].

A collation was served after the installation ceremonies were concluded.

CITY COUNCIL MEETING.

President Moffett Appoints the Standing Committees—The Collector's Bond Increased from $15,000 to $25,000—The Mayor's Message Received.

The City Council for 1890 met in adjourned session on Monday, with President Elmore D. Moffett in the chair.

Besides the President there were present Messrs. Dunham, Gallup, Jenkins, Johnson, Hetfield, Roberts, Rushmore, Smith and Spangenberg—10. Mr. Newhall was the only member absent.

Clerk Joseph B. Coward called the roll and read the minutes of the last meeting.

President Moffett then announced the Standing Committees for the year as follows:

Alms—Messrs M. M. Dunham, O. L. Jenkins, T. Rushmore.

Auditing—Messrs O. L. Jenkins, T. Rushmore, John Johnson.

Finance—Messrs H. B. Newhall, O. L. Jenkins, S. G. Smith.

Fire and Public Buildings—Messrs W. L. Hetfield, A. T. Gallup, D. S. Roberts.

Laws and Ordinances—Messrs T. Rushmore, M. M. Dunham, H. B. Newhall.

Licenses—Messrs John Johnson, S. G. Smith, D. S. Roberts.

Police, Salaries and Election—Messrs D. S. Roberts, W. L. Hetfield, L. Spangenberg.

Public Lights—Messrs L. Spangenberg, H. B. Newhall, M. M. Dunham.

Streets—Messrs S. G. Smith, John Johnson, A. T. Gallup.

Water, Printing and Stationery—Messrs A. T. Gallup, W. L. Hetfield, L. Spangenberg.

A communication from Mr. L. W. Serrell reflecting upon the City Clerk was referred to the Law and Ordinance Committee, and the claims of Mrs. Alvreta Suydam $150; the estate of the late D. J. Boice, $268.12, and C. Jones, $5.50, were referred to the Auditing Committee. The bills were subsequently returned for the Clerk to certify as to their correctness.

The President appointed Messrs. Hetfield, Johnson and Dunham a Committee to wait upon his honor, the Mayor, and receive the latter's message.

The Message was read, and a copy ordered for each member.

Collector Johnson submitted his bond for $15,000 with the names of G. M. Clifton, John Ross and A. Love, Sr., as sureties. It was referred, together with the bond of Treasurer Titsworth for $15,000. The latter bond included the names of Alex. Titsworth, J. G. Cadmus, D. S. Roberts, E. C. Mulford J. S. Cutter and L. A. Hummer as sureties.

At a later stage in the proceedings, upon motion of Mr. Smith, the Collector's bond for this year was increased to $25,000.

Other bonds were presented and referred as follows: Amos Moffett, Constable, sureties E. F. Thorn, W. E. Codington; Geo. R. Rockafellow, Constable, sureties Jacob Voehl, J. H. French; Jacob Kriney, Constable, sureties Wm. McD. Coriell, V. L. Franco; Wm. E. Mattox, Constable, sureties E. R. Pope, W. W. Coriell.

Upon motion of Mr. Hetfield the Clerk was authorized to have committee cards printed and to procure the necessary stationery. One hundred copies of the rules were also ordered printed.

Mr. Hetfield offered a resolution which prevailed, authorizing the Treasurer to pay certain notes falling due within a few days.

Council then adjourned to the 20th instant.

Installation of Officers.

The newly elected officers of Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum, were installed on Monday, by District Grand Regent Carr, of Elizabeth, as follows:

"You Have Anything He Wants."

The New York World in publishing a portrait gallery of the members of the New Jersey legislature that organized today, says of one of them:

"Judge John Ulrich needs no introduction. There are few of all the sixty members of the House better known than he is, and none better liked irrespective of politics. He has only passed his thirty-third year, but he has more friends than many men could make in a century. He lives in Plainfield, and the people of that town say that they can't help letting him have anything he wants. He is way up in Masonic circles and is editor of the Royal Craftsman, the recognized organ of the craft in this State. He hesitated about complying with the request for this picture you see here, and finally acceded with the remark that he "could not very well afford to refuse so popular a sheet as the New York World." He is a good talker, a splendid lawyer and a first-class parliamentarian."

Strikes and Spares.

The Crescent League have issued visitor's cards without which, signed by a member, outsiders are not admitted to the privileges of the club house.

The trustees of the Crescent League have in view the addition of a thousand-dollar billiard room to the club house. Plans and estimates are all in and work will probably begin in a few weeks.

Mr. George A. Wadleigh of the Jersey City Athletic Club, during Tuesday evening of last week, rolled the perfect score of 300, and keeping on made 15 consecutive strikes. This was accomplished in the presence of 50 members.

The following games have been scheduled by the Olympics of this city, to be bowled on the Olympic alleys, Sycamore street: Friday evening, Young Americas of Newark; Tuesday evening of next week, Alphas of Newark; Friday evening of next week, Somersets of Somerville.

On Monday the 16th match for the county championship was rolled on the Crescent League's alleys against the Elizabeth team. The Plainfield boys after a bad start fought an uphill contest and pulled their opponents' lead down to 30 in the eighth frame. But it was too hot a pace for any team to keep up, and the visitors' superior wind-up left the Crescents 30 pins behind.

The score was as follows:

THE MAYOR'S MESSAGE.

What He Thinks About the Water Works, Street Railroads, Liquor Licenses, the Fire Department, a City Hall and Other Matters of Public Concern.

To the Honorable Common Council of the City of Plainfield:

GENTLEMEN:—Those whom the citizens of Plainfield deem worthy of the honor of representing them in the City government do not need to be reminded of the grave responsibility they assume in accepting the office of Councilman. Men who without pecuniary compensation voluntarily undertake to devote their time and labor, to invite and withstand the criticism of those who honestly differ from them, to endure the unjust but inevitable attacks of the grumbler and captious fault-finder, and the even more hostile and sometimes virulent assaults of parties whose selfish hopes an upright Council is bound to disappoint, have almost uniformly justified in this City the wisdom of the popular will. But it is proper that agreeably to established custom, I should on the occasion of your first meeting briefly call attention to what in my judgment are the more important matters requiring consideration at this time.

WATER.

The Common Council of 1889, after painstaking preliminary investigations and negotiations, authorized the execution of a contract under which the City and its inhabitants are to be supplied with water for fire protection and other purposes. It is a matter of great satisfaction that the gentlemen who compose the corporation with which the contract has been made are so well and favorably known in this community for their integrity of character and business ability. The terms of the contract too are believed to be highly advantageous to the City, and the City holds the $50,000 bond of the company and its sureties to ensure the faithful performance of the contract. But the water works yet remain to be built; the contract remains to be performed; and it is the necessity of the most watchful care and prudent forethought in connection with the numerous details in the execution of this contract, that I respectfully suggest as a matter of the first importance. True, the judgment of the engineer selected by the City is required to be satisfied and his approval obtained by the company; but to render his judgment in all cases the most enlightened possible, it is essential that he should be supplied with accurate data and kept fully advised concerning the views of your honorable body in the respects contemplated by the contract. In case of failure by the company to faithfully execute its undertaking, the City is clothed by the contract with extraordinary powers. While the City should not hesitate to invoke these powers should a proper occasion be presented, yet the interests involved are so vital that the City, before having recourse to such high powers, should always in the first instance receive the benefit of the most thoughtful deliberation of your honorable body, guided by sound legal advice.

STREET RAILROAD.

There is one proposed improvement about which our people seem at last to have but one mind. I refer to a street railroad. In urging the consideration of this matter upon prior common councils, I have been at some pains to specifically point out the advantages to be derived from a street railroad, properly constructed and conducted under proper management, and it was a source of great satisfaction to observe that not only did the project receive the emphatic support of taxpayers, but that the common council of last year were heartily in favor of the proposed improvement, and early took active steps looking to its speedy accomplishment. Your honorable body is doubtless familiar with the history of the efforts made in this direction and the reasons why they proved abortive. The labor recently bestowed upon the consideration of this question will not have been wasted, if, by timely action of the present council, the question is reopened. Other improvements have necessarily in most instances entailed additional expense upon the City government, while the one now under consideration, although hardly second in importance to any other, may, it is believed, be successfully introduced without the burden of one dollar upon the city treasury. I earnestly recommend that among the first subjects to which the attention of the present council should be directed is this subject of providing our City with such means of transit as will comport with the advanced position of the City in most other respects.

LICENSES.

The result of the last charter election would appear to leave no doubt as to the views of a large majority of the voters of this City respecting the best method of dealing with the evil of intemperance. With the views so expressed and recorded, I am in entire accord. Yielding to none in the abhorrence with which I regard the alarming results of intemperance in the use of intoxicating liquors, I believe that the only practicable method of lessening the dangers, and diminishing the suffering and crime incident to such intemperance, is by high license and strict police regulations, and rigid enforcement of penal enactments, to confine the evil within the narrowest possible limits, and to reduce its disastrous effects to a minimum. There are few communities anywhere in which there are so many and such severe restrictions thrown about the liquor traffic as, from time to time, have been prescribed in this City, and as today constitutes the provisions of the City liquor license ordinance. I had the honor to suggest to the last Common Council certain additional restrictions, some of which that body incorporated into the City law. No licenses have been granted since those amendments were made, and while with many other citizens I should be glad to see further restrictions imposed, yet in deference to what I believe to be the present state of public opinion which your honorable body represent, I am content to urge a full and fair trial of the ordinance as it stands, asking only that the members of the Council will, as they have opportunity, assist the executive officers of the City government in their effort to rigorously enforce the existing law.

CITY HALL.

On the score of true economy as well as the real needs of the City government, I renew the suggestion made in my last annual message and in the special message of July 5, 1887, recommending the purchase of a suitable lot and the erection thereon of a city hall. These ends may be accomplished without difficulty under existing laws, and I still believe that the best interests of the City would thereby be subserved.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The legislature of 1889, acting in accordance with the request of the Common Council, and the recommendation of the Mayor of Plainfield, amended the state law so as to give the same benefit of limited exemption from taxation to Plainfield firemen who became exempt in the service of the old fire department, as if that department had always been controlled by the City. Reference is made to this legislation because, with the introduction of fire-hydrants, it is not improbable that your honorable body may introduce some changes in the management of the Plainfield Fire Department. Should any such changes be contemplated, it is respectfully suggested that the recognition which the State makes of the status of volunteer firemen, both as to those now active and as to those who by a proper period of service have become entitled to exemption from active duty, should serve as a guide in the enactment of City ordinances, and that the objects of such legislation should not be unwittingly contravened in letter or in spirit. Until the fire-hydrant system shall have been perfected, the necessity of preserving the present apparatus of the department in good, serviceable condition is obvious, and suggests the need of continuous careful inspections in order to maintain the efficiency of this important department of our local government, while at the same time it is equally important to bear in mind the change in the method of protecting property from fire that will in the near future be brought about by the introduction of water works, and to guard against unnecessary expenditures that may serve a temporary purpose only.

STREETS.

How best to provide for maintaining in proper repair the many miles of permanently improved road-beds in Plainfield, and gradually to extend such permanent improvements, and yet scrupulously to keep within a just limit of expenditure for these purposes, are very practical questions. The law lately enacted which enables the City at the general expense to make permanent improvements in road-beds, while confessedly highly beneficial to this and other communities, should not be too freely invoked. The admirable plan that has before been adopted to a considerable extent, and which consists in requiring the property owners along any such proposed improvement to subscribe in advance two-thirds or some other fair proportion of the total cost, leaving the remainder as the City's share of the burden, is fair and equitable to such property owners, is just to taxpayers in other parts of the City, and tends to foster public spirit and interest property owners in the affairs of the City government.

It is the just expectation of property owners who have subscribed to the funds for such permanent street improvements, that the city shall keep the road-bed in repair. Experience shows that the economical way to repair and the way to keep the streets always in good condition, is to act at once upon any defect appearing in the surface of the road-bed. Delay is not only vexatious but expensive.

Under a salutary State law, this City lately adopted a general ordinance concerning sidewalks, by virtue of which it is competent for the Street Commissioners under direction of your honorable body to cause suitable sidewalks to be laid, where needed, at the expense of the adjoining property owner. Within a narrower district, a similar provision regulates the curbing of streets. These ordinances call for the exercise of sound discretion. The law contemplates the machinery being set in motion by a notice served on the property owner. There are cases in which the public interests require that such a notice should be served. I suggest that in such cases prompt steps be taken and the powers conferred by the law be exercised.

So much of the comfort and attractiveness of living in Plainfield, and of the reputation of the City depends upon the conditions of our sidewalks and road-beds, that the subject is worthy of the constant and careful consideration of those having the care of the streets under their supervision and control.

TAXATION.

While the rate of taxation in this City compares favorably with that of most of the other cities of the State, yet it is undeniable that on the whole, our taxes have gradually increased in rate, notwithstanding the very large increase in the value of taxable property, and the fact that the City has been and is practically free from debt. It has been before pointed out that this increase is chiefly attributable to the increased amounts raised for the school taxes, and that last year, with respect to City taxes assessed under direct authority of the Common Council, there was an actual decrease as compared with the preceding year. Our present system does not contemplate any direct cooperation between the school department and the Common Council with reference to the amount of taxes to be assessed for local school purposes. The law provides that the Board of Education shall determine what amount is required within the prescribed limits, and that amount, upon being certified to the taxing officers, is required to be assessed and collected in the same manner as the other City taxes. General legislation, subsequent to the laws incorporating the Board of Education, enable the people to cause the reorganization of Boards of Education so as to create a closer relation between that board and other departments of the City government. Our citizens, however, have always taken a just pride in the high character of our Boards of Education and in the efficiency of our schools, and it is believed that there exists no desire to change the general scheme under which the schools are managed. Nevertheless, I respectfully suggest that there should be conference and co-operation to some extent, regarding the matter of taxes for school purposes, between the Board of Education and the Common Council. The Common Council, as the chief fiscal body of the City, should, it would seem, be consulted in advance of the peremptory demand which the old law provided should be made upon the taxing officers of the City. Such conference, had prior to the enactment of the annual tax ordinance, might result in mutual concessions that could do no harm and might materially benefit the interests of the taxpayers. I recommend, therefore, that your honorable body by some appropriate action, such as the appointment of a committee on conference with the Board of Education, take cognizance of this matter, with a view of maintaining a just ratio between the taxes to be assessed for school purposes and those to be assessed for other purposes strictly within the charter powers of the Common Council. I take it as an augury of pleasant and harmonious relations between your honorable body and the executive department of our City Government, that your members have already so freely and cordially solicited mutual co-operation. Assured as I am of the sincerity of such expressions, and of the soundness of the principle that the business of our City Government, like any other business may be most successfully transacted when such a spirit actuates those to whom the several branches of the business are confided, I cheerfully and cordially greet your honorable body upon that basis, and tender myself ready at all times heartily to assist in all that makes for good government in this community.

Your obedient servant,
JOB MALE, Mayor.

ONE EIGHTH OF A MILLION RECEIPTS.

Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle's Yearly Income as Reported at the Trustees' Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Chautauqua Assembly was held at Rochester, Thursday, President Miller presiding.

The publishing department of the Assembly was referred to at length in Chancellor Vincent's report. The Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle and the programme for the coming Assembly were discussed. An important recommendation was that of a union of the forty Chautauqua assemblies, which now act independently of each other. The death of Professor Olson, late professor of Greek, was referred to and a committee was appointed to draft resolutions.

Secretary Duncan's report showed that the receipts were $124,536 and the expenditures $121,527. The debt was reduced $5,000. The present indebtedness is $30,000.

Much of the afternoon session was devoted to the consideration of the president's recommendations about the co-operation of the assemblies.

IS IT A SUICIDE?

Paul Axmann, of This City, Found Dead.

(From The Press of Jan. 11.)

Last evening a well dressed and perfectly sober man who registered as "Paul Axmann, Plainfield, N. J." was assigned a room in the Somerset Hotel by Mr. Richard A. Boyce the proprietor. This morning at eleven o'clock as the lodger had not made an appearance, the room was entered and he was found dead in the bed.

The man told Mr. Boyce last evening that he lived in Plainfield, but it was too late for him to go home. Late in the night Mr. and Mrs. Boyce, whose room was directly under the one occupied by the lodger heard him snoring.

Dr. W. E. Mattison was summoned when the man's condition was discovered, and he pronounced him dead. County Physician Wagoner was sent for at once, and until his arrival and examination it will not be known if it is a case of suicide or natural death.

The man lies on his side with his arms folded, his eyes almost tightly closed, his legs in an easy position and the expression on his face perfectly calm. Not a feature nor muscle is drawn. The entire appearance and position of the body points to a quiet, natural death. The dead man's clothing is partly hung upon the wall and partly placed carefully on a chair beside the bed.

Judging by the name registered and the face of the man, he is the coachman who was recently arrested by Chief Carey for being intoxicated and driving recklessly through the streets. He probably was discharged and has since had no other regular situation. He is a Dane, but whether he has any family is not known.

LOCAL MINSTRELSY, MUSIC AND FARCE.

The Crescent League's Greatest Show on Earth Will Take Place February 25 in Music Hall.

At the regular meeting of Plainfield Crescent League held in their club house last week, Chairman Howard Emerson of the committee on entertainment, reported the most favorable progress. He said Music Hall had been engaged for Tuesday evening, February 25; a double quartette consisting of the pick of local vocalists, were also rehearsing for the opening part; double acts and specialties were being arranged, and the play that would close the programme, would be selected in a day or two.

It seems undoubted that the Hall will not hold the audience. Over three hundred tickets have already been applied for. The programme will be varied and extended, and principally carried out by the well known young men of the city and borough. Mr. Robert F. R. Huntsman will be the middle man of the minstrel opening, a position he is particularly well fitted to fill because of his pleasantry and pompadour.

"UNCLE BILLY'S" WEALTH.

His Only Son Will Have to Fight For Its Possession.

The late William Moore who died in this city recently and but a few days before his wife, is said to have left all but a small part of his money and property to that wife since deceased. Such a will entirely cuts off John Moore the son and only child of the testator. The will was drawn by ex-Judge Nelson Runyon; and the Rev. Father Smyth of St. Mary's church, and ex-County Collector Patrick Sheridan, of Elizabeth, were named as executors.

Some time ago William Moore, who could not write himself, had his particular friend Mr. Bernard Brady, of Liberty street, draw him a "will" leaving everything to his wife. It was reported that in that "will," Brady's son, who was also Moore's godson, was left the property at Second street and Park avenue known as the City Hotel. But that is not so.

However, friends later informed Moore that a "will" drawn in such a way would not stand. [illegible]d just before his death the will referred to above was drawn by Mr. Runyon. By it a PRESS reporter is told, everything went to Mrs. Moore except a small amount to be paid yearly to the testator's son, John Moore, "as long as he behaved himself."

Of course the latter intended to file a protest against the probate of this will. He was Moore's son by his first wife during whose life the wealth had been accumulated in a great measure by that wife's care and economy. It was most unjust that this should all be left to a second wife who had no hand in its saving.

But before the will was offered for probate and the son had taken the first steps to break it, the legatee, Mrs. Moore, died. Now the property has descended by law to her heirs, who are not relatives of Moore, and probably perfect strangers to the son. Therefore he must now make a long fight for his rights, and maybe find but half of the property left even if he wins after years of litigation.

The estate of "Uncle Billy," as he was universally called, may foot up $200,000 against which are liabilities of probably half that amount. The two properties on the North and East corners of Park avenue and Second street, are alone worth $75,000 at a low estimate, and are mortgaged for $30,000.

The BREATH of a chronic catarrh patient is often so offensive that he becomes an object of disgust. After a time ulceration sets in, the spongy bones are attacked and frequently entirely destroyed. A constant source of discomfort is the dripping of the purulent secretions into the throat, sometimes producing inveterate bronchitis, which in its turn has been the exciting cause of pulmonary disease. The brilliant results which have attended its use for years past properly designate Ely's Cream Balm as by far the best and only cure.

Is that good?
Yes, for Pain, Colds, Cough, &c., it is excellent for either young or old. Of the many kinds of medicines I have used in my family I have found none to equal it.
Thank you, Jane. I will try it. Margaret Ann, go as soon as you can to either REYNOLDS', or SHAW'S Drug Store, and get a bottle of Dr. Taylor's Soothing Syrup. 1-2-6m

Catarrh

Is a Local Disease. Until the poison is expelled from the system, there can be no cure for this loathsome and dangerous malady. Therefore, the only effective treatment is a thorough course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.—the best of all blood purifiers. The sooner you begin the better; delay is dangerous.

"I was troubled with catarrh for over two years. I tried various remedies, and was treated by a number of physicians, but received no benefit until I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles of this medicine cured me of this troublesome complaint and completely restored my health."—Jesse M. Boggs, Holman's Mills, N. C.

"When Ayer's Sarsaparilla was recommended to me for catarrh, I was inclined to doubt its efficacy. Having tried so many remedies, with little benefit, I had no faith that anything would cure me. I became emaciated from loss of appetite and impaired digestion. I had nearly lost the sense of smell, and my system was badly deranged. I was about discouraged, when a friend urged me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and referred me to persons whom it had cured of catarrh. After taking half a dozen bottles of this medicine, I am convinced that the only sure way of treating this obstinate disease is through the blood."—Charles H. Maloney, 113 River st., Lowell, Mass.

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—Oh, for a Y. M. C. A. building.

—There will be prayer meetings in Hope chapel every evening this week, excepting Saturday.

—The druggists as well as the doctors and undertakers have been kept busy during the past week.

—Heat lightning was plainly to be seen in the Southwest Wednesday evening, January 8th, about six o'clock.

—The influenza has the "grip" on the police force. Sunday night officer Flanigan was the only officer on duty.

—The borough fire department is sadly in need of new hose, as was demonstrated at the Bush fire early on Tuesday morning.

—Now that the skating and fishing season has closed, it is to be hoped that any breaking of the law will be noticed at once and punished.

—One thousand dollars worth of carpets have just been purchased by the trustees for the Crescent Avenue church and its new school rooms.

—Indications are that 1890 will be quite a year for building operations in Plainfield. The more the merrier, all like to see the town grow.

—This is only the ninth day after New Year, but how about the resolutions taken at the beginning of the year.

—With all the rain we have had here, more than half the country has been suffering for the want of rain during the past six months.

—The Columbia College Glee and Banjo club of New York, will give a concert in Music Hall, on the evening of Monday, January 27.

—In many sections, reading societies, singing schools, spelling matches and similar amusements now occupy the attention of the rural population.

—Our Celestial brethren, the Chinese, will observe New Year's on January 21. It is their chief holiday, and they celebrate with flowers and feasting.

—A fine line of silver ties are offered by Morton the gentlemen's furnisher, at 5 West Front street, besides everything new in neck wear, underwear and head wear.

—The High and Grammar schools were dismissed at 3 P. M. Thursday, Jan. 9, in order to give the teachers an opportunity to attend the funeral of the late Mrs. T. E. Hassell.

—It is understood that there will be five new applications for liquor licenses this year, but an after consideration is whether or not the Council will grant any new licenses.

—Mr. Oliver Worth, the Pond Tool Works employe who was so seriously injured at the Works about five weeks ago, was discharged from Muhlenberg Hospital on Tuesday, January 7.

—The prevalence of the grip is seriously interfering with several business houses in this city, as many of their clerks are absent and those on duty are compelled to work extra hours.

—The heavy iron girders which are to serve as the foundation for Mr. P. M. French's new building on Somerset street, over Green Brook, have arrived, and they will be placed in position at once.

—The Metropolitan Life Insurance Company on Friday paid to William Rose the amount of the policy on the life of his son who died the day before. Jos. Keller of this city is the company's agent.

—Y. M. C. A. members are requested to reserve Thursday, January 30, for a members reception to be given at the Association rooms. An exhibition by the Camera Club will be the feature of the evening.

—A gang of young toughs from Westfield invaded this city Sunday, but fortunately, for them, the police force was crippled, or the police blotter this morning would have contained their names.

—One of the Plainfield commuters it is said created quite a disturbance on the ferry boat while on her way to New York, one morning recently, by chasing several of the passengers around with an umbrella.

—The contractors who have charge of the Union county road between Elizabeth and Rahway, have added a number of men and teams to their already large force, and the work to complete the road at an early date is being pushed with a vim.

—The Electric Construction and Supply company of which Mr. F. S. Dunn is the manager, this city, was awarded Saturday the contract for equipping the Grand Opera House, on West Second street, with electric lights, electric bells and speaking tubes.

—A disgracefully small audience was present at Music Hall, Monday evening, when M'lle Rhea presented her play of "Josephine," well supported. She was but imperfectly appreciated, though her power was fully recognized. It becomes more apparent every day, that the people of Plainfield can appreciate only variety shows.

—In our advertising columns will be found the announcement of Wm. Steel, of the Fanwood Milk Dairy. Mr. Steel will again serve his friends and the public with a pure article of milk, and as he has taken a new start in life we hope to see him successful in regaining his old customers. Give him a trial.

[illegible] Death from a [illegible].

County Physician Wagoner and Dr. W. E. Mattison have decided that Paul Assmann died a natural death as The Press said was evidenced by the man's appearance. It was considered unnecessary to put the county to the expense of an inquest, and a burial permit was granted by the Coroner.

Work Begun on the Water Works.

Mr. Chas. E. Moore, representing "The Water Works Company, of Plainfield," has commenced the work of introducing a system of water works in this city. The Company has recently appointed Mr. Moore to personally superintend the construction of the works, and that gentleman has opened an office in Mr D. W. Roberts' building on North avenue.

The preliminary work will consist of boring and drilling wells, and this work was commenced on property owned by Mr. John Leggett Johnston, on Mountain avenue.

A Nuisance That Should Be Abated.

To the Editor of The Press:—Will you kindly spare space in your valuable paper for these few lines. I have had occasion to come out from the city within the last year and a half on the midnight train, but I have never before last Sunday seen or heard so much vulgarity and corrupt manners exhibited by a party of young toughs from Westfield. I, like a good many more, like to enjoy a quiet smoke coming out, and therefore it is my duty to go in the smoking car. But no sooner than the train starts from the station than the previously mentioned youths commenced their work by passing around bottles of liquor, throwing [illegible] the car upside down, using the most indecent language, and otherwise making it very unpleasant to passengers. The writer is a total stranger to the party, but would judge the average age of them is from 20 to 30 years. Upon inquiring I find that a [illegible] sort of a well-known livery [illegible] to be the ring leader, or otherwise the captain.

VICTIM.

PERSONALS.

Mr. Francis Courdner, of West Fourth street, anticipates returning to Scotland, Saturday.

A young son of Mr. William Rose, of West Front street, died Thursday morning, January 9.

Miss M. E. Case of Stanton, N. J., is visiting her cousin, Miss Ella Milligan, of 41 West Fourth street.

Mr. Peter Johnson of East Second street, is again able to leave the house, after a two day's illness.

Mr. Richard Day lost his "grip," last Thursday, and went out of doors for the first time in over a week.

There was not service held in the First Baptist church Sunday night, on account of the illness of the pastor, the Rev. Dr. Yerkes.

Freeholder Andrew Vanderpeek is lying dangerously ill at his home on Second place, where he has been confined since Saturday.

Miss Lizzie Dean and Miss Gertie Derby have returned to their home in Harlem, after a very pleasant visit with friends in North Plainfield.

The mother of Mrs. Robert Currie died at the home of her son-in-law on Westervelt avenue, North Plainfield, today, of pleuro-pneumonia.

Mrs. A. M. Frasse, who has been confined to her home on Peace street, for the past eight weeks, with neuralgia and pleurisy, is no better.

The funeral of Miss Josephine E. Fowler, who died on Tuesday, took place from her parents' home, No. 10 Liberty street, last Thursday afternoon.

Mrs. Margaret Bottome will give one of her talks to the King's Daughters, of Plainfield, at the Y. M. C. A., rooms, on Saturday, January 18, at 3 o'clock P. M.

Mr. and Mrs. George King, of Newark, N. J., and Mrs. Ernest Laing, of Danbury, Conn., spent Sunday with their cousin, Mrs. L. Prescott, of West Second street.

The marriage of Miss Milliken, of Central avenue, and Mr. James Detiraff, will take place in the Crescent Avenue church, at six o'clock, Wednesday evening, the 22d inst.

The Rev. T. Logan Murphy, rector of the Holy Cross church, exchanged pulpits with the Rev. Mr. Cross, assistant rector of the St. John's church of Elizabeth, Sunday.

Miss Jennie L. Demarest, of East Fifth street, has been appointed to a Government clerkship in the Census Bureau department of religious statistics located in this city.

At the home of Mr. Peter Hoagland on West Front street, Wednesday evening, took place the marriage of Miss Amanda Randolph and Mr. Julius M. Williams. The Rev. Dr. Ketcham officiated.

In the absence of Mrs. E. H. Bird, who is ill, Mrs. Robert Gordon filled the position of contralto in the choir of Trinity Reformed church, Sunday morning and evening in a very acceptable manner.

Stephen Rushmore died Tuesday at his home in Westbury, L. I., aged 76 years. He leaves two sons residents of this city—Dr. Edward Rushmore and Howard P. Rushmore, ex-Secretary of the Queens County Agricultural Society.

Rev. J. C. Ferrald, who recently came to this city from the West, and took up his residence on West Front street, occupied the pulpit in the First Baptist church Sunday, Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, the pastor being detained at home by illness.

It is said that several years ago when the Central railroad stock was down to about 1½ per cent., the late William Moore went to New York with $60,000 in cash to buy up the stock, but he was persuaded not to purchase it, and returned home with his money.

A party of young ladies calling themselves the Social Eight, recently met at the residence of Mrs. Glaentzer for the purpose of electing officers: The following were chosen: President, Miss T. Smith; Secretary, Miss M. Hughes; Treasurer, Miss B. Ellison.

In answer to a number of inquiries, The Press would state that the term of Postmaster Force, of this city, expires on March 1. When a Republican government keeps a Democratic appointee in office, it only when it is impossible to find a single well founded complaint to use as cause for removal.

The members of the Alpha Lodge, Pleasure circle, gave a sociable in the Good Templars' room, corner of Park and North avenues, last Thursday. The main feature of the evening's enjoyment was dancing, and to that end Prof. Frasse catered in his usual excellent style. Supper was served during the evening.

Since Friday morning and afternoon and Monday evening of each week have been set apart for the ladies to enjoy the Crescent League's alleys, the fair friends of the members have attended in large numbers and are rapidly becoming proficient bowlers. Mrs. J. A. Haynes is so far the champion, having rolled 160.

The wealthy Cumberland Cement Company, of which Mr. Ernest R. Ackerman of this city is the principal sales agent in New York, have issued as usual at the beginning of each year, a calendar for 1890, designed and engraved on steel by Lowell of Boston. It is less "set" than the past designs, and far handsomer than that of 1889 though not equal in anyway to that of 1888.

The statement that the late James H. Caniff was the first member of the Plainfield Royal Arcanum to die since the organization seven years ago, was erroneous as far as it mentioned Mr. Caniff as a member. He had spoken of joining but his application, even, had not been presented. The life roll of the Royal Arcanum of this city, is yet unbroken.

Conductor Fitzhugh took occasion at the Monday evening rehearsal of the Plainfield Choral Society, to praise the members for their really fine work in the choruses and part songs of the recent opening concert of the season. He added that the professional soloists, who accompanied him to New York on the train that evening, were unanimous and sincere in their opinion that the chorus work was the best of the evening.

The Hon. Alva A. Clark, law partner of Borough Counsel Charles A. Reed, has broken ground for a handsome new barn and stables on his recently purchased property near Peters brook. The hillside is being graded so as to form a gentle slope to Mountain avenue, Somerville, and with the new and elegant house soon to be erected thereon, will, without doubt, make the handsomest country seat in Somerset county, if not in the State.

At an entertainment given at the Star Theatre, New York, Thursday, for the benefit of the Greeley Statue Fund, the editor of the Mount Ararat Standard was the principal attraction of the programme. The World said: "Mr. A. E. Pearsall, the stenographer of the Press Club, although just recovering from an attack of the 'grip,' occupied the stage for nearly an hour entertaining, with success, an appreciative audience with numerous recitations and experiences, serious and humorous."

The funeral of Mrs. T. E. Hassell was largely attended at Trinity Reformed church last Thursday afternoon. The Rev. A. V. V. Raymond, a former pastor, came from Albany to conduct the services. He preached one of the most beautiful sermons ever heard on a like occasion. The pall bearers were; Elder O. W. Dunham, and Deacons E. E. Anthony, Daniel Van Winkle and A. L. Force. Among the floral tributes was a token of esteem from the Ladies' Christian Work Society to their dead sister.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel McCarthy, of this city, will spend the Winter in New York.

Miss Mary Osborn, of Bloomfield, is visiting Mrs. J. P. Laffan, of Liberty street.

Mr Wm. C. Ayers, an old and respected resident of this city, is confined to his home on West Second street by illness.

Romeo Lascale, who has for some time past been a charge upon the city, died at his home on West Fourth street, during Monday night.

So far in the history of the Council of 1890, the city can congratulate itself on one thing—that Mr. S. G. Smith is Chairman of the Committee on Streets.

Mr. William Drake, one of Mr. Albert Hedden's employes, was admitted as a patient to Muhlenberg Hospital, Tuesday, suffering from an attack of typhoid pneumonia.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Julia Marx, who died on Saturday, took place from her late home on East Front street, Monday. Interment was made at Cypress Hills, New York.

Miss Helen Burnett, daughter of Mrs. James Caniff, of LaGrande avenue, is dangerously ill of the same disease, pneumonia, through which she nursed her step-father until his death a week ago.

President Butler, of the New Jersey Council of Education, has just announced its standing committees. He names Miss Buckley as a member of the Committee on Pedagogics, and Mr. Ross as a member of the Committee on Statistics.

An agreeable surprise party was tendered Miss Louise Pangborn at the home of her father on Rock View avenue, Washington Park, on Monday. There were a large number of her friends present. Dancing and refreshments were enjoyed.

Mr. J. T. Vail broke ground Tuesday for the erection of a handsome new dwelling house on Broadway, nearly opposite the Crescent Avenue church. The building will be 32x48 feet in dimensions, with side projections, and two-and-a-half stories in height. It will cost about $5,000.

Mr. George H. Babcock has purchased of Mr. John P. Onderdonk, through E. C. Mulford, the real estate broker, the fine building site on West Seventh street, one whole block in width and bounded by Madison and Central avenues. It is just the location for an eighty-thousand-dollar residence.

The funeral of the late Margaret M. Baptist, who died on Friday last, took place from the house, corner Westervelt and Brook avenues, North Plainfield, on Monday morning, Rev. T. L. Murphy officiating. The remains were taken to Newark for interment, where additional services were held in the afternoon.

The funeral of the late John S. O'Reilly, whose death resulted from his falling off a scaffold on Wednesday last, took place from his late home on Grand View avenue, North Plainfield, at 1:30 o'clock Sunday afternoon and from St. Joseph's church a half hour later. The Rev. Father Freeman, the pastor, officiated.

The marriage of Miss Emma Louise Roome, granddaughter of the late Judge Roome, of North Plainfield, and sister of Mr. William P. Roome, took place at the home of her mother, 47 West 58th street, New York, on the 2d inst. The groom was Mr. David Franklyn Harbaugh, a regular Summer resident at the Hotel Netherwood. The bride was enveloped in a thousand dollars' worth of point lace. The reception that followed was most elaborate in every way.

The Rev. Dr. Edgar's Funeral.

The funeral of the Rev. Dr. Edward B. Edgar, who died on Friday, took place from the Crescent Avenue church, Tuesday afternoon, in the presence of a large number of the relatives and friends of the deceased. Included among the clergy were many former associates of the Rev. Dr. Edgar. A special choir furnished appropriate music.

The Rev. Dr. Embree of Jersey City, offered the opening prayer, and the Rev. W. R. Richards read from the Scripture. The Rev. J. C. Bliss of New York, a former pastor of the Crescent Avenue church, told of his happy relationship with Dr. Edgar, adding that it was the latter's greatest pleasure to be present at the communion service. His presence was the benediction. The reverend gentleman characterized Dr. Edgar as a noble and true follower of Christ; one who had a most earnest zeal to labor for the Master. He was also devoted to missionary work. Dr. Bliss said that when he last visited Dr. Edgar on the evening of December 15, the latter told him that he seemed to be in the border plains, and was only waiting for the summons.

The Rev. Dr. Mott of Flemington, offered prayer, after which the Rev. Dr. Kempshall of Elizabeth, spoke on behalf of the Presbytery of Elizabeth. He said among other things that he had known Dr. Edgar with love and affection for the past quarter of a century. Twenty-eight years ago, on the 15th of last September, he said, the Rev. Dr. Edgar delivered the charge to the people when the speaker was installed pastor of Christ church of Elizabeth.

The Rev. Dr. Kempshall eulogized Dr. Edgar as a man who was so imbued with the spirit of the great truth, that he was intended to walk hand in hand with God.

The Rev Mr. Richards also spoke in eulogy of Dr. Edgar, and after the choir sang a hymn, the Rev. Dr. Kellogg of Mt. Pleasant pronounced the benediction.

The remains were taken to Westfield, and interred in Fairview Cemetery.

Shall the Women's School be Closed.

The Board of Education have announced that they do not feel justified in keeping open the evening school for women, unless there can be a regular attendance of at least thirty. If there are not more present on Monday and Friday evenings of this week, than there have been of late, the classes will certainly be discontinued. The ladies of the Relief Association wish to urge those who need such teaching as the school furnished, not to neglect this rare opportunity, nor let slip from them the means of laying the foundations of a good education.

A Good Woman Entered Into Rest.

The funeral of the late Althea DeCamp, which occurred at Chester, Morris Co., N. J., Thursday, January 9, was largely attended, a number of friends and acquaintances of deceased from this city attending.

The funeral services were conducted by the Rev. Dr. Brewster, of Chester, who, in his remarks, paid glowing tribute to the memory of Mrs. DeCamp—her Christian fortitude and precepts; her charitableness in life; her love as a mother and wife and her worth as a friend. With moist eyes the assembled friends and relatives listened to the remarks of the able divine, who knew deceased so well in life, and who so ably eulogized her in death. The remains were interred in the family burial plot at Chester.

The Deadly Barbed Wire.

A valuable Kentucky mare belonging to Mr. Frank E. Miller proprietor of Hotel Netherwood, escaped from the stable Sunday, and becoming frightened at a passing train ran away. The animal collided with a barbed wire fence, inflicting a deep flesh wound, eight inches in length on the shoulder.

Dr. Voorhees the veterinary expert was called in to dress the wound.

Disgusting Drugs.

Blue-mass for torpid liver, castor oil and other disgusting drugs for dyspepsia and sick headache, are being surely banished from use by the sweet, fruit-like HAMBURG FIGS. 25 cents. Dose, one. Mack Drug Co., N. Y. For sale by J. G. Miller.

REFORM CLUB.

Installation Meeting—Highly Interesting Reports—The Club in a Flourishing Condition.

The adjourned regular business meeting of the Reform Club was held Thursday Jan. 9th, President Harper in the chair, and Mr. Vanderbeek's full choir, with the exception of Miss Smith, present. Mr. George Rogers filled the place of organist.

After the usual devotional services, and the transaction of routine business, including annual reports, the Club proceeded to install officers elect for the year 1890.

Owing to sickness and other unavoidable circumstances some were prevented from attending.

The following appeared and were one by one duly clothed with official authority:

President—Nathan Harper.
1st Vice-President—George W. F. Randolph.
2nd " " —Edward B. Titsworth.
Financial Secretary—J. W. A. Bauerbach.
Treasurer—J. D. Spicer.
2nd Marshall—Wm. C. Smith.
Serg't at Arms—Mark Loss.

Each officer elect responded in fitting terms. The remarks of President Harper were in full as follows:

"My friends: Returning thanks for the honor conferred, I accept the Presidency for the current year, not with the desire of holding office, but for the sincere purpose of devoting whatever humble efforts I can exert towards advancing and perpetuating the practical usefulness of the Club organization.

"It is honorable to be a member of the Reform Club of Plainfield, because its mission is most worthy, aiming as it does to succor humanity, dignify manhood, and make homes happy. What nobler cause, next to that of religion, the close ally of temperance, can be found on earth? To rescue the perishing, to display signals of danger to the tempted, to advocate and illustrate the blessed results of total abstinence from the ruin freighted drunk habit, and to antagonize intoxicating liquor, in every form and place, as the enemy of both public and personal well being, is the dedicated object of this Hall. We here bow in reverence before Almighty God, and ignoring sectarianism, implore His protecting strength to guide and sustain us; and here, while espousing the principles of truth and justice, we dismiss partisan politics to other and more appropriate spheres of action.

"Let us rally with zeal and harmony around that standard, endeavor to make our Sunday and Thursday evening meetings increasingly attractive and profitable, and let us greet with pleasure the co-operation of every one who desires to see right triumphant for the lasting good of all the people. With these brief remarks, I renew the tender of thanks, and assume the official duties assigned me."

The President nominated and the Club confirmed the following Committees:

Executive Committee:—Andrew Vanderbeek, H. Newton Spencer, John H. French, Jacob Voehl, Wm. C. Smith.

Finance Committee:—W. R. Codington, S. P. Hoffman, L. A. Hummer.

A pleasant re-union around refreshment tables in Reform Hall parlors, closed the enjoyable occasion.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

The Plainfield Reform Club enters upon the seventh year of its existence with the prospects of a greater field of labor before it than ever. The past year's work compares favorably with that of recent years. Additions have been made to the Club roll, and about two hundred signatures have been obtained to the pledge. Our financial status is also up to the standard. Two excursions have been given during the year—one to Rockaway Beach, which netted $150, and one to Mauch Chunk that enriched the treasury $10. Both were occasions of great satisfaction and enjoyment to all who participated. A set of folding doors have been placed in the parlors of the Hall, whereby about one-half the room can be set-off (from the portion occupied by the Club members as a reading room), for the purpose of holding religious services, committee meetings, etc.

Your committee has also made the necessary repairs to the building as occasion required. In consideration of the many new attractions continually presenting themselves, the average attendance at our meetings has been good.

The Woman's Temperance Aid Society holds its regular business meetings on Tuesdays at 3 P. M., and religious services on the Sabbath at 9:15 A. M., and 4 P. M., at which considerable interest is manifested. They have given a series of entertainments which were well attended and highly appreciated. They also gave a goodly number of receptions which were well patronized by the Club members and their friends. And a very prominent feature of their work was a fair held at the Hall, from the proceeds of which an elegant upright grand piano was procured, and for which the Club are greatly indebted to them for their untiring efforts on that occasion. It is, however, a source of deep regret that so great a number of our people display so little interest in this great question, involving, as it does, the welfare of so many—not only in this World, but in the World beyond.

Too much cannot be said in honor of the noble women, who with Mabee and English were instrumental in bringing about this great reform movement, and with whose co-operation the Club has been enabled to reclaim so many who to-day command the respect of society; and not a few who are filling positions of honor and trust, are living testimonials to this fact.

In conclusion, suffice it to say, that while this Club will make every endeavor to maintain the prestige it has already attained, it would most earnestly appeal to each and every one having the interests of their fellow beings at heart, to aid us in every possible manner to save from the doom which awaits them those who are victims of this terrible traffic. Therefore, let us "rescue the perishing," for the sake of "God, and Home, and Native Land."

Plainfield, January 9, 1890.

A. VANDERBEEK, Ch'n.

DR. STILLMAN NOT PURSUED.

His Wife Makes No Effort to Recover Her Boy—Broken Hearted Mr. Schaus.

No one could be found in New York on Sunday who knew positively the present residence or whereabouts of Dr. Charles F. Stillman, brother of ex-Judge Stillman, whose latest atrocious act was to abduct his son Kirtland from the Irving Public School in this city. The boy ever since his father and mother separated had been living with the latter and Dr. Stillman's mother at the homestead on Grant avenue.

Mr. Wm. Schaus, the wealthy retired picture dealer, whose young daughter Mabel was Dr. Stillman's victim, said on Sunday at his home, No. 30 East Thirty-eighth street, that he had not heard directly from his daughter since she and Dr. Stillman left the city last July. Some one had told him that they had gone at that time to Toronto, Canada, where they lived under the assumed names of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Starr.

"It is like having a knife plunged into my side every time I see anything published of that black-hearted scoundrel," said old Mr. Schaus. "He has ruined my child morally, physically and socially, and has given me in my old age a wound that can never heal while there is a breath of life left in my body. There should be an earthly retribution for such a man, but it does not seem to have overtaken him yet. If my daughter would leave him or express any repentance, I would take her back with all my heart and let her enter a convent or some retreat. She had all she could wish for here, and I never denied her a wish in her life. I cannot account for his abducting his boy, unless it is that he craves notoriety."

Dr. Stillman and his wife separated six months ago. He had become infatuated with Miss Mabel Schaus, and the two lived together as man and wife. When the scandal became public Dr. Stillman lost his place as a medical examiner of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, his membership in New York's most aristocratic clubs, and all his friends at the same time. Mrs. Stillman came to this city to live at the home of her husband's mother, Mrs. Mary S. Stillman, widow of Dr. Charles H. Stillman. She took her son Kirtland with her, a bright boy of 10, and lived there without disturbance on the part of her husband until last Friday, when Dr. Stillman visited the school which the boy attended and carried him off. Mrs. Stillman had never received any visits from her husband after their parting, and she never suspected there was possibility of losing her son. The two thought much of each other, and except during school hours Kirtland was rarely out of his mother's sight.

The boy attended the Irving public school, in Fourth street and Monroe avenue, hardly a quarter of a mile from his home. Friday afternoon a hack drove up to the school house, and word was sent in to Miss Susan Gilbert, the Principal, that Kirtland's mother wanted him. Miss Gilbert at first refused to allow him to leave, but when the man inside the hack said he was the boy's father, Kirtland was allowed to go down stairs. He had not seen his father in many months. The boy evinced no fear of his father, and when the latter asked him to step into the carriage and ride over to his home, Kirtland consented and stepped in. Miss Gilbert saw the hack door slammed shut, and the boy driven off without suspecting anything.

Mrs. Stillman grew anxious when her son failed to return, and after seeing Miss Gilbert she was convinced that her husband had abducted him. Her brother-in-law, Wm. M. Stillman, told a Press reporter Monday that no action had been taken to recover the child, and he thought it probable that Mrs Stillman would take none, as she believed the boy will be well cared for by his father. He said that the loss of her son had been a great blow to her, but she has already suffered so much without a murmur that this last act of her husband's probably would be endured as well. Mr. Stillman's theory of the abduction is that his brother drove from either Metuchen or Bound Brook, each of which is about six miles from the school house, and when he had captured his son, drove back, and got on an express train to New York, without exciting attention.

A member of the Stillman family said Sunday that he had heard that the Doctor and Miss Schaus had separated lately. Dr. Stillman's present address he did not know. It is generally suspected that the boy was taken to force his mother to apply for a divorce and thus free her husband. This she will not do under any circumstances. She is a woman of indomitable will, and even if it became a question of the life or death of her son, it is probable she would still refuse.

HONEST TO HIS PARTY.

President Moffett Proves That He Made no Deal For His Office.

There are seven Republican councilmen and only four Democrats to share the plums of power this year, yet one of the latter has secured the Presidency, and the other three in the matter of committee appointments, Monday night, were given the Earth with a fence around it. No wonder that the machine Republicans look at one another today and say: "Somebody's blundered."

The Press of Monday said:

There are ten committees to be appointed and only three Democratic councilmen, so President Moffett's political constituents do not expect him to accomplish impossibilities. If he gives the Democrats the control of the Water committee, and the Fire and the Police committees, and a representation on the Streets committee, the Democrats ought to be satisfied and the Republicans must be convinced that there was no "deal" that trip.

President Moffett did just as was outlined above, as will be seen by reference to the Council proceedings. He even went so far in his zeal for his party as to make the Water Committee solidly Democratic.

He should be admired for such devotion and honesty to his constituents, even by those he left out in the cold.

Sheriff's Sale of Real Estate.

At the Sheriff's office in New Brunswick, ex-Sheriff Patrick Convery sold the following property last week. In Chancery of New Jersey, between the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York as complainants and William B. Stewart, of this city, defendant. A tract of land containing 65 acres, situated in Piscataway township, near New Brooklyn. The property was sold to H. F. Northrup for $5,000. Decree and costs $8,532.34.

REDUCING THE SURPLUS. DOWN THEY GO.

When in the course of Clothing events it becomes necessary to inaugurate a genuine "Mark Down" Sale—which is seldom with us—we do it, as we do everything, honestly, squarely and in good faith. As a rule, we find no necessity for what are known as "special sales," "ten per cent discounts" and the like. The air is so full of them that whatever attraction they may once have had, their day is passed. The people have come to regard them merely as advertising schemes, and such a judgment does the common sense of the public great credit. So much as a prelude to what we now have to say.

We have determined upon a special sale of what is left of our Fall and Winter stock. We desire to clear out every garment, as we have plans for another season which can best be carried out by a clear sweep and clear decks for future action. This sale will

RESULT OF A COMMITTEE'S APATHY.

While the Recommending of a Design for the Soldiers Monument is Delayed, the Enthusiasm of the People Visibly Cools.

When the project of erecting a monument in Hillside Cemetery as a testimonial by the people of Plainfield to her dead soldiers, was first thought of and a lot was offered, The Press cried out for a change of location and suggested that the dead heroes be honored in the sight of everybody.

"Erect the monument in the heart of the city," we said, and proposed that the plot of ground at the junction of Crescent avenue and Broadway be secured if possible. The citizens were immediately aroused with enthusiasm, and were universally ready to contribute generously for a monument in such a spot.

The Grand Army men worked with zeal over the project, selected a committee of representative veterans and citizens of the City and Borough, and all that was wanting to set the ball rolling was a design and an estimate. The people were then ready to subscribe $35,000 and the hot iron should then have been struck. An ex-Councilman told a Press reporter that he alone would secure $10 000 in a few days if the site at Franklin place and LaGrande avenue was selected.

But the Committee on Designs have taken no final action. They have met and examined drawings of monuments suggested, and adjourned to examine other drawings to be prepared as proposed by them. They have then met and adjourned again because there were so few present, or else there was a concert at Music Hall. Meanwhile, the enthusiasm of the people has visibly cooled, and the possible subscription total has gone down and down. A few weeks ago but $25,000 could be raised, and now if the Committee select a monument costing over $15,000, they will probably make a mistake.

PROGRESS AND ENTERTAINMENT.

How the Bi-Club Grows and Its Members Enjoy Themselves.

At a regular meeting, on Monday, of the Plainfield Bicycle Club, there were elected thirty-six new members, the result of a boom accruing from the new gymnasium which is already well under way. At the same time committees were appointed to make arrangements for different tables at the fair to be held on February 21 and 22. The membership of the Club is now 85.

On last Saturday evening the Club held a progressive stag whist party which was a great success. Messrs F. L. C. Martin and W. Lee Simmonds were the Committee in charge who gave the entertainment. Refreshments were also served in abundance. The winners of the handsome prizes were Geo. C. Martin, Jr., F. W. Walz and Clarence L. Murphy.

The great popularity of Ayer's Pills as a cathartic is due no less to their promptness and efficacy than to their coating of sugar and freedom from any injurious effects. Children take them readily. See Ayer's Almanac for this year, just out.

A SUGGESTION TO THE COMMON COUNCIL.

Plainfield Has Engineers at Home Who Can Supervise the Construction of Her Water Works.

When the Council of 1889 went out, the Mayor had not signed the contract with Rudolph Hering who the Council had appointed as Engineer to supervise the construction of the Plainfield water works.

This "supervision" is to consist mainly in coming to Plainfield very occasionally and approving of a few carloads of pipe and fixtures, and comparing the work of construction as it progresses, with the specifications.

Mr. Hering's first figure for this work was ostensibly about $10,000, but with certain allowances which The Press is informed would amount to $10,000 more. This was a "snap" that naturally appealed to other appetites, and offers from other competent engineers to do the "work" for half the money, filled the air.

Recently Mr. J. J. Henderson, of North Plainfield, the engineer who constructed the railroad bridges through this and many other cities, and whose original ideas in the construction of the roof of the big Crescent building on Peace street, have been inspected and admired by many of the most prominent engineers in the country, called on Councilman Newhall, Chairman of the Water Committee, presented the written endorsements of the Central railroad and other corporations and individuals best calculated to know how to measure an engineer's competency, and offered his services to supervise the construction of Plainfield's water works at $3,600.

Mr. Hering's price has dropped to $5,500, but, as stated at the beginning of this article, the Mayor has not signed his contract. Possibly it is not too late for another to be selected, and The Press would call the attention of the Council of 1890 in this relation to the fact that it is not necessary to go out of town for a competent engineer, neither is it necessary to pay $10,000 nor half that figure, for one.

Why, for instance, there's Surveyor F. A. Dunham who has grown right up with the town from a boy. No better selection is possible. The whole County knows his worth, for the Board of Freeholders whose majority belongs in Elizabeth and her vicinity, selected him from this city to build those Union county roads that are to be a model for other counties and the pride of the State.

That Dam Fight.

The trial of the suit in Chancery brought by Charles Hyde against P. M. French to compel latter to reduce the height of his dam at Tier's Lake, will begin on Monday morning at 10 o'clock in the City Court room in Plainfield, Vice Chancellor Bird having consented to come to this city to try the case.

The Sun.

FOR 1890.

Some people agree with THE SUN'S opinions about men and things and some people don't; but everybody likes to get hold of the newspaper which is never dull and never afraid to speak its mind.

Democrats know that for twenty years THE SUN has fought in the front line for Democratic principles, never wavering or weakening in its loyalty to the true interests of the party it serves with fearless intelligence and disinterested vigor. At times opinions have differed as to the best means of accomplishing the common purpose; it is not THE SUN'S fault if it has seen further into the millstone.

Eighteen hundred and ninety is the year that will probably determine the result of the Presidential election of 1892, and perhaps the fortunes of the Democracy for the rest of the century. Victory in 1892 is a duty, and the beginning of 1890 is the best time to start out in company with THE SUN.

PROGRESS IN ICE BOATING

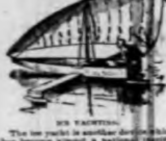
Craft Which Attain a Speed of Fifty Miles an Hour.

How Ice Boats Are Made—The 1888 Model—Snow Yachts to Carry the Mails on the Prairie—Kites as a Motive Power for Skaters.

COPYRIGHT 1889.

The annual advent of Jack Frost is at hand; and with the spreading of his white mantle over the earth, and his hard, glistening crust upon the water, the bob sleds, skates and toboggans are brought out once more.

For those who are fond of novelties, there is the Danish skate sail, which consists of a small light sail measuring about six feet long by two feet wide, which is spread upon light rods crossed at the back of the skater and fastened in a half-round his body. An enthusiast recently adapted this principle to a pair of large roller skates, specially designed to run on a railroad track, and with a fair wind skated or sailed from Milwaukee to Chicago in less than four hours.



ICE YACHTING.

The ice yacht is another device which has become almost a national institution, and one that other countries do not seem to understand, unless they are shown one in the act of sailing. The design of an ice boat, known as the 1888 model, was deemed the very height of perfection, and when its speed was found to reach fifty miles an hour under extraordinarily favorable circumstances, it seemed as if the utmost possible speed must have been reached at a single stride. This was not so, however; such high speed could only be obtained in very strong winds, and as the amount of resistance required a corresponding amount of heaviness in structure, which tended to make these record-breaking boats very slow in an ordinary breeze, the brains of our builders and designers were devoted to the task of getting the highest rate of speed out of a moderate breeze rather than breaking the record obtained in a favorable gale.

The difference between these is like the record of a skater on a circular track and one with the wind behind him. The latter breaks the record, but the former wins the race, and that is the aim of the ice yachtsman.

Several ideas have been tried with more or less success; the skate blades have been ground on different patterns from the old straight-edged blade, and instead of the under surface [illegible] on the ice being perfectly flat it has been "hollow-ground," that is to say, the center of the blade has been more or less cut away, leaving the outer edges sharper and harder, so as to diminish the lee-way in reaching, which, of course, increases the speed by just so much.

Hitherto the sloop rig has been the popular style and it is yet believed by experts to be the fastest and most satisfactory rig known. This year a new rig will be tried, [illegible] in ice yacht circles. It is a modification of the lateen rig of the Mediterranean feluccas, and the great advantages claimed for it are that it gives a great spread of [illegible] canvas, is easier manipulated than the [illegible] sails of the sloop, and better still, brings the [illegible] of the sail area and consequently the pressure of the wind right down to the very point which [illegible] to be most productive of high speed.

The lateen rig consists of [illegible] mast stepped in the ordinary way and the sail is spread upon a long yard, or boom, which extends in an arc from the bow of the yacht up to the top of the mast and beyond, the sail covering the whole space from stem to stern. This rig is one of the fastest known modern rigs as applied to ordinary sailing craft, the [illegible] of the boats of Europe being proverbial for speed, and considerable interest is felt as to the result when the good properties of this rig are fully demonstrated. [illegible] the Poughkeepsie [illegible] favors the sloop rig [illegible] any other that may be introduced.

[illegible] ice boat is not a difficult thing to make and a modification of one that will sail well may be made by anyone who knows anything of the carpenter's art. The cost is easy, as any blacksmith will give estimates for a set of three blades, and in a city the hardware stores will obtain quotations and goods from the makers. Take a drygoods box about five feet long and four feet wide and cut down to a depth of two feet. Clamp the bottom and sides of the box with pieces of iron, so as to make it sufficiently strong to bear the weight that will be put upon it. To the sides of the box forwards attach two planks, which meet at the point, to form a bow. These planks are shaved away so as to present an upward slant at the apex. Underneath the box, crosswise, attach a plank twenty feet long with equal projections from the box on each side. The plank should be nine inches wide and two inches in thickness. Lengthwise of the box, at a point midway between the sides and at right angles to the long plank, fasten another so that it extends underneath the box backwards, to form a keel [illegible] eight inches. In this projection cut a hole in which to insert the rudder post. At the base of this stern-post is fixed one of the three skates, while the other two are fastened at each end of the long plank. These skates are the bases of support upon which the craft rests. The sternpost is so adjusted that when the rudder [illegible] is turned to port or starboard, the skate turns also and directs the course of the boat in the same way as would be done by a rudder. The mast is stepped into a solid foot, which rests upon a long plank running [illegible] underneath the box, and this mast is strengthened and steadied by passing through a second piece of planking placed crosswise on top of the box. The sail is simply the sail of a catboat, only made smaller and lighter to suit the boat. Any one with any knowledge of the carpenter's art and of the ordinary requirements of a boat can make an ice yacht for comparatively few dollars outside of the cost of the skates.

One of the most interesting [illegible] inventions of the past year is that of the snow yacht, which is stated to be the product of the brain of a Kansas man. The ice yacht is designed to sail over the frozen surface of the lakes and rivers, but the snow has hitherto proved an impassable expanse, with the exception of the sleigh and the snow shoes. By the application of this new idea, however, the snow becomes equally under the subjection of the sportsman in any district where there is enough of it and where the country is open enough for it to be [illegible].

The principle is almost the same as the ice yacht, but applied to the toboggan. A large toboggan is made, and the runner-blades are set ten feet apart and are thirty-two feet long by two feet wide. [illegible] toboggan, which is about twenty feet long by ten feet broad, and is only different from the ordinary toboggan in the matter of [illegible] boards about six inches in height, which run along each side. The mast is stepped into a [illegible] square block of wood, and is about twenty feet in height, [illegible] the dimensions of the boom, which is about twenty-two feet [illegible]. The boat is a peculiar one in appearance but sails well [illegible] upon the snow. The one I saw last year was fitted at the masthead with a peculiarly bent piece of steel, [illegible] the telegraph wires [illegible] an obstruction, and to lift them up and slide them over the mast as the boat passes underneath them. [illegible] being several feet in depth, [illegible] the distance between the wires and the ground, and so something is necessary to lift them up. The steering gear of the snow yacht is simply a pole [illegible] feet in length, fitted with a broad end, which can be turned at the will of the pilot, [illegible] are the wind, it can be [illegible] fairly easy of [illegible], the only difficulty being [illegible] in points [illegible]. If [illegible] will not get quite round, and will stick right in the wind, and unless the occupants have [illegible] on board, and so can get out and boost her round, they are likely to have a hard time. Without question the weight of the boat will push the [illegible] into the snow [illegible] will be readily [illegible] that this boat is simply an adaptation of the idea of the Fijian in his double canoe, which is applied to the snow surface instead of water. It is expected that by means of the snow yacht, the mails on the Western prairies will this year be delivered during several months of the year, when previously it has been practically impossible.

Another novel idea that should find favor with our boys this year is the adaptation of kite flying to the ice. We all know that many days, when one goes out for a skate, the wind blows too strong for any comfort, and we are obliged to just skim up and down some shady spot, so as to escape the buffeting and hard work of beating back against the wind. On such days, if the wind be moderately strong, [illegible] of the kite [illegible] especially made for the purpose. The square or six-sided kite is the best shape, and if specially made, it should be made with extra stout ribs and back, or, if an old one is used, it should be recovered and strengthened.

The cord should be very much stouter and longer than usual, for the more resistance that is applied the higher it will be necessary to let the kite go. Having everything in readiness, get a friend to hold the kite, and start in in the usual way, skating a short distance against the wind to get it "up." Then turn, and let the kite draw you. It is well known how very little it takes to keep a person on skates moving, after once being set in motion, and it will be readily understood what the motive power of a fairly large kite will be. The greatest fun, however, does not consist in merely holding on to the kite, and being drawn in a straight line along the ice; to get the maximum of pleasure, learn to coast with it. Have the cord wound upon a good thick stick, long enough to give a good purchase to both hands and stout enough to bear the pressure without breaking in the middle. Hold this with both arms in front of your chest, and turn your feet slightly to the right. How far to turn them cannot be explained in words, your own judgment of the pull of the kite must guide you. If it is not very strong it will be possible to go nearly in a straight line across the ice, and turning, come back nearly as straight, but if it is blowing hard, and the pull is strong, a more slanting direction will be necessary. It will be found necessary when the pull comes on to incline the body from the kite, as if one were doing the "outside-edge," so as to get more resistance, and then it is necessary to watch the wind carefully, and be on the lookout for sudden puffs which, if not anticipated, may result in an unexpected fall at the sudden jerk of the kite or the equally sudden let up of the pull.

DAVID WECHSLER.

THE Alton railroad has a funny case on its hands. A carload of mules was shipped from Bloomington recently. Three men counted the mules and swore there were fifteen in the car, and the door was sealed by an agent. When the car arrived at St. Louis the seal was found intact, and only fourteen mules were to be found in the car.

A WESTERN inventor is endeavoring to interest capital in his electric magic lantern for casting or reflecting advertisements on the dark clouds that often hang low over a city. The inventor claims to have secured contracts from several well-known firms for displaying their cards in this manner. If the idea is fully developed we may expect to see some very startling and grotesque effects.

THERE is an organization of amateur sportsmen at Millersville, Pa., in [illegible] township, known as the Silver Leaf Hunting Club, which makes a specialty of capturing polecats with hounds. So far this season they have caught twenty polecats, thirteen raccoons and five opossums, besides half a dozen groundhogs. The skins of the polecats are very valuable, and the club is making a good thing in the curing and sale of them.

THE neighborhood in the vicinity of Boonville, Mo., is greatly excited over the discovery of large sums of money belonging to a deceased member of the community. The latter was eccentric, wealthy and frugal. He died recently, leaving a diagram showing the places where he had buried money twenty and thirty years ago. The executor found under the porch [illegible] in an [illegible] $7,000 in gold and under the corner of the wood-house $3,000 in silver packed in glass jars.

DR. TALMAGE IN PARIS.

SERMON OF THE BROOKLYN DIVINE PREACHED SUNDAY, JAN. 12.

The Text of the Discourse Was Found in Second Kings xi, 2, 3, and Here Is a Report in Full—"How a King's Life Was Saved."

PARIS, Jan. 12.—The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., of Brooklyn, preached in this city today. He is making his way home, which he expects to reach in the early part of February. Dr. Talmage's text was: "Jehosheba, the daughter of King Joram, sister of Ahaziah, took Joash the son of Ahaziah, and stole him from among the king's sons which were slain; and they hid him, even him and his nurse, in the bedchamber from Athaliah, so that he was not slain. And he was with her hid in the house of the Lord six years."—II Kings, xi, 2, 3. He said:

Grandmothers are more lenient with their children's children than they were with their own. At forty years of age if discipline be necessary, chastisement is used, but at seventy, the grandmother, looking upon the misbehavior of the grandchild, is apologetic and disposed to substitute confectionery for whip. There is nothing more beautiful than this mellowing of old age toward childhood. Grandmother takes out her pocket handkerchief and wipes her spectacles, and puts them on, and looks down into the face of her [illegible] and says: "I don't think he meant to do it; let him off this time; I'll be responsible for his behavior in the future." My mother, with the second generation around her, [illegible] one day: "I suppose they ought to be disciplined, but I can't do it. Grandmothers are not fit to bring up grandchildren." But here, in my text, we have a grandmother of a different hue.

I have within a few days been at Jerusalem, where the occurrences of the text took place, and the whole scene came vividly before me while I was going over the site of the ancient temple and climbing the towers of the king's palace. Here in the text is old Athaliah, the queenly murderess. She ought to have been honorable. Her father was a king. Her husband was a king. Her son was a king. And yet we find her plotting for the extermination of the entire royal family, including her own grandchildren. [illegible]

[illegible] are dead.

But the six years expire, and it is time for young Joash to come forth and take the throne, and to push back into disgrace and death old Athaliah. The arrangements are all made for political revolution. The military come and take possession of the temple, swear loyalty to the boy Joash and stand around for his defense. See the sharpened swords and the burnished shields! Everything is ready. Now Joash, half affrighted at the armed tramp of his defenders, scared at the vociferation of his admirers, is brought forth in full regalia. The scroll of authority is put in his hands, the coronet of government is put on his brow, and the people clapped, and waved, and shouted, and trumpeted. "What is that?" said Athaliah. "What is that sound over in the temple?" And she flies to see, and on her way they meet her and say: "Why, haven't you heard? You thought you had slain all the royal family, but Joash has come to light." Then the queenly murderess, frantic with rage, grabbed her mantle and tore it to tatters, and cried until she foamed at the mouth: "You have no business to crown my grandson. You have no right to take the government from my shoulders. Treason! Treason!" While she stood there crying that, the military started for her arrest, and she took a short cut through a back door of the temple, and ran through the royal stables; but the battle axes of the military fell on her, and for many a day when the horses were being unloosed from the chariot, after drawing out young Joash, the fiery steeds would snort and rear passing the place, as they smell the place of the carnage.

The first thought I hand you from this subject is that the extermination of righteousness is an impossibility. When a woman is good, she is apt to be very good, and when she is bad, she is apt to be very bad, and this Athaliah was one of the latter sort. She would exterminate the last scion of the house of David, through whom Jesus was to come. There was plenty of work for undertakers and underlakers. She would clear the land of all God fearing and God loving people. She would put an end to everything that could in anywise interfere with her imperial criminality. She folds her hands and says: "The work is done; it is completely done." [illegible] wrapped the cause of God, and the cause of good government. That is the scion of the house of David; it is Joash, the Christian reformer; it is Joash, the friend of God; it is Joash, the demolisher of Baalish idolatry. Rock him tenderly; nurse him gently. Athaliah, you may kill all the other children, but you cannot kill him. Eternal defenses are thrown all around him, and this clergyman's wife, Jehosheba, will snatch him up from the palace nursery, and will run down with him into the house of the Lord, and there she will hide him for six years, and at the end of that time he will come forth for your dethronement and obliteration.

Well, my friends, just as poor a botch does the world always make of extinguishing righteousness. Superstition rises up and says: "I will just put an end to pure religion." Diocletian slew forty thousand Christians. Diocletian slew eight hundred and forty-four thousand Christians. And the scythe of persecution has been swung through all the ages, and the flames hissed, and the guillotine dropped, and the [illegible]; but did the foes of Christianity exterminate it? Did they exterminate Alban, the first British martyr; or Zuinglius, the Swiss reformer; or John Oldcastle, the Christian nobleman; or Abdallah, the Arabian martyr; or Anne Askew, or Sanders, or Cranmer? Great work of extermination they made of it. Just at the time when they thought they had slain all the royal family of Jesus, some Joash would spring up and out, and take the throne of power, and wield a very scepter of Christian dominion.

Infidelity says: "I'll just exterminate the Bible," and the Scriptures were thrown into the street for the mob to trample on, and [illegible] set on fire, and [illegible] universities [illegible] the Bible out of existence. Thomas Paine said: "In my right hand I have annihilated the Scriptures. Your Washington is a pusillanimous Christian, but I am the friend of [illegible]." O, how many assaults upon that Word! All the hostilities that have ever been created on earth are not to be compared with the hostilities against that one book. Said one man, in his infidel desperation, to his wife: "You must not be reading that Bible," and he snatched it away from her. And though in that Bible was a lock of hair of the dead child—the only child that God had ever given them—he pitched the book with its contents into the fire, and stirred it with the tongs, and spat on it, and cursed it, and said: "Woman, never have any more of that damned stuff here!"

How many individual and organized attempts have been made to exterminate that Bible! Have they done it? Have they exterminated the American Bible society? Have they exterminated the British and Foreign Bible society? Have they exterminated the thousands of Christian institutions, whose only object it is to multiply copies of the Scriptures, and throw them broadcast around the world? They have exterminated until instead of one or two copies of the Bible in our houses we have eight or ten, and we pile them up in the corners of our Sabbath school rooms, and send great boxes of them everywhere. If they get on as well as they are now going on in the work of extermination, I do not know but that our children may live to see the millennium! Yes, if there should come a time of persecution in which all the known Bibles of the earth should be destroyed, all those lamps of life that blaze in our pulpits and in our families extinguished—in the very day that infidelity and sin should be holding jubilee over the universal extinction there would be in some closet of a backwoods church a secreted copy of the Bible, and this Joash of eternal literature would come out and come up and take the throne, and the Athaliah of infidelity and persecution would fly out the back door of the palace, and drop her miserable carcass under the hoofs of the horses of the king's stables. You cannot exterminate Christianity! You cannot kill Joash!

The second thought I hand you from my subject is, that there are opportunities in which we may save royal life. You know that profane history is replete with stories of strangled monarchs and of young princes who have been put out of the way. Here is the story of a young king saved. How Jehosheba, the clergyman's wife, must have trembled as she rushed into the imperial nursery and snatched up Joash. How she hushed him, lest by his cry he hinder the escape. Fly with him! Jehosheba, you hold in your arms the cause of God and good government. Fail, and he is slain. Succeed, and you turn the tide of the world's history in the right direction. It seems as if between that young king and his assassins there is nothing but the frail arm of a woman. But why should we spend our time in praising this bravery of expedition when God asks the same thing of you and me? All around us are the imperiled children of a great King.

They are born of Almighty parentage, and will come to a throne or a crown, if permitted. But sin, the old Athaliah, goes forth to the massacre. Murderous temptations are out for the assassination. Valens, the emperor, was told that there was somebody in his realm who would usurp his throne, and that the name of the man who should be the usurper would begin with the letters T. H. E. O. D., and the edict went forth from the emperor's throne: "Kill everybody whose name begins with T. H. E. O. D." And hundreds and thousands were slain, hoping by that massacre to put an end to that one usurper. But sin is more horrible in its denunciation. It matters not how you spell your name, you come under its knife, under its sword, under its doom, unless there be some omnipotent relief brought to the rescue. But blessed be God, there is such a thing as delivering a royal soul. Who will snatch away Joash?

This afternoon, in your Sabbath school class, there will be a prince of God—some one who may yet reign as king forever before the throne; there will be some one in your class who has a corrupt physical inheritance; there will be some one in your class who has a father and mother who do not know [illegible] till their children [illegible] in this world before they fall asleep of a better world. Too late with your prayers. Too late with your discipline. Too late with your benediction. You put all care upon your children between twelve and eighteen. Why do you not put the chief care between four and nine? It is too late to repair a vessel when it has got out of the dry docks. It is too late to save Joash after the executioners have broken in. May God arm us all for this work of snatching royal souls from death to coronation. Can you imagine any nobler work than this soul saving? That was what flushed Paul's cheek with enthusiasm; that was what led [illegible] to risk his life amid Bornesian cannibals; that was what sent Dr. Abeel to preach under the consuming skies of China; that was what gave courage to Phocas in the Third century. When the military officers came to put him to death for Christ's sake, he put them to bed that they might rest while he himself went out and in his own garden dug his grave, and then came back and said, "I am ready;" but they were shocked at the idea of taking the life of their host. He said, "It is the will of God that I should die," and he stood on the margin of his own grave and they beheaded him. You say it is a mania, a foolhardiness, a fanaticism. Rather would I call it a glorious self abnegation, the thrill of [illegible], the plucking of Joash from death and raising him to coronation.

The third thought I hand to you from my text is, that the church of God is a good hiding place. When Jehosheba rushes into the nursery of the king and picks up Joash, what shall she do with him? Shall she take him to some room in the palace? No; for the official desperadoes will hunt through every nook and corner of that building. Shall she take him to the residence of some wealthy citizen? No; that citizen would not dare to harbor the fugitive. But she [illegible] to take him somewhere. She hears the cry of the mob in the streets; she hears the shriek of the dying nobility; so she rushes with Joash into the room of the temple, into the house of God, and then she puts him down. She knows that Athaliah and her wicked assassins will not bother the temple a great deal; they are not apt to go very much to church, and so she sets down Joash [illegible]. There he will be hearing the [illegible] of the worshipers year after year; there he will breathe the odor of the golden [illegible]; in that sacred spot he will tarry, [illegible] until the six years have passed, and he come to enthronement.

Would God that we were all as wise as Jehosheba, and knew that the church of God is the best hiding place. Perhaps our parents took us there in early days; they snatched us away from the world, and hid us behind the baptismal fonts and amid the Bibles and the psalm books. O, glorious inclosure! We have been breathing the breath of the golden censers all the time, and we have seen the lamb on the altar, and we have handled the [illegible] which are the promises of all saints, and we have dwelt under the wings of the cherubim. Glorious inclosure! When my father and mother died, and the property was settled up, there was hardly anything left; but they endowed us with a property worth more than any earthly possession, because they hid us in the temple. And when days of temptation have come upon my soul I have gone there for shelter; and when assaulted of [illegible], I have gone there for comfort, and there I mean to live. I want, like Joash, to stay there until coronation. I mean to be buried out of the house of God.

O men of the world outside there, betrayed, caricatured and cheated of the world, why do you not come in through the broad, wide open door of Christian communion? I wish I could act the part of Jehosheba today, and steal you away from your perils and hide you in the temple. How few of us appreciate the fact that the church of God is a hiding place. There are many people who put the church at so low a mark that they begrudge it everything, even the few dollars they give [illegible]. They make no [illegible] his church, and frown as they say: "There, Lord, is my [illegible]: if you will have it, take it—now take it, take it; send me a receipt in full, and don't bother me soon again!"

I tell you there is not more than one man out of a thousand that appreciates what the church is. Where are the souls that put aside one-tenth for Christian institutions—one-tenth of their income? Where are those who, having put aside that one-tenth, draw upon it cheerfully? Why, it is pull, and drag, and, hold on, and grab, and clutch; and giving is an affliction to most people when it ought to be an exhilaration and a rapture. Oh, that God would remodel our souls on this subject, and that we might appreciate the house of God as the great refuge. If your children are to come up to lives of virtue and happiness, they will come up under the shadow of the church. If the church does not get them the world will.

Ah, when you pass away—and it will not be long before you do—when you pass away it will be a satisfaction to see your children in Christian society. You want to have them sitting at the holy sacraments. You want them mingling in Christian associations. You would like to have them die in the sacred precincts. When you are on your dying bed, and your little ones come up to take your last word, and you look into their bewildered faces, you will want to leave them under the church's benediction. I don't care how hard you are, that is so. I said to a man of the world: "Your son and daughter are going to join our church next Sunday. Have you any objections?" "Bless you," he said, "objections! I wish all my children belonged to the church. I don't attend to those matters myself—I know I am very wicked—but I am very glad they are going, and I shall be there to see them. I am very glad, sir; I am very glad. I want them there." And so, though you may have been wanderers from God, and though you may have sometimes caricatured the church of Jesus, it is your great desire that your sons and daughters should be standing all their lives within this sacred inclosure.

More than that, you yourself will want the church for a hiding place when the mortgage is foreclosed; when your daughter, just blooming into womanhood, suddenly clasps her hands in a slumber that knows no waking; when gaunt trouble walks through the parlor, and the sitting room, and the dining hall, and the nursery, you will want some shelter from the tempest. Ah, some of you have been run upon by misfortune and trial; why do you not come into the shelter? I said to a widowed mother, after she had buried her only son—months after I said to her: "How do you get along nowadays?" "Oh," she replied, "I get along tolerably well except when the sun shines." I said: "What do you mean by that?" when she said: "I can't bear to see the sun shine; my heart is so dark that all the brightness of the natural world seems a mockery to me." O, darkened soul, O, broken hearted man, broken hearted woman, why do you not come into the shelter? I swing the door wide open. I swing it from wall to wall. Come in! Come in! You want a place where your troubles shall be interpreted, where your burdens shall be unstrapped, where your tears shall be wiped away.

Church of God, be a hiding place to all these people. Give them a seat where they can rest their weary souls. Flash some light from your chandeliers upon their darkness. With some soothing hymn hush their griefs. O, Church of God, gate of heaven, let me go through it! All other institutions are going to fail, but the Church of God—its foundation is the "Rock of Ages," its charter is for everlasting years, its keys are held by the universal proprietor, its dividend is heaven, its president is God!

Sure as thy truth shall last,
To Zion shall be given
The brightest glories earth can yield,
And brighter bliss of heaven.

God grant that all this audience, the youngest, the oldest, the worst, the best, may find their safe and glorious hiding place where Joash found it—in the temple.

The police in Paris are beginning, it is announced, to take some steps to prevent the sale of indecent literature. The "censure," as at present exercised, is a mere sham, so far as the morals of new books are concerned, and the third republic can boast of having inaugurated an era of literary productions unknown of under the second empire.

MATRIMONIAL MAXIMS.

SOME marry for the fun of the thing and never see where it comes in. This is discouraging.

SOME marry for the sake of a good companion and never discover their mistake. This is lucky.

IT is better to have a comely "helpmeet" of some use than a brilliant one simply of "some pumpkins."

DON'T marry a man for his reputation. It is liable to be only a second-hand affair, borrowed from his ancestors.

MANY women have married men for their fine exterior. But that is all there is to an ancient egg worth mentioning.

MANY marry to spite some one else, only to learn that they got the butt-end of the transaction and its worst end at that.

MARRIAGE is a lottery full of chances. That's what gives it flavor. All like to chance it, because every body thinks to win a prize.

MANY a man has married for beauty, only to learn that he paid $10 for what can be purchased for twenty-five cents at all druggists. This is hard.

MARRIAGE resulting from love at first sight is not generally wedded bliss on a par with sour milk. One or the other gets swindled and often both.

THE hot-headed youth marries in a hurry because he fears marriageable females will be scarce next year and lives to wonder how the supply holds out.

WOMAN is sometimes the real cause of unhappiness in the married relations of life, but in the majority of instances the boot is on the other foot, and she is really the true comfort there is in it.

DON'T marry a woman for her taper fingers and lily hands alone, for married life and its rugged experience call for a wife that knows how to make a pot boil and can spank babies systematically.

BUT few people marry for pure love, and they in after years suspect that what were at the time promptings of the tender passion were, in all probability, but the first symptoms of cholera morbus.

THE man who marries a woman simply because she is a handy arrangement to have about the house does so from a purely business stand-point, and in the end, if not compelled to support him, she has done better than many women I know of.

MANY a man who marries for money has never realized a dividend upon the investment; and many women who have done the same thing have left word for their posterity that, although a fair transaction upon the face of it, yet it is just as liable to be a put-up job.

THE most affectionate people before marriage seldom hold out in the same proportion after the knot is tied. It is better philosophy to commence only as you would live afterward. From the matrimonial market the saints of both sexes were culled out long ago. Don't expect to marry one. You must guess at some things and take chances for the future on this basis.

QUEER FUNERAL CUSTOMS.

THE music kept up at Irish wakes used to be for the purpose of driving away evil spirits.

THE Mohammedans always, whether in their own country or one of adoption, bury without a coffin of any kind.

THE primitive Russians placed a certificate of character in the dead person's hands, to be given to St. Peter at the gates of Heaven.

THE natives of Australia tie the hands of the corpse and pull out the finger nails—this for the fear that the dead will scratch their way out of the grave and become vampires.

IN India, till within the past few years, the devoted wife ascended the funeral pyre of her dead husband and was incinerated by the same flames that reduced her loved one to ashes.

SHE KNEW ABOUT BUNCOERS.

An Old Lady in England Fails to Recognize Her Own Husband.

Some years ago, an elderly couple who had spent the greatest portion of their lives in a small village in England, and had had very little experience of railway traveling, made up their minds to visit London by one of the cheap summer excursion trains.

On the morning of the trip the good wife departed with her old man, charged with the advice and cautions of her neighbors relative to the various tricks of London people, and with the fixed determination that they should find her no greenhorn.

When about half their journey had been accomplished, and the train had stopped at Reading Station, the old man learning that they had five minutes to wait, got out to purchase some refreshments. He was, however, too long in doing so, for when he came to look for his train, he found, to his dismay, that it had gone, and he was left behind.

The station master, however, agreed to send him on an ordinary train, which came up half an hour later. By this arrangement (as the the new train was an express) he arrived in London twenty minutes before the excursion train was due.

When the latter at last arrived, and the old man saw his wife on the platform, he rushed up, delighted at having again found her, exclaiming:

"Well, Betty, my lass, I'm glad to see thee again. I were very near thinking I had lost thee altogether."

Betty looked at him indignantly, and, to the old fellow's astonishment, stretching herself up, said, waving her umbrella:

"Away! get away wi' you. Don't be comin' your Lunnon tricks here. I left my husband at Readin' station. If you don't be off at once I'll call a policeman, and ha' you locked up!"

IN Suwannee County, Fla., recently a minister of a certain denomination was converted through the preaching of a minister of a different denomination, and all the members of the converted minister's church changed their faith and followed their old shepherd.

A STEER which seems destined to a circus life is exhibited at Pimlico, Md. It is 4 years old, 14 feet in length, 17 hands high, and weighs 4,000 pounds. Not content with being a curiosity as to height, the steer has the added feature of double joints in his legs.

A GIRL at Reading, Pa., postponed her wedding because she was unable to secure the white horses owned by a certain liveryman for the date she had fixed. The animals are in great demand for weddings and are said to bring luck to the bride.

AN Indian of Klamath Agency found recently in a cremation mound on the Klamath Indian reservation a Harrison badge of the campaign of 1841. The "log cabin" and profile view of General Harrison show quite plainly. Probably these Indians got the badge from General John C. Fremont's party when they traveled through that country.

AN usher at one of the leading theaters in Philadelphia has made himself very popular by quietly scanning a gentleman as the seat checks are handed him and apprising the person of any eccentricities in his wardrobe. Any man would give a quarter rather than walk down the aisle with some irregularity in his costume that would attract attention and criticism.

IN the basement of the White House Mrs. Harrison lately found two old mahogany cabinets which were used in the Executive mansion when it was first built. The cabinets are of Dutch manufacture and were imported from England. Mrs. Harrison, who is a lover of antique furniture, is delighted with her discovery and will restore the cabinets to their former place in the White House parlors.

IN a Market street furniture store in Philadelphia is exhibited a parlor suite that is said to be the most unique, with one exception, in this country. It is upholstered with palm-leaf fans, a single fan forming the seat and another the back of the chair. The frame work is of gilded bent wood. Two fans make a pretty substitute for the cushioned bottom of a tete-a-tete, and even the table-top is of fans. It was made to order for a West Philadelphia residence, and the only other suite like it is in New York. Both were modeled after designs shown at the Paris Exposition.

MISCELLANEOUS.

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT ?

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed. It is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. Write to F. I. WHITNEY, G. P. & T. A., St. Paul, Minn., for maps, books and guides. If you want a free farm in a lovely land, write for the "Great Reservation;" read it and resolve to accept the golden

POEMS PENNED OF LATE.

Life's Better Influence.

Better the song and the smile, my dear,
Better the song and the smile.
Brief is the time we may linger here,
Little avails either sigh or tear;
Better the song and the smile, my dear,
Better the song and the smile.

Better the laugh and the jest, my dear,
Better the laugh and the jest.
Sunshine of heart and of merry cheer,
Chasing the shadows that oft appear;
Better the laugh and the jest, my dear,
Better the laugh and the jest.

Better the word that is kind, my dear,
Better the word that is kind.
Speech that is cold and perchance severe
Well may be spared as we journey here;
Better the word that is kind, my dear,
Better the word that is kind.

Life's but a day at the best, my dear,
Life's but a day at the best.
Be your endeavor to brighten each year,
Making less frequent the sigh and the tear;
Life's but a day at the best, my dear,
Life's but a day at the best.
—Chicago Tribune.

The Growlers.

You can hear them every morning,
Every noon and every night,
Criticising other people
For not doing things just right.

Churchmen scorn both plays and players;
[illegible] disdain;
Lawyers tell just what the papers
Should and never should contain.

People cry for rapid transit,
But they curse and growl and frown
When the street is torn by workmen
Putting rapid transit down.

So it goes—each man's a critic
When he's from his task released,
And he talks with greatest wisdom
Where his knowledge is the least.
—Columbus Dispatch.

Resigned.

There's not an hour of any day,
Or day of any week,
Or week of any passing month,
But one dear name I speak;
Yet not with unavailing tears,
As on that night of woe,
When first from out my heaven of life
Its star of hope did go.

Now, day by day, I tread the paths
Of duty and of care;
Smile with the friends who round me smile
And strive their joys to share;
Whilst ever deep within my heart
There lives a ceaseless pain—
A tender longing for the step
That ne'er can come again.

As sunlight dances o'er the waves
Though wrecks lie dark beneath;
And pale sweet flowers adorn the graves
Where dear ones sleep in death;
As pitying Nature strives to hide
The hurts she can not heal,
So loving hearts, with gentle craft,
Their mortal wounds conceal.

Ah! sad and dark were many homes
But for the tender grace,
With which pale Resignation draws
A veil o'er Sorrow's face!
And whispers evermore this plea
That at the last beguiles:
The blessed dead need not your tears,
The living need your smiles.

Insult to Injury.

A wise professor loved a pretty maid,
Calling the cause of science to his aid,
'Twas thus he wooed her:
"My life work on the prehistoric human
Has need of your bright wits, as I'm a true man;
Oh, share my toil and fame, most lovely woman!"
'Twas thus he sued her.

The mercenary girl made answer trite:
"I really fear I must, sir, in that light
Decline to view you;
Although you cause me pride and great elation,
I can not wed above my mental station,
But I'll become, for a consideration,
A sister to you."
—Harvard Lampoon.

Now.

In the present we are living,
In the moment that is here,
And the fruitage it is giving
Is the only fruitage near!

Take the lesson in its teaching,
Sent it was for us to learn.
Through it all a hand is reaching
That will guide where'er we turn!

Wait we need not for to-morrow,
It will flee as we pursue,
Future hopes may set in sorrow,
Let us build this moment true!

And the "Now" shall last forever,
And "I am" shall always be,
Time nor space can change it never,
"Now" is God's infinity!

In Time: A Texas Idyl.

Where'er the windin country roadway ran
Rattled the wagon,
Half full of wood, the rattled husbandman
He had a jag on.

Lipping the island of the poplar grove,
Green seas of clover
Swept in a mossy tide; the man who drove
Was half seas over.

Swaying on breeze-kissed bough, a bird of song
Warbled his flute;
And the lone man below who drove along
Was on a toot.

Leading his many horns pride-filled with scorn,
Bellowed the bull;
And the gaunt ranchman, braced with many a horn,
He, too, was full.

And so, as smiling nature round him lay,
Laughing the while;
In perfect harmony with all that day,
He took a smile.

When evening's chill bids serpents seek their holes,
Mid rocks and roots,
So, at that crawling brood that fright men's souls,
Emptied his boots.

A Strange Family History.

David and Matilda Lindsay, of Saline, Mich., were married over thirty years ago, and in 1875 they were divorced after rearing a large family. About a year ago the old man and his son had a quarrel in which the son was shot and killed. The father was arrested, but the divorced wife put in an appearance, and gave bail for the prisoner, and the case against him was finally dropped. The old love sprang up again and the divorced couple have been remarried.

The Trials of the Ladies in Waiting.

The Queen's ladies in waiting are beginning to murmur about a dress grievance. They only receive £300, and are expected to appear in a new costume at every dinner. The maids are compelled to trim up their old gowns in all possible ways, for the Queen has an eagle eye for old dresses and hates them.

TARTAN GARMENTS.

Cloaks and Gowns in Scottish Plaids Are the Craze.

Pretty Girls and Modish Matrons Go About Looking as if They Were Chieftainesses of Highland Clans—All Sorts of Novelties for January.

COPYRIGHT 1890.

The sudden popularity of tartan garments of every sort and description is traced of course to the Fife marriage. The fashion which began in London in the summer was quickly taken up on the other side of the channel, and all through the autumn and early winter French women have been wearing tartan gowns and cloaks, both in wool for daytime and in silk or poplin for evening. This being the case, it was to be expected that the whim would cross the Atlantic, and that American women should be interested in nothing so much as Scotland, having the names of all the clans at their finger tips and recognizing instantly a difference in the shade of a color or the width of a stripe which to ordinary eyes would be quite imperceptible.

A STYLISH TARTAN AND VELVET TOILET.

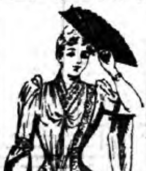
The last and brightest novelty is the tartan cloak, and it is always amusing to see what an amount of attention one of these, with its broad blue and green plaids with narrow lines of white, red or yellow, will attract on Broadway or in any place of public gathering. Miss Field, who is a cousin of the Princess Brancaccio, and a tall blonde beauty, drew a crowd yesterday morning as she paused for a minute to look at a rare orchid in a florist's window. She wore the Sutherland tartan whose subdued shades are about as little obtrusive as those of any plaids now going, and the long, tight-fitting coat was cut and shaped to her slender figure in a manner which rendered the tartan almost graceful and becoming. A high Marie Stuart collar of beaver came up about her ears and formed a sort of vest in front as well as cuffs and large pockets on the hips, these last being once again considered to give a great air of smartness to any costume. Miss Field is handsome, and so it is not perhaps astonishing that when she turned from the contemplation of the posy she found about thirty-nine people contemplating her, but the experience was not altogether agreeable, to judge from her sudden flush of hot color.

Isabelle Urquhart has worn once or twice one of the handsomest of the tartan cloaks, made loose and pleated into the waist behind, beneath a long pointed hood. The gathered cloak is mounted on a yoke of velvet and falls in flat plaits over the arms. I noticed a very conspicuous tartan cloak with triple cape and coat sleeves in the dressing room at one of yesterday's receptions, and found my thoughts involuntarily wandering for half an hour afterward in an idle quest of the one particular woman among the guests who should best harmonize with that environment. In time I discovered her, not, I confess, through any intuition of appropriateness, but because the same tartan—the Mackenzie—appeared on her gown.



A PRETTY HOUSE GOWN.

But while the cloak was made entirely of the plaided material, the dress had a bodice of plain dark blue cloth, with cuffs and vest of the tartan. The vest was fastened by silver thistle buttons in a diamond shape and the plain full skirt was crossed picturesquely by a wide tartan scarf knotted loosely on one side. I wondered why she chose the Mackenzie, or what reason women who have no Scotch connections would assign for preferring one above another clan.

That there are preferences is certain and the Douglas is about as popular as any tartan. I saw a highly successful gown at the theater the other evening in its mingled dark blues and greens with a relief of white lines crossing this ground. In the tight-fitting bodice the stripes and checks were wonderfully well matched, though it is to be doubted if the most carefully cross cut bodice, which a little while ago nobody would have tolerated, can ever satisfy the eye, as well as a little plain waist. However, the way in which this corsage was arranged to button over on one side was especially becoming to the figure. The skirt was cut in a severely simple style, but one which suited admirably the design of the tartan.

Some New York houses, I notice, are sending out so-called "fancy" tartans which represent no clan whatever, and have been evolved from the brain of some enterprising latter day designer, while others, who stand as purists, treat with scorn all such "barbarities." The fancy tartans come often in pretty little silks for calling gowns, and their soft blue and rose pink tints are quite as pleasing if not as well authorized as the genuine stuff of the Scotsmen. Agnes Booth wore a pretty house gown of this description one day last week while she was laid up with "la grippe," and the Madison Square Theater had a new "Aunt Jack" in the person of Maude Harrison. Mrs. Booth-Schoeffel wore in her boudoir a combination of shaded old pink and black, cut bias throughout, with a round waist of the broad plaids lapped in front, and an old pink velvet girdle nine inches wide folded across the bodice. The sleeves, also cut with the stripes running diagonally, were very wide at the top but tight from the elbow down, with eight small buttons of old rose velvet fastening them on the inner seam. The skirt was plain and round, with little velvet diamonds dotted about the bottom just above the hem in an irregular pattern.

For the street I have seen a number of tartan gowns in poplins with tartan muffs to correspond. A very smart one stepped a Fifth avenue stage one morning and showed fur edged boots as it was climbing in. The colors were a new moss green plaid with blue and brown cross bars. The straight front and princess back opened over a side plaited skirt of dull rose poplin, edged with a woven boarder of lynx fur. The bodice had a vest of rose velvet and was draped with a soft rose silk not wholly hidden under the short jacket whose fronts had not been closed in the warmth of the winter day. A Directory hat was worn of moss green velvet trimmed with pink ribbon and brown feathers.

A well known singer wore a costume which was a very good type of another variety of plaid gown at a 4 o'clock a few days ago. The black and white plaid was laid in wide deep plaits at the back. The front was quite plain and slightly lifted to show a petticoat of Sultana red cloth. The bodice was a long basque of the plaided goods cut on the straight way, as was the skirt also. It was cut away on the hips and had a short slashed back, with folded fronts of ecru armure and plastron and revers of red velvet. The sleeves were tight to the elbow, the upper part consisting of a jockey of ecru silk, puffed high upon the shoulders and banded with red velvet. The black felt hat was faced with velvet and trimmed with ecru ostrich tips.

At some of the holiday gatherings in country houses a fine old clanish air was given to some families by having the little boys wear kilts in the plaids affected by their mothers and bringing out the small girls in silk sashes and handkerchiefs to correspond. One might have thought, if the whim were not a shade too eccentric, that the idea was to imitate the heads of houses in Scotland, where this winter on all festival occasions on the estates both host and hostess appear to the tenantry wearing their own tartan.

Some of the newest tartans are in neutral colors. A handsome one which I saw this morning was a rough gray cloth plaided in brown and a darker gray. It was made up with a petticoat of gray velvet, over which fell long pieces of cloth at the back and on the sides, the velvet showing in front. The bodice had a velvet vest and the sleeves were of velvet from the shoulders to the elbows, where they were caught under long tight cuffs of cloth. This gown was made for a quiet, nunlike little woman, whose taste in her own soft colors is perfect, and who wears with it a long coat of gray cloth of artistic cut, lined with pink broche and with cuffs and high collar of chinchilla. The costume is completed by a "Puritan cap" bonnet of gray velvet with a simple bordering of gold braid.

Winter is a genial, cheery, social sort of time and fur is the very embodiment of comfort and luxury. A wonderful coat worn by one of the tallest of our young blonde beauties—by the way, I suppose you know that blondes are making a high bid for supremacy this season—fits like a glove, and is made of closely curled black astrakhan fur, with huge collar and lapels, warm enough to defy Siberian frosts, loose front and closely-fitting vest of seal skin, the combination of these two strikingly different furs being the latest fad of the fashionables. The muff which goes with it is rather a large one, for the wise woman bears always in mind the picture by Le Brun in the Louvre of the famous beauty of the Directory, who is represented coquettishly hiding her laughing face in a huge muff of bear skin.

Now and then one sees some really pretty hats and bonnets. A small toque is of reddish brown velvet, the crown covered with holly berries and leaves. Another is of Eiffel red velvet with a black jet crown with loop of velvet in the middle.

IN THE LITERARY WORLD.

GENERAL LEW WALLACE has received $45,000 for his story "Ben Hur."

THE late Wilkie Collins seemed to care nothing for the opinions of critics, and never kept a scrap-book.

ANNA KATHERINE GREEN, the so-called American Gaboriau, has been writing tales and verses since she was eleven years old.

HARRIET BEECHER STOWE recently said: "I wish writers of my life would wait until I am dead before they publish their biographies."

MARY GORDON DUFFEE, the authoress, now nearly fifty years old, lives with her aged mother in a ruined frame cottage perched on the very summit of a picturesque mountain near Blount Springs, Ala.

THE Marquis of Lorne's first novelette is in course of publication in England. Its title is "A Canadian Love Story," and its hero a young Canadian, who falls in love with the daughter of an Indian chief.

GEORGE SAND made 1,000,000 francs by her literary labors and gave it all away except 20,000, which she invested in order, as she said, that in case she fell sick her herb tea would not cost her children any thing.

JOHN G. WHITTIER, the best beloved of all American poets, lately passed his eighty-second birthday at his home in Amesbury, warmed by the love of millions who are the better for his having lived.

AMONG the papers of the late Mr. Matthew Arnold a large number of poems have been found, many of which are of such excellence and finish that, in the opinion of his literary executors, they ought to be given to the world.

GEORGE EBERS, the rival of Rider Haggard in Egyptian romancing, is fifty-two years old. He is professor of "Egyptology" in the University of Leipzig, and he took to writing novels because a severe illness incapacitated him for better work. So his biographers put it.

MRS. AMELIA E. BARR has been favorably known as a writer for some time, both in America and England. Her "Jan Vedder's Wife," "The Border Shepherdess," "A Daughter of Fife," and some of her other novels have each been both a popular and critical success. The novel which she has written for the Century is said to be "the most important literary work of her life."

A Submarine Boat That Works.

"A despatch from Madrid, says: "The submerging trials of the submarine boat Peral have taken place in the open sea with excellent results. The boat appeared and disappeared from the surface of the water with incredible rapidity. It was submerged to a depth of seven metres, and remained beneath the water forty minutes. The total time that the boat was under water was two hours and a quarter. The inventor, Senor Peral, was congratulated as victor by the immense assemblage present to witness the trials."

DOUBLE-FACED PEOPLE.

Some Freaks of Nature in the Human Countenance.

Photographer Sarony Tells About a Peculiarity that Few People Have Probably Noticed—The Direful Results of Thumb-sucking in Infancy.

COPYRIGHT 1890.

Perhaps you are not aware of the fact, but, unless you are entirely different from the rest of humanity, one side of your face is unlike the other. Doubtless, nine persons out of ten would not notice the difference, but it is there, and if you make a careful study of the profiles of your friend's faces you will find it in a more or less marked degree in every instance.

This peculiarity of nature was called to my attention when I entered the practice of photography. Previous to this time, I had been an artist and lithographer and, naturally, had been led to study the human figure with more or less care. I had discovered this incongruity of nature, if it may be so called, but it was not until I began posing models before the camera and had every line of the face emphasized, that this idiosyncracy became more apparent to me and I set to work to discover the cause; for, of course, there is a cause for everything, the human face included.

My first discovery was that the difference in outline lay almost invariably on the two opposite sides of the nose. The right side, for instance, might be pure aquiline and the left show a decided inward curving line. This difference I found in many instances had been caused by accidents, such as had been received in wrestling, falling, being struck by a ball, or other misfortunes which youth is heir to. There is an indentation on one side of my own nose caused by a blow from a ball and it renders the expression of one side of my face almost entirely different from the other.

But accident is not the principal cause of these facial differences in humanity. Not by a great deal. It traces way back to the cradle. Mothers find that their infants will remain quiter when they are sucking their thumbs, and for peace in the household they very often lay the foundation for what becomes a deformity in after life.

Let me explain: Baby lies in her cradle as still as a mouse. Her chubby little thumb is held between her rosy lips, and the forefinger is pressing the cartilege of the nose on one side. It is that little forefinger that is doing all the mischief, for it is slowly, but surely, pressing the cartilage out of shape. If drops of water wear away a stone, surely constant pressure will indent a human face.

Let me cite you an instance. Not long ago a well-known society lady of New York brought her two daughters, aged fifteen and sixteen years respectively, to have their portraits taken. One of them had almost faultless features while the other, although her eyes were as beautiful as her sister's, had a nose that was depressed on one side and lips that protruded so much that they showed the teeth. I guessed the cause, but determined to satisfy myself. It was a somewhat delicate task to question the young lady's mother, but I did, and she confessed to me that he daughter had been in the habit of sucking her thumbs until she was more than three years old.

A few years ago somebody wrote a book entitled "Shut Your Mouth," in which were explained the evils that followed the practice of sleeping with the mouth open. I wish somebody else would write a book urging upon mothers the necessity of breaking their infants of the habit of thumb-sucking. It may seem to be a small thing, but there would be many more symmetrical features if it were attended to.

In posing for photographs another fact that has been impressed upon my observation is that which is known as the part side of the head—the side on which the hair is parted—is almost invariably hard to take. The accompanying portraits of the poet Longfellow will illustrate this. About sixteen years ago I visited Cambridge and there the great poet sat for me. When I came to pose him I at once found that, like the majority of sitters, there was a difference in the two sides of his nose and the part side of his head was not so striking as the other, but, as we had to get the part in somehow, Longfellow obligingly changed it to the other side. Compare the two portraits, and even a cursory examination will demonstrate the truth of the assertion.

When I showed the proofs to the grand old poet he could hardly credit that such a difference could exist, and I remember that before I left Cambridge he told a number of his friends, and quite a little discussion arose over the subject, the photographs, however, presenting an argument so irrefutable that few attempted to combat it. Again, you will notice in those two portraits of Longfellow how different is the expression in each, arising from the fact that they represent what may be called the good and the bad sides of the face. Indeed, in almost any portrait you can secure different expressions on the same face, according to the point of view from which the portrait is taken. During my career I have found that the three-quarter view is generally the most effective—always, of course, being certain to secure the good side of the face. For, if you get the wrong side, then no camera ever invented could turn out a portrait that would satisfy the sitter, who, while he could not define the reason, would know that the likeness was not good, that is to say, did not show him at his best, where everybody wants to be shown who goes to a photographer.

One of the most remarkable instances of the difference in the sides of the face was General Hancock. I have seen photographs of him taken from opposite sides and they were so totally dissimilar that it seemed almost impossible to believe they were portraits of one and the same person.

I have cited those cases of Hancock and Longfellow because the men have occupied so large a space in the public mind. They are only two out of millions. In fact the number of double-faced people who are walking upon [illegible] is something remarkable. Not double-faced people in the usual acceptance of the word, but people with real, bona fide double-faces, which, to the photographer, represent not necessarily the good and bad sides of humanity, but, most assuredly, the good and bad sides of a likeness. And the pity of it all is that much of this double-sidedness might be obviated if infants' thumbs were kept out of their mouths.

NAPOLEON SARONY.

ARE YOU GUILTY?

Blunders That Are Made By Educated People Through Carelessness.

Faults are pardonable in conversation which are not pardonable in written compositions. But we must be careful not to take too much leeway in this regard and not to make mistakes in grammar or pronunciation. Some people are guilty of grammatical blunders through sheer carelessness. Thus a lady of my acquaintance, who understands trigonometry and can translate Virgil, often says to me, "you was," and yet she knows perfectly well that this is an inexcusable mistake.

Other people, who ought to know better, say "he don't" for "he doesn't." "I don't know as I do," instead of "I don't know that I do." "Aint" and "taint" are not often used now by educated people unless in a jesting way. It is an unwise thing, however, to be careless or inaccurate in one's pronunciations or use of language, since tricks of speech are easily caught and very hard to get rid of. Thus, when one is talking to servants or other uneducated people, one is often tempted to adopt their phraseology, in order to be readily understood by them, but it is better to withstand the temptation, even if one should be obliged in consequence to take more trouble to express one's meaning clearly.

What shall be said of the woman who says: "I done it?" She has certainly placed herself between the horns of a dilemma. Her hearers will infer, either that her early education was neglected, or that she associated with uneducated people during her childhood. And yet this is a grammatical fault which seems hard to get rid of. Persons who never say "I seen it," or "he has went," or "them things," will occasionally betray themselves by letting slip the fatal "I done it."

It is quite as incorrect to use "he" and "I" for "him" and "me," or vice versa, as it is to say "I done it," and yet the first-named class of faults—that of using the wrong pronouns—is sometimes committed by educated people.

Indeed, I have heard the phrase, "It is me," justified on the ground that it was a literal translation of the French "c'est moi." But our English grammar does not, like its French namesake, justify the employment of certain pronuncial forms, merely for the value of euphony. "He is older than I" may not sound so well as "He is older than me," yet the former is the correct form. I is a very common mistake to say, "Between you and I," and yet a moment's reflection should convince any one who has ever studied grammar that he should say "between you and me."

PEOPLE PASSED AWAY.

LORD MACAULAY'S executors have in their hands some unpublished ballads of his that he wished should not be published.

JOHN JACOB ASTOR died worth $40,000,000 after beginning on a salary of two dollars a week for beating furs in a damp cellar. The $40,000,000 left by him in 1849 has grown in forty years to $200,000,000. The Astors know the value of money and never waste nor spent it uselessly. The habits of the elder Astors were as regular as a Dutch clock. His only recreation was a game of checkers; his only beverage was a glass of ale after dinner.

A NEPHEW of Millet lives in New York and recently talking about the great master said: "The friends of the family never thought much of the works which he created, and his creations were looked upon as the result of so much time lost, which could have been profitably employed in attending to the productions of his farm. So the influences around Millet were not very encouraging, and when he painted the 'Angelus' he was obliged to sell it for bread."

THE late Mme. la Marechale Canrobert, the story goes, introduced herself to the Marshal twenty-six years ago at an official ball. The young lady walked up to him and said: "Monsieur, will you dance with me?" The surprised soldier "begged off" in a few confused words; then, turning to a young officer beside him, he said: "Will you kindly take my place beside the young lady, and remember that this night a Marshal of France envies a sub-Lieutenant?" Her name was Flora MacDonald then, but the Marshal soon got her consent to have it changed.

As a boy the late Washington Irving Bishop was a terror. An old schoolmate of his says that all his classmates stood in awe of him, and that even his mother was horrified at some of his pranks. One day in the school-room he took a snake out of his pocket and set it crawling toward the teacher, who was scared out of his wits. In later years he used to delight in surrounding himself with mystery, and in street-cars and other public places would frighten bystanders by apparently swallowing live frogs and taking rabbits out of the pockets of strangers.

THE late Drs. Gage and Burton, of Hartford, were both genial and fun-loving clergymen, and when the two met there was always a delightful passage of wit, as the following anecdote illustrates: One of Dr. Gage's lectures had proved to be less attractive than the others, and on its second repetition it had become a "chestnut" and did not "draw;" many left. When Dr. Gage was relating to Dr. Burton his experience with a burglar he said: "Why, doctor, I had him down flat on his back—I held him there—he couldn't move an inch!" "What a splendid opportunity," retorted Dr. Burton, "that was, Gage, to have delivered to him your lecture on Palestine."

THE late Dr. Horatius Bonar was remarkable for his intense love of preaching. He came to the pulpit often when he was hardly able to undertake pulpit duty, but as soon as he found himself in the place where he was wont to speak to his people he seemed to become animated by their presence, and to gather earnestness from the very attention which was always in a remarkable degree given to him while he spoke. He had this peculiarity as a preacher, that he possessed the almost lost art of preaching without notes. He prepared his subject carefully, but he spoke entirely from memory, and often impromptu, with an air of authority which, with his venerable appearance and character, gave weight to his words.

Generous Youth.

Mother—Tommy, I hear you got a thrashing in school to-day.

Tommy—Yes, ma, the teacher whipped me, but he is getting so old and weak that it didn't hurt much.

"Did you cry?"

"Oh, yes; I bawled, so you could have heard it on the next block."

"Why did you do that?"

"I wanted to make the old man feel happy once more."

Quite a Difference.

"American girls come cheaper than Circassian maidens."

"What do you mean?"

"Why, the Sultan of Turkey buys Circassians, but we often read of American girls being presented to Queen Victoria."

TREASON TO PRINCIPLES.

The apparent hesitancy on the part of the Government of the United States to promptly acknowledge and cordially welcome the admission of Brazil into the sisterhood of Republics is as strange as it is derogatory to our national character.

The argument advanced that the establishment of the Brazilian Republic may be premature, and therefore, it becomes us to wait and see if the popular will in that country sustains the change, is thoroughly flimsy and at variance with avowed American principles and official precedents.

The former action of the United States towards new-born Republics has ever been, and very properly, devoid of invidious delay.

Why such tardiness now?

Resolutions favorable to the immediate acknowledgment of the formation of a system of government in Brazil similar to our own, have been introduced into Congress, but do not there meet with hearty and deserved approval.

What are the men in present national authority thinking about?

Have they forgotten the origin of the American Republic, or are they ambitious to follow the tyrannical example of the Russian Czar?

Every zealous effort to strike off the shackles of monarchy, and to rear Republican governmental edifices, no matter where, how or by whom, ought to be hailed with encouraging alacrity and joy by the great Republic of Washington.

Not to do so, is treason to the letter and spirit of our immortal Declaration of Independence.

As Republics go up, the impious pretension of the Divine prerogative of Kings, Queens and Emperors to rule goes down, and what man, having patriotic American blood in his veins, can for a moment suppress enthusiastic plaudits for the triumph of popular rights in any section of the wide world.

Let us ponder the page of history.

When the patriots of 1776 on these shores were engaged in a life or death struggle to secure national existence, and the prospect was dark and dreary, did France coldly say to them, as we are now virtually saying to Brazil, when you succeed and gain a firm foothold, we will officially own the fact.

Nothing of the kind.

But on the contrary, France, generous-hearted France, not only acknowledged the infant American Republic, but gave it substantial aid and comfort and helped it onward to permanent success.

'Twere well to gratefully remember the past and act loyal to duty.

Brazil is a magnificent domain. Among her citizens are those of the highest intelligence and governing qualifications. They have in a dignified manner proclaimed the Republic and yearn to enjoy its manifold blessings.

Can we withhold from that young Republic the right hand of fellowship and live worthy sons of worthy sires?

The echo of a hundred years thunders No! NO!!

ANNUAL CHURCH MEETING.

Trustees Re-elected, Financial Prosperity Reported, and the Janitor Pensioned.

A meeting was held in the Crescent Avenue church, Monday, for the purpose of electing seven trustees to serve for the ensuing year, and to listen to the annual financial and other reports. President Charles Place presided.

The election resulted in the choosing for another term of the present Board: Charles Place, J. K. Myers, L. W. Rushmore, J. W. Murray, H. D. Jones, Ephraim Miller and Wm. F. Arnold. The Finance Committee of which Mr. Rushmore is chairman, reported through the Treasurer of the Board, Mr. Arnold, that $14,722.64 had been subscribed towards the extension fund and about $6,000 more would be necessary to complete the alterations, improve the organ and refurnish the new Sunday school rooms.

The receipts of the church fund for the past year, were $15,615.47, and the expenditures, $15,614.97. It was left in the power and discretion of the Board of Trustees, to care and provide for Henry Kline, the old sexton of the church, as long as he lives. He is now very ill and confined to his bed.

STOP RIGHT WHERE YOU WERE!

Gentlemen of the Council, There is No Reason for Granting Licenses for Any New Liquor Saloons.

A year's test has proven that the prohibition of "legal" liquor selling in Plainfield, closed thirteen decent and well ordered saloons and opened sixty-three filthy rum-holes.

The people then rose up and elected a license Council throughout, with the exception of two whose terms had not expired. That was a grand victory of common sense over sentiment, and THE PRESS will always feel proud of its share in the successful result. But by their action neither the people nor THE PRESS meant that they approved of the unrestricted granting of liquor licenses.

Among the applications for licenses to sell liquor, presented at the Council meeting of Monday, were two designating new locations. These should both be refused. They are the applications of Wm. A. Schorb, at 11 East Front street, and John Goff, at the corner of Third and Liberty streets. Both are unnecessary. While Schorb's petition is particularly offensive because he proposes to locate his saloon in the basement underneath the Post-office.

Let every councilman show his independence and good judgment by refusing these applications. Councilman Newhall and Dunham will vote no—who will join them?

For Saturday Liquors.

A plant for maturing liquors it is said will be started in this city. The process is a new one, invented by Julian A. E. Hasbrouck, who has recently been granted a patent. The Liquor-Maturing Company of New York and New Jersey has been organized with J. F. Pemberton, of Westfield; Walter C. Dean and Herbert Chapman, of Brooklyn. Mr. Hasbrouck's associates.

Tenders His Resignation.

Mr. Fredrick Moon, who has been a resident of this city for a few years past has unexpectedly changed his place of residence to Flemington, N. J. for an indefinite time. On this account Mr. Moon tendered his resignation to the Warren Mission Society Sunday as President and Trustee, and with unanimous regrets it was accepted. A Committee was appointed to draft resolutions and to present the same to Mr. Moon.

CITY COUNCIL MEETING.

License Applications Presented, and Other Routine Business Transacted.

President Moffett called the City Council to order in adjourned session at 8:30 P. M. last Monday, all the members being present except Mr. Newhall. The minutes of the last meeting were read, and the regular order of business was then taken up.

Mr. F. A. Dunham communicated with the Council with reference to the necessity of establishing a system of establishing grade marks at the street corners. Referred to the Street Committee.

Messrs. Jacob Kirkner, J. T. Fritts, F. A. Dunham, J. M. Moore and others petitioned the Council for a franchise to operate a street railway, under the name of the "Plainfield Street Railway Company." The matter was referred to the Street Committee.

Petitions were received and referred asking for fifteen additional electric lamps on Park avenue, Southeast of Cedar Brook; and also for an extra lamp on East Fourth, near Richmond street.

LICENSE APPLICATIONS

Were presented and referred to the License Committee as follows:

Chas. Smith, corner of Front and Somerset streets.

James O'Neil, No. 176 South Second street.

John Rafferty, No. 29 Park avenue.

John E. Beerbower, Corner of Park avenue and Second street.

William A. Schorb, No. 11 East Front street.

E. P. Thorn, No. 17 Park avenue.

Patrick Day, No. 97 West Third street.

J. T. Sullivan, No. 65 West Third street.

Fred. Casper, Nos. 34 and 36 East Front street.

James E. Force, No. 7 North avenue.

Jacob Blimm, Nos. 17 and 19 Somerset street.

James Connolly, No. 34 Park avenue.

J. B. Miller, Nos. 40 to 34 West Front street.

John Goff, Northwest corner of Third and Liberty streets.

Charles Bock, East Second street.

Mr. Jenkins, from the Finance Committee, presented a resolution which prevailed, requesting each committee to prepare an estimate of their probable expenses for the months of January, February, March and April, and report the same at the February meeting. He also recommended that no bills be paid this month.

Mr. Smith, from the Street Committee, called attention to the necessity for immediate repairs to the North avenue and New street sewers. He also urged the grading and macadamizing of Plainfield avenue from the railroad East to Fifth street. The Committee was authorized and empowered to proceed with the work.

The Street Committee was also granted an appropriation of $100 for repairs on Randolph road, to be used in connection with a $200 fund, subscribed by the property owners along said road.

Mr. Dunham asked the Street Committee to first consider the New street sewer, at a request coming from the Board of Health. The Street Committee was also authorized to repair a cave-in at the corner of Front street and Washington avenue.

Mr. Hetfield made a motion that the Mayor's message be taken from the file and that that portion of it relating to taxation, be referred to the Law and Ordinance Committee. Mr. Hetfield explained the object of his motion by stating that in his opinion it was right and proper for the Council and the Board of Education to act together in the matter of taxation. The motion was adopted.

Upon resolution adopted, the City Clerk was authorized to have the City's safe removed to the Clerk's office.

Mr. Rushmore introduced a resolution authorizing the Clerk to have one hundred copies of the ordinances of 1888 and '89 printed. Adopted.

Mr. Smith asked for an appropriation of $200 for street cleaning purposes. Granted.

THE OFFICIAL PAPERS.

Mr. Gallup recommended the appointment of THE PRESS, Central New Jersey Times and the News as the official papers. Mr. Smith offered and amendment, omitting the Times, giving as his reason that unnecessary expense would be incurred by designating three official papers when the law only required that the official business shall be published in two papers. Mr. Hetfield was not in favor of excluding the Times, nor was Mr. Jenkins. The amendment was lost, and the original recommendation adopted.

The Clerk reported that the contract with Engineer Rudolph Hering had been signed by the Mayor.

Council then adjourned.

Died From Over-Eating.

The young son of Peter Robinson who is a gardener in the employ of Mr. Charles Mulford, of this city, stuffed himself so full of stewed prunes and raisins, one day last week, that he was discovered a short time afterwards suffering the most intense pains.

A physician was summoned as soon as possible and relief administered. The unfortunate lad, however, swelled up and died in a very short time after taking the medicine. The funeral services were held at the South Plainfield Baptist church Saturday afternoon.

A Plainfielder's Big Winnings.

Almost all the large room traders at the New York Stock Exchange made handsome profits on the recent decline in Reading securities. W. R. Wadsworth of this city is credited with being particularly fortunate. In the first place, he wagered $1,000 some time ago that the Reading Company would pass the interest on its first income bonds. Isidor Wormser took the bet. In the second place, Mr. Wadsworth sold Reading stock short from 50 down to 37. It is said that besides bagging the $1,000 wager and the profit of 17 per cent on the stock, he made at least 20 per cent. bearing the income bonds.

Serving Them Right.

The four tramps who were arrested Saturday by Chief Carey for loafing about the Berckman street bridge and frightening every timid woman or girl that passed, were released Monday morning. They promptly got out of town after leaving a signal warning their fraternity to steer clear of Plainfield and Chief Carey.

The four were kept in one cell so small that they could not lie down. They were not given a mouthful to eat and only one drink of water from Saturday until Monday morning. The hope of the tramp is to be sent to a county jail where he is fed and kept warm until he feels pleased to travel on again under the skies of Summer.

A Tramp Who Wanted to Leave the Clothing Business.

Wanamaker & Co., the celebrated Newark clothiers, keep on extending their business and putting on more help all the time. Lately their cutting rooms were extended through to the rear of their Broad street building to 186 and 188 Market street, and now they are in need of a young man who has a large acquaintance in this vicinity, who desires to learn the clothing business.

The handsome cut and stylish make-up of the garments offered by Wanamaker & Co. keeps them busy even during the dull season, when they make closing prices on their immense stock, see their black dress suits at $22, $23 and $25, and their handsome $6 and $4.50 pantaloons now shown in their North window, opposite to Market street.—Newark Press.

TIED HEAD AND FOOT.

The "Mondays" Get Third Place in the County Tournament, and the Westfield "Pastimes" Are Evenly With the Plainfield "Crescents" as Tail Enders.

There are but two more matches to be rolled in the tournament for the bowling championship of this county. The one next Monday evening at Elizabeth will decide which team takes first place, and the one at Westfield on the evening of February 4, will decide which team takes last place.

The latter game will be between Plainfield's Crescent League team and the Westfield Pastimes. Captain Davis, of the former team, has been notified that he must win the game for Plainfield and not leave this city at the end of the tournament, in the position of McGinty. Monday evening's game will be between the Elizabeth team and the Nameless of Westfield. The winner will take first and the loser second place in the tournament. The value of the championship is about eighty dollars.

It was expected that the eighteenth game of the tournament, rolled at Westfield last evening, between the "Mondays" and "Pastimes" would be won by the former. In such case the "Mondays" would tie for second place the loser of the tie for first place. But the "ponys" beat them by the following score:

ABSOLUTELY SECURE.

How the City Bank Takes Care of Its Patrons' Valuables.

The only thing that would convince a newspaper man that there were fellow beings in the world who owned more valuables than they could carry in their pockets or could safely care for themselves, is a visit to the City Bank and an inspection of the five thousand dollar safe, weighing sixty tons and supported on a massive stone pier, in which are scores of compartments of all sizes separated by partitions of steel, and rented by numerous Plainfielders for the safe deposit of their Government bonds, mortgages, deeds, wills and other valuables.

This enormous safe stands fully exposed to view within a burglar-proof cage of steel, entrance to which can only be had by those who rent the inner compartments, upon the Cashier unlocking the door of the cage.

The safe door is provided with the latest improved time-lock, besides other locks requiring the manipulation of combinations of fifteen numbers. The inner safes are rented at from five to ten dollars a year. Each renter is given the key that opens only his own safe, but even he cannot unlock his safe until the lock has been set in readiness by the insertion of a key in the possession of the Cashier. Yet the Cashier himself cannot open any of these inner safes.

At night the interior of the cage and the locks of the safe are entirely exposed to view from the street, and besides this fact, and that it would be impossible for any gang of burglars to get into the safe within twelve hours time, a watchman is on duty who is required to push on a button every time he makes his rounds, that registers inside the bank how often and at what times during the night he inspected the premises.

"TEE KAY" AGAIN.

What the People of the South Think of Him.

Thomas H. Keller, of this city, that well-known, and perhaps notorious man, so far as prize shooting matches is concerned, has been "away down South in Dixie," arranging matches for most of the crack shots of the country, and the "Spirit of The Times," published at New Orleans, has this to say in a recent issue concerning him:

"The enterprise is fortunate in having an experienced newspaper man and popular gentleman in advance looking out for their interests. Mr. T. H. Keller, is a well-known writer in the sportsman's magazines as well as for the daily press. Here is what the Forest and Stream said of him in connection with this enterprise:

"The great tour of the United States Cartridge Company's shooting teams may now be said to be inaugurated, for although the shooters' car does not start till the latter part of January, the advance agent is now loose; which the same is Tee Kay. Any trap shooter and almost any sportsman of the country will know it is unnecessary to remark that Tee Kay is not a Japanese gentleman, but a straight-out American from New Jersey and a whole aggregation of talent in himself. To a few intimate friends it is known that his real name is Thos. Keller; but this fact is rapidly becoming obscured in the drift of time and Tee Kay goes. The only misfortune that can happen to the boys in the Iolanthe is that they can't have Tee Kay with them, but must follow after, vainly trying to stop the hole he leaves in the air on ahead; and if any imputation dare be put upon the management, it is that of possible bad judgment in selecting an advance agent who may have a doubt in a town as to whether he was the front man or the whole show himself."

Another Church Building.

The members of the First Church of Christ, in Plainfield, are intending to erect a church edifice in this locality.

Knights of Pythias Notes.

On the 21st of 22d insts., the Grand Lodge, K. of P., will be in session at Trenton. It is said that Grand Chancellor Bolton will put a good deal of new material into his committees. There are a number of candidates for the position of Grand Master-at-Arms, and the contest promises to be a lively one.

North Plainfield's Need.

Chief Martin of the North Plainfield Fire Department will submit to the Borough Council at its next meeting a proposed fire-alarm system. At the present time North Plainfield is more in need of a fire-alarm, than it is of more hose, as was evidenced by the recent Beck fire, when it is said, there was but one member of the fire department present until the place was burned down. The chief when he arrived at the fire had to send messengers to the member's houses in order to arouse them.

The Borough Council should act speedily, and provide a fire-alarm system for its efficient fire department.

FANWOOD FACTS.

What the Citizens of Our Suburban Village Are Doing.

One of Fanwood's old timers who has taken up his abode elsewhere passed through Scotch Plains a few days ago, and meeting some of his old acquaintances he made the usual inquiry, "What have you people of the village been a doing in violation of the law?" Being asked what he was alluding to, replied, "That he thought that they must have been guilty of some misdemeanor, as he saw coming up the street that they where erecting a building that looked very much like a penitentiary or insane asylum?" When informed that it was the new school building, he observed, "Oh, I see now, you people require such a building to confine your talent in."

Mr. George Kyte, the C. N. J. L. I. Co's affable and energetic agent, is now endeavoring to obtain from the C. R., crushed stone and slag to build up the roads around the freight house that are now in a horrible condition, and if there is anything in push and energy he will succeed. The present good condition of Fanwood's roads and sidewalks is entirely due to this same push and energy in soliciting material from this same source in liberal donations for the roads and sidewalks of Fanwood, and placing it there without one cent cost to the taxpayers.

Mr. Chas. Richardson, Fanwood's experienced and competent builder, is now engaged in erecting a two-story dwelling. When completed he proposes to make it his home. The plans are by Mr. Clarence W. Smith, the architect, and judging from the beauty and artistic taste displayed by Mr. Smith on a number of Fanwood homes, this dwelling also promises to be a credit to the architect and builder.

The well and favorably known firm of Baker & Mead, of Scotch Plains, have concluded to establish a branch store on the corner of South avenue and Russell road, Fanwood. The contract for the erection of a handsome two-story store and dwelling, designed by Clarence W. Smith, the architect, has been awarded to Chas. Richardson, carpenter and builder, and Wm. D. Johnston, mason and builder, of Scotch Plains, N. J.

It is by the acquisition of enterprising trades people that a place becomes favorably known, and it may be said with a genuine feeling of unquestioned veracity that the establishing of a branch store by the enterprising firm of Baker & Mead, in Fanwood, will mark a new era in the prosperity of Fanwood. And it has been predicted that those who shall live to see 1895 will see Fanwood comparing favorably with her adjoining towns on the line of the railroad, and will far outstrip the inland old village of Scotch Plains in population, and it may also be able to boast of an equal amount of talent to the square inch.

ANOTHER VICTORY FOR PLAINFIELD.

Having Beaten Teams From Westfield, Fanwood and Somerville, the Olympics of This City Beat Out the Newarkers.

The Alpha bowling team of Newark, representing the Y. M. C. A., of that city, came to Plainfield on Tuesday, expecting to defeat the Olympics with ease. The match was rolled on the Olympia alleys, and a large attendance was on hand including Van Emburgh, Van Winkle and other crack bowlers of the Crescent League who were interested spectators of the very fine game that was bowled by the Olympics.

The Plainfielders frightened the visitors out of their bowling-shoes by scoring in the very first frame a total of 172. After that Newark wasn't in it, and finished 236 pins behind. The Olympics all bowled well, but Collier had luck against him. He made up for his unusual low score, however, by serving a bountiful spread of refreshments after the game.

The Olympics score was: Van Alstyne, 182; Hudson, 118; Wilbur, 170; Murray, 159; Wyckoff, 124; Hawkins, 126; Hall, 157; White, 179; Collier, 129; Lowry, 171—Total, 1,508. Alpha total, 1,272.

SAVED BY A SHOWER.

Almost Another Tragedy at Seeley's Dam.

When the freshet of July last broke through Seeley's dam at Scotch Plains and washed away his buildings, machinery and all the valuable mill property he had spent his entire life in accumulating, it was supposed that so old a man would not begin anew the rebuilding of the plant. But though he may be old in years, he is still as full of grit and perseverance as he was a quarter of a century ago, and new mills and a new dam are already in course of erection.

The many rains of the past two months, however have greatly interfered with the progress of the work on the dam. It is to be one of the strongest in the State. Mr. Charles Drake, who is building it under contract, told a PRESS reporter he had used blocks of stone in it that weighed over three tons each. A temporary dam was first constructed above so as to turn the course of the stream into the mill flume and away from where the masons worked on the main dam.

One day last week a severe shower prevented these men from working, and they had come up from out of a deep hole in the bed of the stream where they were laying the base of the dam on the solid rock. Shortly afterwards the temporary dam gave way and an enormous body of water rushed down through the opening carrying with it the wheelbarrows, heavy timber, shovels and other tools. Had the masons been at work as usual, some of them would surely have been drowned.

Mother Goose Entertainment.

The members of the W.C.T.U., Kitchen Garden gave their Mother Goose entertainment, in the rooms of the Union on West Front street, on Tuesday, and the affair was well patronized.

The programme opened with a Mother Goose cantata by members of the Kitchen Garden, followed by a duett by Miss Etta Yeager and Miss Nettie Kreitling. Recitations were given by Miss Allen and Master Bert Thatcher.

A feature of the entertainment was the rendition of a part-piece in which each letter in the alphabet was represented by one of the members of the Kitchen Garden, each one reciting a verse.

The success of the entertainment is largely due to the untiring efforts of Miss Alice Smith and her assistants. Among those who contributed their services were Mr. Allen, Mr. Charles Wheeler, John Voehl, Clarence Vail, George Wells, Ernest Millard and Louis Hummer. Miss Allen creditably performed the part of "Mother Goose."

The Kitchen Garden will realize about twenty-five dollars.

Two of the Features.

A collection of pictures taken by Mr. Ernest Marx—who is celebrated throughout the country as an expert in instantaneous photography—will be one of the features of the Camera Club exhibition at the Y. M. C. A., members reception, Thursday evening, January 30. The "Ladies Nine" will serve the supper.

Entertainment—a Reminder.

Miss Allen is a young and attractive entertainer. The effect is unusual and highly [illegible] [illegible]—The York Herald.

Miss Allen will appear at Reform Hall under the auspices of the Young Men's auxiliary of the Y. M. C. A., Tuesday, January 28.

That beautiful glossy sheen, so much admired in hair, can be secured by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. There is nothing better than this preparation for strengthening the scalp and keeping it free from dandruff and itching eruptions.

THE WHOLE FAMILY JAILED.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Parkinson and the Misses Parkinson, Lodged in Cells as Burglars.

The quiet hamlet of Stirling was thrown into a state of excitement Saturday morning, by the report that George Doyle, section boss on the railroad, had been enticed into a bagnio and there robbed of about $30 by the proprietor or one of the inmates, while he slept.

The house in question is occupied by Thomas Parkinson and family, consisting of his wife and two daughters, besides a well known blacksmith of this city as an adjunct. The Parkinsons are well known in this city, where Thomas once through sympathy obtained the position of private watchman, while his wife and family played on the credulity of the kind-hearted philanthropic people of Plainfield. Thomas' reputation for honesty and sobriety was discovered to be somewhat shady—to such an extent that as a watchman he was a failure. His resignation was promptly asked for, and as promptly tendered.

After loosing his position he was helped to start a temperance eating house in North Plainfield, by some who had not lost all hope and confidence in him. Here he again abused the generosity of his friends and made the place the rendezvous of the worst kind of characters, to such an extent that it was closed through the influence of respectable neighbors. Last Spring Thomas and family moved to Stirling, Northwest of this city, where a large silk mill is situated, giving employment to most of the residents of the place.

The people of Stirling pursue the even tenor of their way—only varied by a trip to this city, or in gossiping about the stranger who might have gotten off the train which stops at the lonesome station; while the more enlightened leaders of society read THE PRESS, it being the only paper reaching there, except a few agricultural or religious periodicals. But they were not as long finding out the unsavory character of the new comers, as the people of this city were.

Hen roosts were robbed, and suspicion at once pointed to the Parkinsons, but no proof sufficient to warrant their arrest was obtained. One young man has since acknowledged that he helped them to steal. They were put out of house after house by the exasperated citizens, but always continued to find an empty place to move into.

George Doyle, it is said, was induced by the Parkinsons to enter their home, where he alleges, he was relieved of his money by some one of the inmates. In the morning he went to the Squire and entered a complaint of larceny from the person. Warrants were issued for the whole gang, but the wily Thomas smelt the battle afar, and hied himself to this city, where he was seen on the streets last Saturday.

The rest of the family, however, now languish behind cell doors at the expense of the city of Morristown, where the erring Thomas will join them. The residents of Stirling hope this is the last to be heard of the family in this vicinity.

Constable Harvey arrested Thomas last Monday, as he was on a visit to his home. Parkinson said he was satisfied to accompany the officer to the jail, as he would not have to support himself and family any longer.

The Beginning of the Plainfield Water Works.

His Honor Mayor Male, Chief Doane of the Fire Department, Collector Spencer of North Plainfield, Contractor Moore, and a PRESS reporter, penetrated the thick woods at the foot of the mountain back of Johnston park, last Friday afternoon, to view the commencement of Plainfield's water works.

The first test well had been driven a depth of 17 feet, when a strata of hard clay was struck through which it was found impossible to drill without other tools. Test wells are to be driven in other parts of Plainfield's suburbs, and where the purest water and an unfailing supply is found, will be the source decided on.

In Union They'll Seek Strength.

A prominent Westfield bowler and a member of one of the league teams, predicts that next season Westfield will enter the league with only one team. He says: "With ten men picked from the members of the three clubs, we could beat any team in the State. The idea of Westfield supporting three league teams is absurd. The good men are so scattered about now, that it is a wonder to me the teams make as good a showing as they do. Plainfield has selected its league team from a total membership of over two hundred and Elizabeth from a membership considerably larger even than that."

Upset on Madison Avenue.

Messrs Manning and Sandford, the builders, were driving out of the yard at Spicer & Hubbard's mill at 11 o'clock last Monday, when in some unexplained manner the wagon, in which they were seated, upset, throwing the occupants out. The horse broke loose from the wagon and ran away. The vehicle was considerably damaged, and both Mr. Manning and Mr. Sandford were badly shaken up.

A Charge That Calls for Immediate Investigation.

One of the Crescent League bowlers who has been rolling the highest scores, is openly accused of bribing a pin boy to "bunch" the pins for him. The matter should be investigated at once by the Trustees, and submitted to the Club for action at its next meeting. If the member is innocent he deserves speedy vindication; if guilty he should be expelled.

He Can Shoot as Well as Bowl.

A team of twenty-five men from Company E, New York 7th Regiment, scored the highest total at 200 and 500 yards the other day, ever made by a regimental rifle team. Mr. Howard L. Emerson, of this city, one of the most reliable of the Crescent League bowling team, was one of the shooters and high man at the longer distance, making 24 out of a possible 25.

A Plainfield Military Company Again Proposed.

The annual effort put forth in this city to enroll a company for the National Guard of New Jersey, seems this year to promise success. The names of forty-nine of the fifty-three necessary are secured, and a meeting will shortly be called at which Wm. S. Stryker, Adjutant-General of the State, is expected to be present.

State Chess Association.

Prof. Charles Jacobus, the President of the State Chess Association, and Mr. Henry S. Boice, its Secretary and Treasurer, met with the rest of the State Executive Association at Elizabeth on Saturday evening to make final arrangements for the next meeting of the Association. This meeting will be held in New Brunswick on February 22.

They Die Hard.

The State Executive Committee of the Prohibition party has elected Mr. W. W. Winans, state organizer. Chairman Burger, who formerly lived in this city, but now of Cranford, will direct the organizer in his work. It is proposed to have a Prohibition organization in every village in the State.

Disappointment in Love.

The fraternity of "Disappointed Lovers" has been formed in Maryland and is establishing branches in Delaware. We are not informed whether married people are admitted to membership in the order, but they should be, as they are often the most disappointed of lovers.

AS VIEWED BY THE VISITOR.

Notes Worth Noticing Among the Methodists That Attended Their Minister's Attention.

From the January number of The Visitor, edited by the Rev. C. R. Mitchell, pastor of the M. E. Church, and circulated gratuitously among the members of his congregation, the following items are reprinted:

The flower-stand on the pulpit presents as desolate an appearance as a Siberian steppe in mid-winter.

Mr. C. C. Cokefair hopes soon to be in his home at 9 Crescent avenue. It will be a beautiful home worthily occupied.

Mrs. Melissa French is spending the Winter in Florida. We who remain at home are spending a Florida Winter in New Jersey.

Dr. Hurlbut has gone on a long tour through the South, visiting in his official capacity the Southern conferences. He will be absent a month or six weeks.

Mr. James E. Joy is very busily engaged in preparing for the press a book on English History, to be used in the C. L. S. C. course of study. If the book be the equal of his Roman History his friends will not be surprised, and his reputation as a writer and historian will be further enhanced.

We have a membership of five hundred and seventy-five. Of this number one hundred and sixty-one are unmarried young people.

Miss Hattie Lunger, of the Choir, is engaged in the office of the Bureau of Church Statistics in this city. She is a beautiful penman and an efficient clerk.

Much praise is due chorister Davis and his excellent choir for the beautiful and appropriate music rendered at the Christmas service, Sabbath morning, December 22.

Dr. Larrabee's Sunday School Class manifested their appreciation of their faithful and efficient teacher by presenting him an elegant gold-headed cane on Christmas.

From the reports gathered from the other city pastors concerning the attendance of their meetings, held during the Week of Prayer, we do not regret that we decided to hold no extra meetings that week.

Zephyr Hook and Ladder Company's Ball.

The annual ball of Zephyr Hook and Ladder Company, took place in the Gesang and Turn Hall, Tuesday night, a large number of young persons being in attendance. Prof. Guttman furnished the music for dancing, which continued until early next morning. The following persons had charge of the ball: General Director, L. G. Beekman, Floor Manager, J. C. Blimm; Assistant Floor Manager, W. B. Sharp; Floor Committee, C. F. Glaentzer, Jacob Blimm; Reception Committee, F. A. Glaentzer, G. A. Zeiss, F. B. Fine, Chas. Westerfield, Geo. Mehl, Jr., E. J. Waters, Jacob Blimm, R. R. Fairchild, John Ammon, O. G. Irvin, J. B. Sharp, E. B. Hedden.

Wooden Wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. John H. Angleman celebrated their fifth wedding anniversary at their home, No. 17 Berckman street on Tuesday, and the occasion was one of much enjoyment. Following is a list of those present:

Mr. Geo. M. Angleman, Mr. and Mrs. A. Angleman, Miss M. Angleman, Mr. Wm. Angleman, Mr. Chas. Angleman, Mr. and Mrs. McVoy, Miss I. Angleman, Mr. and Mrs. Northrup, Miss Northrup, Mrs. T. H. Keller, Mr. Jos. E. Keller, Mr. and Mrs. McClain, Miss McClain, Mr. Bert McVoy, Master Raymond McVoy, Mr. Elmer Vail, Miss Cox of Brooklyn, Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Cox of Brooklyn, Mrs. A. Weeks, Miss F. A. Weeks.

Too Fond of Dress.

A fashionably attired woman, giving her name as "Miss Mamie Benson," aged twenty-two years, of this city, faced the bar in the Jefferson Market Court, in New York, Tuesday, as exclusively reported in Monday's PRESS. Costumer Culver of No. 2 Union Square said she had stolen from him an expensive suit. She was remanded to Police Headquarters.

If "Miss Benson" is able to convince the court that she meant no wrong in hiring a hundred-dollar ball dress of Mr. Culver and instead of returning it bringing it to Plainfield with her, THE PRESS will continue to keep her identy a secret.

Prize Fight at South Plainfield.

It is reported that James Dwyer formerly of this city, but now of Bound Brook, fought in the prize ring with a pugilist from Troy in an open field near South Plainfield, Tuesday night, and that Dwyer knocked his man out in five rounds. Members of the sporting fraternity, who pretend to know, say that the fight was more of a fake than anything else. The mill took place at one o'clock, and it was witnessed by about three hundred persons. No arrests were made.

A Wreck at Evona.

About seven o'clock Tuesday evening, as Mr. Timothy McCarthy, the sewing machine agent of this city, was driving along West Front street, on his return from Dunellen, and when opposite the Evona station he was run into by a rig owned by Mr. Aaron Brouwer, and driven by Mr. Chas. Drake of Dunellen. Mr. Brouwer's horse was thrown to the ground, fracturing a leg. Mr. McCarthy's wagon was badly wrecked.

Brouwer's horse, it is alleged, was allowed to remain in the gutter for several hours, until special officer Kriney notified the owner of the accident. The animal was subsequently killed.

'Twould be Quite a Novelty.

The people of Plainfield would appreciate the convenience very much if the "twelve o'clock whistles" would whistle at twelve o'clock.

Doubling Their Offer.

The collection last year in the Crescent avenue Church for the Board of Ministerial Relief, was $270. THE PRESS stated Saturday that it was desired to make the offering this year, $500. When the collection was counted Sunday morning, the total was found to be $600.

New Jersey Fruit Exchange.

The organization known as the New Jersey Fruit Exchange, and doing business in Flemington, reports 62,249 baskets of peaches sold the last season for $45,655.67, or an average of 73½ cents per basket. Owing to the storms near the close of the season, hundreds of baskets sold for from 15 to 30 cents per basket, thereby decreasing the general average materially.

Who the Clever Men Are.

The amateur photographers of the city will exhibit their views at the Members Reception of the Y. M. C. A., Thursday, January 30, and to the public thereafter.

Among the exhibitors are the following: Mr. O. B. Teale, Messrs. Howard and L. W. Serrell, Jr., Ernest Marx, D. C. Adams, J. Hervey Doane, G. Harry Squires, A. W. Day, Wm. H. Lyon, Jr., and A. J. Gavett.

Union County and the Committees.

Speaker Heppenheimer in forming the committees of the House of Assembly, at Trenton, has appointed the Union county members on the following:

Mr. Voorhees on ways and means; Mr. Marsh on judiciary, and on elections; Mr. Ulrich on municipal corporations.

On the joint committees, Mr. Marsh is on the treasurer's account, and Mr. Ulrich on the committee on industrial school for girls.

FELL FROM A SCAFFOLD.

Cornelius Stryker While at Work Painting the Netherwood Hotel, Falls Fifty Feet, and Receives Injuries Which May Prove Fatal.

An accident happened at the Netherwood hotel, about two o'clock Tuesday afternoon, which may result in the death of Cornelius Stryker, a painter, who for the past nineteen years has been employed by Mr. W. F. Adams, of this city.

The unfortunate man was at work painting on the East side of the building. He was standing on a swinging platform, when the platform tipped, throwing him headforemost to the ground, a distance of about fifty feet. The injured man was carried into the hotel, where Dr. Jenkins temporarily dressed the wounds. The doctor found upon examination that the left leg was fractured in two places, and that the patient was suffering from injury to his spine.

Later the injured man was placed on a cot and conveyed to his home in Bound Brook, where Dr. Compton and another physician attended him. Today the patient's condition is reported as but little improved.

High Art and Field Sports.

A New York paper Sunday, in speaking of ex-Councilman Squires of this city, said: "He is one of those dealers in sportsmen's goods who clearly recognizes the fact that the true lover of field sports has at once an artist's eye and a poet's soul. No man can appreciatively angle or hunt, can whip a stream for the royal trout and salmon, or wander with dog and gun over the uplands and marshes for toothsome quail or whirring woodcock, without being at heart that truest of poets, an ardent lover of nature. Mr. Squires has brought high art lavishly to the service of his poet patrons, and in what would ordinarily be a mere catalogue of the thousand and one odds and ends which go to make up the sportsman's outfit, has managed to make a sumptuous volume, fit to take its place on the drawing room table as a quarto of fine engravings.

"His list of illustrations runs up into the thousands, all of them bearing on his specialties, and many of them are taken from works which have commanded high prices as masterpieces of the printers' and engravers' arts. Here and there are given glimpses of woodland scenes, of water nooks, of mountain stretches, lifelike enough to set the normal man in a fever to leave studio or office-desk and rush off for a bout with nature. In this line of goods the best is always the cheapest. A fine fish lost through cheap tackle, a bird flushed, then off and away because the low grade gun failed to act, a heavy and ill-fitting hunting suit—all these only make the victim resolved next time to get only the best."

Reelected.

The Board of Visitors of the Firemen's Relief Association held a meeting Tuesday evening and elected David Rogers, Chairman, and Alex. Mallinson, Secretary.

The Sale of a Valuable Corner Postponed.

The chancery sale of the Arnold property at the corner of Seventh street and Arlington avenue, advertised in these columns to take place at 2 o'clock yesterday, was adjourned by Special Master George P. Kingsley, until Wednesday, February 19, at the same hour and place.

A Small Fire.

At 1 o'clock P. M. last Saturday fire was discovered in a clothes closet in the hallway over Voehl's bakery on West Front street. Mr. Voehl and his employes rushed up stairs and with a few buckets of water extinguished the fire, after about fifty dollars damage was done. No general alarm was sent out.

Westfield Cannot Contradict It.

The Standard of Westfield is brave enough to acknowledge the disgrace brought upon the town by some of its citizens, and philanthropic enough to join with THE PRESS in trying to correct the evil.

In publishing one of the letters to this paper regarding the gang of rowdies who are such a nuisance to the decent people who travel on the Central railroad, the Standard says: "The following communication to the Plainfield Press, does not help Westfield's reputation. The worst of it is, it cannot be contradicted."

Wing Shots to Contest.

A shooting match between D. J. Post, of Elizabeth, and W. Smith of Scotch Plains, for $25 a side, at live pigeons, 30 yards rise, 80 yards boundary, will take place January 27 on the Elizabeth Gun Club grounds. William Parker will act as referee and George Parker as judge. The contestants are crack wing shots.

Let The Literary to Enjoy Dancing.

The young ladies of the Shakspeare Club gave another of their delightful receptions at the home of Miss Grace Brown Mercer avenue, last Friday. All present enjoyed themselves immensely and the affair was but one more in the long line of Shaksperian conquests, won for him by his fair daughters. The interest of these receptions is only equaled by their frequency.

Mutual Aid Society.

The Mutual Aid Society, organized among the members of the Potter's Press Works recently is a commendable organization. The initiation fee is five dollars and the dues are twenty-five cents a month. In case a member is laid up by illness, he receives at the rate of five dollars a week.

Bound to Be a Success.

The arranging and rehearsing of the grand mid-Winter night's entertainment of amateur minstrelsy to be given at Music Hall, February 25, by the members of the Plainfield Crescent League, is in the hands of the world-famous interlocution, Ed. Marble, who was middle-man and general manager for four years with Thatcher, Primrose and West, and since then with Cleveland's minstrel company.

A Disgraceful Row.

A party of white and colored men engaged in a free fight in North Plainfield, on Saturday night, but they eluded arrest and came to this city. On Grove street, near the Baptist church, the fight was resumed and several knock-downs took place. The police are in possession of the names of the participants and some arrests are likely to follow.

Leading physicians recommend Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Old and young take it with perfect safety. It cleanses the blood, strengthens the nerves, and vitalizes the system. Popular experience has long placed this medicine at the head of tonic alteratives.

Plainfield Ladies Install Officers.

There was a very interesting ceremony witnessed by a large audience Thursday evening in Judson Kilpatrick Post's Hall, on East Jersey street, Elizabeth. The event was the public installation of the officers of the Woman's Relief Corps, No. 87, connected with the post.

The ceremony was conducted by Mrs. Jennie B. Atwood, assisted by Mrs. Ellen Bray, both of Plainfield.

Coughing

IS Nature's effort to expel foreign substances from the bronchial passages. Frequently, this causes inflammation and the need of an anodyne. No other expectorant or anodyne is equal to Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It assists Nature in ejecting the mucus, allays irritation, induces repose, and is the most popular of all cough cures.

"Of the many preparations before the public for the cure of colds, coughs, bronchitis, and kindred diseases, there is none, within the range of my experience, so reliable as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. For years I was subject to colds, followed by terrible coughs. About four years ago, when so afflicted, I was advised to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral and to lay all other remedies aside. I did so, and within a week was well of my cold and cough. Since then I have always kept this preparation in the house, and feel comparatively secure."—Mrs. L. L. Brown, Denmark, Miss.

"A few years ago I took a severe cold which affected my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and passed night after night without sleep. The doctors gave me up. I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which relieved my lungs, induced sleep, and afforded the rest necessary for the recovery of my strength. By the continual use of the Pectoral, a permanent cure was effected."—Horace Fairbrother, Rockingham, Vt.

Why, Mary, how your baby cries!

Yes, he has colic again.

Why don't you give him Dr. Taylor's Best Soothing Syrup?"

Is that good?

Yes, for Pain, Colds, Cough, &c., it is excellent for either young or old. Of the many kinds of medicines I have used in my family I have found none to equal it.

Thank you, Jane, I will try it. Margaret Ann, go as soon as you can to either REYNOLDS', or SHAW'S Drug Store, and get a bottle of Dr. Taylor's Soothing Syrup. 1-3-6m

Why continue the use of irritating powders, snuffs or liquids. Ely's Cream Balm, pleasant of application and a sure cure for catarrh and cold in head, can be had for 50c. It is easily applied into the nostrils, is safe and pleasant, and is curing the most obstinate cases. It gives relief at once.

When baby was sick, we gave her Castoria,
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria,
When she was a Miss, she clung to Castoria,
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria,

The proprietors of Ely's Cream Balm do not claim it to be a cure-all, but a sure remedy for catarrh colds in the head and hay fever. It is not a liquid or a snuff but is easily applied into the nostrils. It gives relief at once.

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—Oh, for a Y. M. C. A. building.

—The days are growing perceptibly longer.

—Mr. Elias Allen, of Washingtonville, caught two large raccoons in an old hollow white oak tree, Friday afternoon.

—Two of the Crescent League pin boys have sworn to an affidavit setting forth that they have never received pay for "bunching" the pins for anybody.

—Out of a total membership of 34 pupils in one of the classes in the Irving school, but eighteen responded to the roll call last Friday.

—E. W. Rice and Manager F. H. Bennett are both ill with la grippe. They have clerks enough, however, to wait on their customers promptly.

—Mr. J. Bicknell, an employe of Mr. J. P. Homan, the carriage manufacturer of Somerset street, is suffering from the effects of a felon on the thumb.

—The auction sale of the valuable real estate advertised in THE PAPER to take place at Dunellen Wednesday last week, has been indefinitely postponed.

—Christian Rowe was arraigned before Judge Codington Tuesday morning, on a charge of disorderly conduct on Saturday night. He was fined five dollars.

—Westfield citizens will present an American flag to the pupils of their public school, on Saturday next. There will be an oration and patriotic exercises.

—The Ladies "Y" have again manifested their interest in the Association's work, by placing handsome lamps in the reading room and parlor of the Y. M. C. A.

—The North Plainfield Township Committee has not held a meeting in several weeks, simply because there has been no urgent business to come up for consideration.

—It is said that at one time while the prevailing epidemic was at its worst, there were seventy-five of the Pond Tool Works employes at home sick with la grippe.

—If you are in search of a fine tonic, try L. W. Randolph's Beef, Iron and Wine. Obtainable only at the city pharmacy. Read his announcement in our advertising columns.

—It is only a question of time when all small packages will be sent through the mails. The number is increasing every day as the result of heavy charges by the express companies.

—It is stated that the reason Mr. Michael Watson did not present his application for a saloon license to the Council, on Monday evening, was because he did not have the required number of signatures.

—One of Mr. Geo. W. Rockafellow's grocery rigs was run into by a milk wagon on Broadway, Saturday afternoon, which frightened the horse and caused the animal to run away. The wagon was upset and badly damaged.

—A lady residing on Richmond street, was taken suddenly ill on West Front street, Thursday afternoon. She was assisted into the City Pharmacy, where she soon recovered sufficiently to be taken home in a carriage.

—Mr. D. W. Littell stated that the score he made at the Crescent League bowling alleys on Saturday night, was not in competition for any prize. Furthermore he denies having ever bowled illegally on that or any other alley.

—A Summit exchange says: "The Plainfield Constitutionalist cries, 'Oh, for a Y. M. C. A. building.' Summit need not worry for this. The town now has a structure that is an ornament to the place as well as a source of pleasure to its members."

—There is a woman living on Mountain avenue, who is willing to take an affidavit that she recently saw a ghost near the house. She also says that the ghost was shot at, but without effect. The woman cannot correctly describe the ghost but she says she has no desire to capture it.

—A correspondent in regard to the statement that a certain colored woman, who resides on Third street, went before his Honor, Judge Codington, a few days ago, "for the purpose of [illegible] an abusive and insulting letter sent to Mrs. Louise Frickers, of East Third street."

—The American Insurance Company of Newark, through Councilman M. M. Dunham, the agent in this city, Tuesday adjusted the claim of Mr. Jacob Voehl, for the loss he sustained by the fire in his home on Saturday last. The company paid Mr. Voehl $115, the amount of his claim in full.

—John Burns was given a hearing before City Judge Codington last Saturday, on a charge preferred by Overseer of the Poor J. O. Nodyne, for failing to support his family. John promised to sign the pledge and do better in the future, so the Judge adjourned the case for two weeks in order to give him a trial.

—A former employe of Mr. Frank Linke, the North Plainfield butcher, has lodged a complaint against him for alleged Sunday selling. When the Officer went to serve the warrant upon Mr. Linke, on Sunday, who is confined to the house by illness, he found a number of prominent householders in the bar room discussing various "subjects."

A Plainfield Woman Arrested in New York.

A fashionably dressed young woman aged twenty-two years, who gave the name of "Mage Mamie Harrison," and said she was of Plainfield, was arraigned in Jefferson Market Police Court, New York, Tuesday, for stealing. The name does not appear in the directory, and it is supposed that the woman gave a fictitious name.

The following representatives were present: Chief Consul Dr. G. Carlton Brown, of Elizabeth, Vice Consul Dr. H. A. Benedict, of Jersey City, Secretary and Treasurer Geo. C. Pennell, of Elizabeth, Fred. C. Gilbert, of Elizabeth, H. P. Storey, of Englewood, Robt. V. Whitehead and G. H. Cane, of Trenton, Theo. F. Merseles, Jr., of Jersey City, and Frank L. C. Martin, of this city. At this meeting a great deal of important business was transacted. The road book to be published at an early date will be far superior to anything of its kind ever before published, it will contain a map of each county and will be so designed as to give the person using it all the information needed regarding the condition of roads as to grade, material, distance, etc.

It was also decided to hold the Division meeting in this city on Friday and Saturday, May 30 and 31, next, in connection with which there will in all probability be a lantern parade, races for the several championships of the State, a banquet and a theatre party. It is intended to make this the largest gathering of wheelmen ever held in the State.

The membership of the League has been increasing of late and now there are over 800 members in this Division. After the meeting adjourned refreshments were served according to the usual custom of this club.

MAJOR CLARK INDICTED.

That Quarrel at the Southern Society's Club May Cost Him Dear.

The Grand Jury found an indictment Thursday for assault in the first degree—assault with intent to kill—against Major William Hancock Clark for shooting at Wilton Randolph, an ex-Councilman of this city, in front of the Southern Society's club house in New York, last Friday evening. Not less than five years' imprisonment and not more than ten years' is the penalty for assault in the first degree.

The Grand Jury Through.

The Grand Jury at Elizabeth last Friday handed in 28 bills of indictment, announced their labors completed, and were thereupon discharged by Judge Van Syckel.

They Can Beat 'em All, Kicking.

(From the Somerville Unionist.)

The West End Athletic Association are organizing a foot ball team, and expect to bring a strong eleven in the field next Fall. Somerville is noted for its strong base ball team, and after next Fall will be noted for its strong foot ball team.

Why Not Enforce the Law Here?

The first prosecution in the State under the law to prevent the sale of cigarettes to children under sixteen years of age was made in Camden yesterday before Mayor Pratt. The defendant was Frederick Fielder, and the prosecutor was George W. Rich. Mr. Rich swore that Fielder sold cigarettes and tobacco to his two sons. The prisoner was held in $300 bail.

Mr. Snodgrass' Lecture.

The Rev. W. C. Snodgrass of the Hedding M. E. church, Jersey City, delivered an interesting and entertaining lecture entitled, "A Love That Comes Too Late," last Friday, in Vincent chapel, before the Epworth League, a young people's society of the M. E. church. The lecture abounded in humor and at times the large audience was fairly convulsed with laughter. At its close the speaker was voted hearty thanks for the treat all had enjoyed, and he modestly thanked his audience for their undivided attention and evident appreciation.

The Stelle and Runyon Families.

A pamphlet of thirty-two pages has just been published containing a complete genealogy of the families of Stelles and Runyons, extending from 1666 and comprising about 1,500 names. There is only a limited edition, and any person wishing a copy can obtain the record for one dollar (the cost price) by communicating with the compiler, O. B. Leonard. The pamphlet contains outline sketches of many of the pioneer progenitors of this locality, including the Dunns, Drakes, Dunhams, Daytons, Mannings, Martins, Clarksons, Smalleys, Walkers, Randolphs and others.

A Home For the Boys.

A meeting for those interested in the formation of a Boy's Evening Club for the reformation and improvement of the street boys of our city, was held in the parlor of the Unitarian church, Thursday, and it was well attended. Mr. Ellis Gray Seymour, of Brooklyn, explained the object and illustrated the working of the boy's club in that city, and a committee consisting of Messrs C. W. Opdyke, N. Harper, J. L. Miller, Mrs. F. W. Pond and Mrs. W. L. Patten, was appointed to consider the question and report at the next meeting. Remarks were also made by Messrs A. M. Powell and C. W. Opdyke.

Westfield News.

The citizens of Westfield have subscribed for a flag for the public school with the idea of having it displayed daily as an additional education for the children and youth of the town.

Thursday Fireside Council, Royal Arcanum, publicly installed the newly-elected officers for the ensuing year. These are: S. W. Beers, Regent; Geo. H. Brown, Vice Regent; Herman Rapp, Orator; B. J. Crosby, Past Regent; Chas. H. Day, Secretary; W. G. [illegible], Collector; R. J. Crosby, Treasurer; F. E. Baker, Chaplain; L. A. Lightfoot, Guide; Hy. Wyckoff, Warden, and E. R. Brokaw, Sentry. W. C. Barton and B. J. Crosby have attended every meeting of this Council since its organization [illegible].

WRECK AT GRANT AVENUE.

Twenty Empty Coal Cars Wrecked and Splintered Up, And Thirty More Disabled—A Broken Wheel Caused the Accident.

A bad wreck occurred on the New Jersey Central Railroad at Grant avenue at 1 o'clock Thursday P. M., which resulted in the total destruction of twenty empty coal cars, and the disabling of thirty more.

At that hour, Central Engine No. 287, of the camel-back pattern, passed through this city, drawing a heavy train of empty coal cars. When about 50 yards East of Grant avenue, a broken wheel on one of the forward cars caused the car to jump the track, carrying nine others with it. The derailed cars ran along over the sleepers for fully 100 yds., to a point West of the station, where they were piled up promiscuously and wrecked.

The sudden stopping of the train wrecked ten other cars, fully half a train's length in the rear. These cars were thrown on the trestle and piled up down the embankment directly in the rear of Kline & Staats lumberyard, making two distinct wrecks.

Besides the wrecked cars already referred to, thirty additional cars had their journals or wheel boxes torn away. Fortunately all of the wrecked cars were thrown clear of the main tracks, and in consequence travel was but little delayed.

The company's loss will aggregate several thousand dollars.

Injured at the Potter Press Works.

Edward Birmingham, an employe of the Potter Press Works, was seriously injured while at work in the machine shop, Wednesday last week, and it is feared that the accident will result in the loss of the unfortunate man's left leg.

Birmingham was employed as a helper about the shop, when in some unexplained manner a 1,500 pound iron casting fell on his leg, crushing the latter in a frightful manner.

The injured man was taken to Muhlenberg Hospital, where Dr. Probasco found upon hasty examination that the leg had been fractured in at least eight places.

Birmingham is a married man and the father of a large family. He was for a long time employed as coachman by ex-Councilman W. R. Potts.

The Two Sides to The Story.

Johnnie MacDonald, better known as "Scotty," was around the city last Saturday with his head tied up in a rag, his nose cut and his clothes covered with his own blood, looking for a warrant for Tom Fayhe.

He said that he went to the latter's house this morning and demanded $1.60 back pay for "milk" delivered. Fayhe ordered him out, he says, and he "put up his fists" to protect himself. Thereupon Mr. and Mrs. Fayhe, he claims, threw him all around the house, upstairs and down, and out into the roadway, with general results in the way of wounds as above described.

Fayhe says "Scotty" insulted him in his own house besides hitting him with a brick in the forehead. He shows a cut head also, and does not deny that he gave MacDonald a good pounding, but only in self defence.

Applicants Must Have a Good Record.

By a recent order issued by Superintendent Peddle of the Central Railroad, all applicants for positions as conductors, brakemen, switchmen, etc., must give references as to character, ability, sobriety and honesty; they must state where last employed and the reasons for leaving. Blanks for that purpose will be supplied by the company, and no person will be employed until his previous record has been satisfactorily investigated.

An Interesting Case.

A case of particular interest to men who insure their lives for the benefit of their wives, was recently decided in St. Louis. The case was one in which a man had taken out such a policy. His wife died and he married again—having children by both marriages. At his death a dispute arose as to who was entitled to the insurance. The decision of the Court was that, as the insurance was taken out for the benefit of the first wife, her children alone were entitled to the money.

Unitarian Trustees.

(From the Central Times.)

The annual business meeting of the Unitarian church was held on Monday, Jan. 13. The members of the old board of trustees were re-elected. They are: Job Male, H. B. Wells, Mrs. D. W. Pond, Mrs. E. C. Leonard, C. W. Opdyke, H. B. Nichols, G. D. Patton. The success of the church during the few months of its history was commented upon by D. W. Pond, who congratulated the society upon surpassing in its prosperity even some of the missions founded in New England, the seat of Unitarianism.

Changes in Realty.

So far this year changes in real estate have been made in North Plainfield, as follows:

January 3—J. B. Mills et ux. to C. H. Mills, lot in North Plainfield, $1,300. W. J. Pearce et al. to R. H. McCulloch, lot in North Plainfield, $400.

January 6—Isaac Brokaw et ux. to W. R. Cain, property in North Plainfield, $800.

January 7—F. H. Heddeloff et ux. to N. H. Heddeloff, property in Plainfield and North Plainfield, $1,000.

January 9—D. C. Adams et ux. to Eliza Ann Parse, half interest in property in North Plainfield, $125. E. A. Parse and Carmon Parse to Mary Adams Lee, lots in North Plainfield, $1,500.

Much Depends on the Lawyers.

The Hyde-French controversy before Vice Chancellor Bird, if decided upon testimony, will probably be decided upon the testimony alone of thoroughly disinterested witnesses.

Messrs French and Tier don't want to lower the dam, else the latter would have a field of less ice to cut, and the former would not have the depth that is so convenient for filling his watering carts; while on the other side of the case, Mr. Hyde is just as personally concerned and equally as biased.

The result of the contest will be awaited with interest, as much depends entirely upon the sagacity and skill of the opposing counsel—Craig A. Marsh and Charles A. Reed.

Installation of Officers.

At a regular meeting of Plainfield Lodge No. 44, I. O. O. F., held on Monday, Jan. 13, D. D. G. M., Wm. Heiser and his assistants of Elizabeth installed the following officers:

N. G.—John Blackford.
V. G.—Joseph Blackford.

"UNCLE BILLY" MOORE'S WILL.

Made Two Days Before His Death, Bequeathing One-half of His Vast Estate to His Wife, and the Use of the Balance to His Son—A Few Minor Bequests.

"Uncle Billy" Moore, as he was familiarly called, died at his home on East Second street, early on Sunday morning, January 5, and his funeral took place from St. Mary's church on the following Tuesday. It was expected that the will of the deceased would have been read on the day of the funeral, but the sudden death of Mrs. Moore on that day prevented.

The will was drawn up on Friday, January 3, two days previous to Mr. Moore's death, and provides first for the payment of all funeral and testamentary expenses as soon as convenient. Secondly, it bequeaths $500 to the trustees of St. Mary's church; third, $400 to Mother M. Xavier, of Madison, N. J., for the Sisters of Charity; fourth, $1,000 to Bernard Michael Brady, son of Bernard Brady of this city. The remaining provisions of the will are hereunto published in full:

Fifth—I give, devise and bequeath to my wife, Catherine Moore, the undivided one-half of all the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, real and personal, and wheresoever situate, to have and to hold unto her, her heirs and assigns forever, the same to be in lieu of her dower in my estate.

Sixth—I give, devise and bequeath unto my son, John C. Moore, the use, interest and income of all the rest, residue and remainder of my estate for and during his natural life, hereby authorizing and empowering my executors, hereinafter named, and the survivors of them, to pay over to my said son the whole or any part of the principal of his said share of my estate, when in their discretion, or the discretion of the survivors of them, my said son gives satisfactory evidence that the said share of my estate so held in trust for him will not be squandered, taking his receipt for the amount or amounts so paid over to him, which shall be their or his full discharge for any payments made by my said executors or the survivors of them under or by virtue of said trust. In the event of my said son dying, leaving lawful issue, then any portion of his share not paid over to him by my said executors, shall go to such issue, share and share alike; but in case my said son shall die without lawful issue, then any portion of his said share remaining in the hands of my executors at the time of my said son's death, shall go to my said wife, Catherine Moore, to have and to hold unto her, her heirs and assigns forever.

Lastly—I hereby nominate, constitute and appoint my friends, Patrick E. Smyth of Plainfield, N. J., and Patrick Sheridan of Elizabeth, N. J., and the survivor of them, executors and executor of this, my last will and testament, and I direct that they shall not be required to give bonds for the performance of their duties as such executors, and I hereby authorize and empower my said executors and the survivors of them, to sell any and all of the real estate of which I may die seized, wheresoever situate, and to make, execute and deliver good and sufficient deeds of conveyance in the law, to the purchasers thereof, hereby revoking all other and former wills by me at any time heretofore made.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal, this third day of January, in the year eighteen hundred and ninety.

WILLIAM X MOORE.
mark.

The witnesses to the will were William H. Shaw and Nelson Runyon.

The next move in the great will contest will be for the Surrogate to issue citations for all parties interested in the case to appear and show cause why the will should not be admitted to probate.

Mr Walter L. Hetfield, of this city, and Mr. R. V. Lindabury, of Elizabeth, have been retained by Mr. John Moore, to protect his interests in the contest. Mr. Moore's ground for contesting the will is undue influence and incapacity.

PLAINFIELD'S EXPENSES FOR 1889.

A Compilation Made from the Reports of the City Auditor.

Ex-City Auditor O. B. Leonard has furnished the Central Times with the following statistics of the expenses of the city government of Plainfield for 1889, as compiled from his monthly reports:

Public lights	$ 7,881 96
Street Labor	5,311 34
Cracked Stone	4,806 92
Policemen (less railroad)	4,513 30
Salaries	3,305 96
Collector (less school's proportion)	1,221 00
Assessor (less school's proportion)	561 17
Delinquent Collector	517 18
Rents and care council room, jail, offices	1,056 17
Advertising	318 85
Printing, Stationery & Stamps	350 27
Election and Registration	724 00
Water Works, (engineer, advertising and printing)	742 73
Stone Cross Walks	387 19
Surveys and Street Tools	255 87
Miscellaneous	888 25
	$33,634 95

Other departments of the city expended the following sums:

Fire Department	$ 8,311 49
Board of Health	607 87

The expense of supporting the city poor for the year 1889 was distributed as follows:

Rent	$ 1,490 32
Board and Care	1,044 65
Provisions	974 35
Coal	84 50
Burials	69 00
Salaries	580 10
Sundries	33 05
	$4,284 97

The common council of 1889 paid in addition the following amounts for bills of 1888 or prior thereto:

General Account	$ 856 62
Fire Department	220 29
Poor Fund	253 28
	$1,330 19

From the amount spent on the streets there should be deducted the sum of $124.25, paid in by property owners on East Sixth street, for work done there by the street commissioner.

For the information of strangers it should be said that the public school department is independent of the city government, and of course its expenses are not included in the above tables.

Unity Lodge Installation.

District Deputy, P. Chapman and his assistants of Elizabeth, January 15, installed the following officers of Unity Lodge, No. 103, K. of P.:

C. C.—J. B. Stickle.
V. C.—W. Sperling.
Prelate—R. Thorn.
K. of R. S.—J. Hawkins.
M. of E.—B. Thatcher.
M. of F.—F. Humpston.
M. of A.—Chas. F. Tallman.
I. G.—A. Donavan.
O. G.—W. Titsworth.

Exactly So.

The Central Times, Plainfield's only Republican paper, says:

"President Moffett, the democratic head of the republican common council, placed his party in making up the council committees. Well, why not?

"No one can blame the democrats of the council for getting all they can out of the opportunity given them in the peculiar organization of that body."

REDUCING THE SURPLUS. DOWN THEY GO.

When in the course of Clothing events it becomes necessary to inaugurate a genuine "Mark Down" Sale—which is seldom with us—we do it, as we do everything, honestly, squarely and in good faith. As a rule, we find no necessity for what are known as "special sales," "ten per cent discounts" and the like. The air is so full of them that whatever attraction they may once have had, their day is passed. The people have come to regard them merely as advertising schemes, and such a judgment does the common sense of the public great credit. So much as a prelude to what we now have to say.

We have determined upon a special sale of what is left of our Fall and Winter stock. We desire to clear out every garment, as we have plans for another season which can best be carried out by a clean sweep and clear decks for future action. This sale will

SIMPLY KNOCK SILLY

All previous "reductions," "mark downs" and "slaughter sales," of which Newark has had so many. Remember at the start that we offer no old shop-worn stock which we would be glad to sell at any price. The goods we offer are all

THIS SEASON'S MANUFACTURE,

Of LATEST STYLES and NEWEST PATTERNS; the freshness of their appearance when you come to look at them, will bear this statement out.

WHAT WE SHALL OFFER.

Well, a little of everything—Dress Suits, Business Suits, Working Suits, Coats, Vests, Pants by the hundred, from cheap working ones to finest Cassimeres. Overcoats of all weights and many materials.

FOR BOYS AND YOUTHS,

The same general line only at less cost. If you have children, and they need clothes, and when don't they? we will give you a splendid opportunity to fit them out in our at prices which will astonish you. Splendid bargains are here for those alert enough to seize them.

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT,

We have gone over our whole stock, and a general reduction has been squarely made from our former prices, which you know to be always reasonable. No profit in this for us, but will secure your good will and future custom. Of course the best are likely to

SKIP OUT FIRST, SKIP OUT FIRST,

But the Bargains will be plentiful, and numbers of pleased Buyers will go from Our Store during the next week or so. Bear in mind this is no Auction Sale of BANKRUPT JOB LOTS!

But such goods as you are accustomed to see and buy from us. Our Own Goods and New at less than "fake" Sale Prices.

Don't Miss this Splendid Chance! Don't Lose an Opportunity by Prejudice!! Don't Measure our Announcement by other People's Tape Line. Don't Wait till the Best are Gone! Don't Get Left!

RUMORS OF THE ROAD.

New Rolling Stock for the Central—Completing the Four Tracks—Color Blindness Reduces Engineers to Yardmen.

The Central Railroad of New Jersey has ordered five new passenger engines, eleven consolidated freight engines from the Baldwin Locomotive Works; 250 box cars, 500 hopper cars of 50,000 pounds capacity and 100 of 60,000 pounds capacity, and twenty-five passenger coaches from the Pullman shops.

The Central Railroad of New Jersey is making its four-track system between Jersey City and Bound Brook as complete as possible, by replacing some of the old double-track bridges with four-track bridges. One was built at Pamrapo some time ago, and the next one will be built at the Point of Rocks. The long double-track trestlework across Newark Bay will probably not be changed.

Several months ago the engineers on every division of the Central RR. of New Jersey had their eyes tested. Half a dozen men on the Lehigh and Susquehanna division were made firemen or yardmen because they were found to be color blind. They complained to the Grievance Committee of their division of the Brotherhood. The committee asked the general superintendent to reinstate the men as engineers. The conference was amicable, and the committee was brought to see that the rule incapacitating engineers for service who were color blind was a proper one, and necessary for the protection of the company.

"Do You Think He's a Goner?"

An unusual story is told in connection with the death of the late Romeo Lascales, the Frenchman who died on Jan 13, and whose funeral took place from his late quarters on 4th street Wednesday afternoon.

When the man was at the point of death on Monday, two men were sent from a livery stable with a carriage to convey the dying man to Muhlenberg Hospital. When they arrived at the house, they found the man lying on the floor, almost destitute of clothing. The man was breathing his last, and the two liverymen refused to move him without an order from a physician. Mrs. Lascales was about the house attending to her duties, and presently she remarked to the two men: "Do you think he's a goner?" then bending over the prostrate form of her husband, she raised his head and said: "Wake up, deary, I've got a nice porter-house steak for you." The man died soon afterward.

Lascales was a peculiar individual. It is said that he was well educated and was a fluent talker on almost any subject. He was also a good penman, but in spite of all these good qualifications, only eked out a miserable existence. The dead man was buried in the Methodist cemetery.

Mr. Dunham's Roads Will Last for Twenty Years.

The Engineering and Building Record publishes in last week's issue a column article on the macadam roads now in course of construction in this county, under the new law. In view of the fact that the paper has recently published a discussion on the subject of county roads by Messrs North and Owen, the article in question is of considerable interest to its readers.

A full account of the manner of the construction of the roads is detailed in an interview with Mr. F. A. Dunham, of this city, the county engineer, by the writer. In conclusion it is stated that some roads, constructed as the roads under Mr. Dunham's direction are being made, have been in use in the country for the last fifteen or twenty years, and with the proper maintenance have given very good satisfaction.

Training in Manual Labor Proposed for the Plainfield Public Schools.

An effort is making by prominent philanthropic people of this city, to bring about the introduction of the teaching of the first principals of manual labor in the public schools of Plainfield.

To quote from an experienced authority on the subject: "It is impossible to teach all trades in school; at most only one or two could be taught, and these would probably not be the trades which all the boys would require to learn. Then it is often impossible and undesirable for a boy to decide early in his school life to what trade he will devote himself; while the amount of time which can be devoted to the subject in school is not sufficient to learn a trade thoroughly."

Yet while it is impossible and undesirable to teach trades in school, it is both possible and desirable to lay an admirable foundation for all trades by giving general manual dexterity. It is maintained—that the best and most rapid method of acquiring special manual dexterity is to acquire, first, general manual dexterity, and this can be gained in the time which can be devoted to the subject during school life; that the best time to acquire general manual dexterity is during childhood, and if a workman who has learnt one trade is obliged to leave it, it will be possible for him to acquire a second special dexterity, i. e., learn another trade, far more easily if the general dexterity of his hands has been thoroughly developed during school life.

—For a week beginning January 31, the Plainfield Camera Club will make an exhibit of the work of its members, in the Y. M. C. A., parlors. The display will excel even that of last year.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER
THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans, full weight.

The N. York Sun.
FOR
1890.

Some people agree with THE SUN'S opinions about men and things and some people don't, but everybody likes to get hold of the newspaper which is never dull and never afraid to speak its mind.

Democrats know that for twenty years THE SUN has fought in the front line for Democratic principles, never wavering or weakening in its loyalty to the true interests of the party it serves with fearless intelligence and disinterested vigor. At times opinions have differed as to the best means of accomplishing the common purpose; it is not THE SUN'S fault if it has seen further than the millions.

Eighteen hundred and ninety is the year that will probably determine the result of the Presidential election of 1892, and perhaps the fortunes of the Democracy for the rest of the century. Victory in 1892 is a duty, and the beginning of 1890 is the best time to start out in company with THE SUN.

LAST FAD OF THE DAY.

Now We Are Interested in Anything Egyptian.

Procession of Nations Across the Social Stage—We Were Japanese, Then Russian, Now We Wear Scarabs and Talk of Isis and the Pyramids.

COPYRIGHT, 1889.

I called on a little woman a few days ago who was reduced to a state bordering on despair over the gaunt and melancholy lineaments of her pocketbook, depleted first by holiday spendings and second by the purchase of an Egyptian tea gown.

"Oh, but it's a beauty," she replied, half exultant and half ashamed, "the exact model of an 'abaya.' Wait; you shall see me put it on."

My friend is a plump, brown creature with liquid black eyes, and when ten minutes later she emerged from her dressing room I might easily have mistaken her for the occupant of a wealthy harem, her soft brown silk robe with its long and flowing sleeves and yoke embroidered in silver lending itself readily to this illusion. There was a petticoat of striped Syrian silk in front color and silver and a wide sash in the same hues. The outer gown was slashed at the sides to show a brilliant lining of Egyptian red, and over the shoulders hung a veil of brown gauze also embroidered with silver. On her feet she had rose pink velvet slippers embroidered with silver and seed pearls and wore over flesh colored silk stockings, the next thing to none. My friend, I had not previously noticed, had cut her thick hair straight across her forehead, and while she chatted she bound it with a brow-pendant in gold repousse, which might have been worn 3,000 years ago by Pharaoh's daughter, and clasped about her throat a necklace of carnelian and silver seemingly of antique pattern.

"I don't show this," she said, meaning the brow pendant, "outside my own chamber; but by the time I give my 'at home' in February I expect to be able to appear in it in the drawing-room, perhaps even with my hair down in any number of little tails as Cleopatra wore hers, every plait fastened with a little tag of silver.

"Of course you know that to be Egyptian is the latest fashion."

This procession of the nations across the social stage is a very interesting comedy. It may end where we have gone the rounds of other peoples in our costuming ourselves as Fiji Islanders. Two years ago, in the heyday of the Mikado, to be Japanese was the height of our ambition. Last winter, with the advent of Verestchagin and his pictures, we furnished with [illegible] and struggled with the samovar. This winter when it reached our ears that the wife of the Chinese minister was a noble lady we began to use once in our boudoirs the musical Chinese gongs, but on second thoughts, finding that servants could not hear them, we restored the electric buttons, fell at the feet of Miss Edwards—or is it only a piece of Napoleon worship—passing from adoration of the Empire gown to remembrance of the flame of the Empress' husband—and pulled out of bureau drawers all the scarabs brought home by travelers who have wintered on the Nile.

Opera Hindu cloths and beautiful soft tints of mulberry, sienna brown, peach and sea green, with combinations of white and amber, gray and blue, gray and red are seen in the stuffs which luxurious women are beginning to invest from the Cairo bazaars. There is one woman who receives her intimates over a cup of coffee in her bedroom of a morning clad in an abaya of maize color over creamy white with brown stripes nearly a foot wide, the garment being, as madame assures her gallery, a genuine importation in which an Egyptian lady might well have sat astride her donkey, its ample folds filling with the wind, while her servant, saber in hand, marched behind.

In "A Scrap of Paper," when Mrs. Kendal as "Col. Blake" exhibits the copper shell girdle which he declares to be not the necklace of a Timbuctoo belle but her gown the ladies are properly horrified, but a very tall young woman, whose figure is of the [illegible] order, wore at a recent "at home" a hip girdle of similar design made of a deep fringe of a dark soft leather, ornamented with beads and purchased by her brother from a blue-black Nubian woman below the First Cataract, and with any notion of its adorning a modern Yankee girl's person, though it fulfils that office not ineffectively.

But Egyptian whims in dress are the least important step of the new departure. It is in jewelry and decoration that the fever works strongly, more especially since the craze being in its infancy and confined as yet to the elect, the bronze and porcelain gods, the crocodile paperweights, the strange bird shaped bottles, antiques, imitations of antiques and frank modern creations are exhibited to admiring groups when the tea is hot at 5 in the afternoon only on the bric-a-brac tables of those whose friends have gazed on the sphynx and the pyramids. The cream will be off by the time these things find their way into the stores.

One of the first women in the city to yield to Egyptian seductions was a lady who is the very opposite of a traveler, being able to count on the fingers of one hand the times she has been off Manhattan Island. Once in her youth she spent a week in Buffalo and once again she was of a party that visited Greenwood; but, according to her own statement, she has never climbed the stairs of the elevated railroads, never crossed the bridge and views the world chiefly from the windows of her carriage as it rolls through the quieter park driveways. Yet this winter when the first touches of the new fashion made themselves felt it was to this stay-at-home that the prettiest of her nieces applied for a handful of scarabs to make herself a bracelet; and by dint of kissings and coaxings obtained a quantity of these sacred beetles carved in ancient sycamore wood which she forthwith exhibited strung on [illegible] and fastened with clasps of gold. The story of the gift becoming common property where all gossip is exchanged this season at an evening, not an afternoon, tea, it has since been a favorite diversion to inspect the really remarkable collection of this recluse Egyptologist, whom by a gift of especially large and fragrant roses—her only other hobby—the younger people can secure an invitation.

[illegible] is very slender of figure, white haired and wears the trimmest and primmest of black gowns, affording in these particulars a curious contrast to her Egyptian room, which is the delight of her heart and, if the fashion holds, very likely the prototype of as many others as there were Russian boudoirs twelve months ago. It is not purely Egyptian, though as picturesque a bit as there is in New York City, tapestried with prayer-carpets and shaggy rugs from Laodicea and Syrian and Algerian hangings. On the floor is a striped carpet from Tunis, and the divans are covered with rich-hued Smyrna fabrics. There is a table, the spread of which is a piece of fine old embroidery and a quaint cabinet of ebony inlaid with mother of pearl, where vases in silver and alabaster, sacred beetles of stone adorned with the symbolic eye, small silver weapons, etc., divide honors with an Egyptian lady's dressing case—an odd-looking cushion holding [illegible] comb, bodkins, kohl bottles and a mirror.

Here sits the queer, Puritanic little collector before a coffee service in Egyptian pottery, and, though the fashion fever is waning since the [illegible] killed those we have lately taught to bloom in a Jersey meadow, fresh flowers fill a bottle of the same [illegible] shape that one may see pictured in the festival scenes at Thebes as the cups are passed to [illegible]. If you are touched, she may ask you to try your hand on a two-stringed Egyptian violin.

The straightest road to the heart of a fair maiden just at present is to give her a scarab set in a ring. If it be engraved on a gem this little symbol of the immortality of the soul can be [illegible] will never be [illegible] goddesses and of more than doubtful authenticity [illegible]. If it be large enough [illegible] of her glove [illegible] then covered with hieroglyphic writing or mount it as a pendant or watch charm.

We like the Japanesque better than the Japanese, and where one sees most evidences of the Egyptian cult is in the things which are after, and sometimes a long distance after, the Egyptian. I saw yesterday a screen which was said to be going into the newly furnished house of Mrs. Whitney. It was inlaid, according to the old Egyptian style, in cedar, ebony and ivory, and was to be flanked on either side by a light and graceful tripod to hold flowers.

The daughter of Erastus Wiman, who was married a few weeks ago, counted among her wedding gifts one of the finest of the new silver clocks, the design of which was borrowed from the old sculptures of the artists of the Pharaohs. On either side of the dial were columns with lotus bud capitals, and in place of candelabra were two sphinxes couchant with dark silver bodies and human heads.

Another clock which I saw just after Christmas was of bright bronze in the shape of the sacred boat of the Egyptians, the prow being richly carved and decorated with the black face instead of the eye, symbol of day. A third of these recent efforts of the silversmith's art is held, I believe, by a New York lady for an association of women to present to Mrs. Talmage, and is the most elaborate I have seen. Nut, an Egyptian goddess represented as a woman curved so as to touch the ground with her fingers and standing for the vault of heaven, bends over the clock face from behind, while Isis, a woman crowned with the sun disk and Horus, the child, support it on either side.

In a good many drawing rooms and in the bric-a-brac stores you will find queer vases in the shape of huge blue porcelain frogs, double-headed geese, etc., which stand for ancient Egyptian deities and are reproduced to please an undevout modern eye. The ibis, the asp, pomegranates and Nile rushes begin to be used as in decorative work at every turn. Screens of peacock feathers have come in again. Next summer we may look to see the lotus lily the favorite flower, if indeed the force of the Egyptian fever be not spent by that time.

The Philippian [illegible]—"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and Thou Shalt Be Saved"—Where the Text Should Be Applied—Who Is Christ?

LONDON, Jan. 19.—The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., of Brooklyn, preached in this city today, taking for his text Acts xvi, 31: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." He said:

Jails are dark, dull, damp, loathsome places even now; but they were worse in the apostolic times. I imagine today we are standing in the Philippian dungeon. Do you not feel the chill? Do you not hear the groans of those incarcerated ones who for ten years have not seen the sunlight, and a deep sigh of women who remember their fathers' homes and [illegible]. Listen again. It is the cough of the consumptive, or the struggle of one in the nightmare of a great horror. You listen again, and hear a culprit, his chains rattling as he rolls over in his dreams, and you say: "God pity the prisoner." But there is another sound in that prison. It is a song of joy and gladness. What a place to sing in! The music comes winding through the corridors of the prison, and in all the dark wards the strain is heard: "What's that? What's that?" It is the song of Paul and Silas. They cannot sleep. They have been whipped, very badly whipped. The long gashes on their backs are bleeding yet. They lie flat on the cold ground, their feet fast in wooden sockets, and of course they cannot sleep. But they can sing. Jailer, what are you doing with these people? Why have they been put in here? Oh, they have been trying to make the world better. Is that all? That is all. A pit for Joseph. A lion's den for Daniel. A blazing furnace for Shadrach. Clubs for John Wesley. An anathema for Philip Melanchthon. A dungeon for Paul and Silas. [illegible] "What shall I do? What shall I do?" [illegible] "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."

[illegible] we have seen fifty earthquakes. Here is a man who has been building up a large fortune. His bid on the money market was felt in all the cities. He thinks he has got beyond all annoying rivalries in trade, and he says to himself: "Now I am free and safe from all possible perturbation." But a national panic strikes the foundations of the commercial world, and crash! goes all that magnificent business establishment. He is a man who has built up a very beautiful home. His daughters have just come home from the seminary with diplomas of graduation. His sons have started in life, honest, temperate and pure. When the evening lights are struck, there is a happy and an unbroken family circle. But there has been an accident down at the beach. The young man ventured too far out in the surf. The telegraph hurled the terror up to the city. An earthquake struck under the foundations of that beautiful home. The piano closed; the curtains dropped; the laughter hushed. Crash! go all those domestic hopes, and prospects, and expectations. So, my friends, we have all felt the shaking down of some great trouble, and there was a time when we were as much excited as this man of the text, and we cried out as he did: "What shall I do? What shall I do?" The same reply that the apostle made to him is appropriate to us: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." There are some documents of so little importance that you do not care to put any more than your last name under them, or even your initials; but there are some documents of such great importance that you write out your full name. So the Saviour in some parts of the Bible is called "Lord," and in other parts of the Bible he is called "Jesus," and in other parts of the Bible he is called "Christ," but that there might be no mistake about this passage all three names come in together—"the Lord Jesus Christ." Now, who is this being that you want me to trust in and believe in? Men sometimes come to me with credentials and certificates of good character, but I cannot trust them. There is some dishonesty in their looks that makes me know I shall be cheated if I confide in them. You cannot put your heart's confidence in a man until you know what stuff he is made of, and am I unreasonable this morning when I stop to ask you who this is that you want me to trust in? No man would think of venturing his life on a vessel going out to sea, that had never been inspected. No, you must have the certificate hung amidships, telling how many tons it carries, and how long ago it was built, and who built it, and all about it. And you cannot expect me to risk the cargo of my immortal interests on board any craft till you tell me what it is made of, and where it was made, and what it is. When, then, I ask you who this is you want me to trust in, you tell me he was a very attractive person. The contemporary writers describe him, and they give the color of his eyes, and the color of his hair, and they describe his whole appearance as being resplendent. Christ did not tell the children to come to him. "Suffer little children to come unto me," was not spoken to the children; it was spoken to the Pharisees. The children had come without any invitation. No sooner did Jesus appear than the little ones climbed from their mothers' arms, an avalanche of beauty and love, into his lap. "Suffer little children to come unto me." That was addressed to the Pharisees; not to the children. Christ did not ask John to put his head down on his bosom; John could not help but put his head there. Such eyes, such cheeks, such a chin, such hair, such physical condition and appearance—why, it must have been completely captivating and winsome. I suppose a look at him was just to love him. O! how attractive his manner. Why, when they saw Christ coming along the street, they ran into their houses, and they wrapped up their invalids as quick as they could and brought them out that he might look at them. O! there was something so pleasant, so inviting, so cheering in everything he did, in his very look! When these sick ones were brought out did he say: "Take away these sores; do not trouble me with these leprosies?" No, no; there was a kind look; there was a gentle word; there was a healing touch. They could not keep away from him.

A LOVING CHRIST.

In addition to this softness of character, there was a fiery momentum. How the old hypocrites trembled before him. How the kings of the earth turned pale. Here is a plain man with a few sailors at his back, coming off the sea of Galilee, going up to the palace of the Caesars, making that palace quake to the foundations, and uttering a word of mercy and kindness which throbs through all the earth, and through all the heavens, and through all the ages! O! he was a loving Christ. But it was not effeminacy, or insipidity of character; it was accompanied with majesty, infinite and omnipotent. Lest the world should not realize his earnestness, this Christ mounts the cross. You say: "If Christ has to die, why not let him take some deadly potion and lie on a couch in some bright and beautiful home? If he must die, let him expire amid all kindly attentions." No, the world must hear the hammers on the heads of the spikes. The world must listen to the death rattle of the sufferer. The world must feel his warm blood dropping on each cheek, while it looks up into the face of his anguish. And so the cross must be lifted, and the hole is dug on the top of Calvary. It must be dug three feet deep, and then the cross is laid on the ground, and the sufferer is stretched upon it, and the nails are pounded through nerve and muscle and bone, through the right hand, through the left hand, and then they shake his right hand to see if it is fast, and they shake his left foot to see if it is fast, and then they heave up the wood, half a dozen shoulders under the weight, and they put the end of the cross to the mouth of the hole, and they plunge it in, all the weight of his body coming down for the first time on the spikes, and while some hold the cross upright others throw in the dirt and trample it down, and trample it hard. Oh, plant that tree well and thoroughly, for it is to bear fruit such as no other tree ever bore! Why did Christ endure it? He could have taken those rocks, and with them crushed his crucifiers. He could have reached up and grasped the sword of the Omnipotent God, and with one clean cut have tumbled them into perdition. But no; he was to die, he must die. His life for my life. His life for your life. In one of the European cities a young man died on the scaffold for the crime of murder. Some time after, the mother of this young man was dying, and the priest came in, and she made confession to the priest that she was the murderer and not her son; in a moment of anger she had struck her husband a blow that slew him. The son came suddenly into the room, and was washing away the wounds and trying to resuscitate his father, when some one looked through the window and saw him, and supposed him to be the criminal. That young man died for his own mother. You say: "It was wonderful that he never exposed her." But I tell you of a greater thing. Christ, the Son of God, died not for his mother, not for his father, but for his sworn enemies. O, such a Christ as that—so loving, so self-sacrificing—can you not trust him?

HOW TO TRUST HIM.

I think there are many under the spirit of God who are saying: "I will trust Him if you will only tell me how," and the great question asked by thousands in this assemblage is: "How? how?" And while I answer your question I look up and utter the prayer which Rowland Hill so often uttered in the midst of his sermons: "Master, help!" How are you to trust in Christ? Just as you trust any one. You trust your partner in business with important things. If a commercial house gives you a note payable three months hence, you expect the payment of that note at the end of three months. You have perfect confidence in their word and in their ability. You go home today. You expect there will be food on the table. You have confidence in that. Now, I ask you to have the same confidence in the Lord Jesus Christ. He says: "You believe; I take away your sins," and they are all taken away. [illegible] you are saved. Why, Christ is only waiting to get from you what you give to [illegible] Christ [illegible] if they have done more than Christ ever did, [illegible]

AT HALFWAY. [illegible]

[illegible] "Yes." You jump and are saved. He stands there and dies. Now, you believe that Capt. [illegible] sacrificed himself for his passengers, but you believe it with love, with tears, with hot and long continued exclamation; with grief at his loss, and with joy at your deliverance. That is saving faith. In other words, what you believe with all the heart, and believe in regard to yourself. On this hinge turns my sermon; aye, the salvation of your immortal soul. You often go across bridges you know nothing about. You do not know who built the bridge, you do not know what material it is made of; but you come to it, and walk over it, and ask no questions. And here is an arched bridge thrown from the "Rock of Ages," and built by the Architect of the whole universe, spanning the dark gulf between sin and righteousness, and all God asks you is to walk across it; and you start, and you come to it, and you stop, and you go a little way on and you stop, and you fall back, and you experiment. You say: "How do I know that bridge will hold me?" instead of marching on with firm step, asking no questions, but feeling that the strength of the eternal God is under you. Oh, was there ever a prize offered so cheap as pardon and heaven are offered to you? For how much? A million dollars? It is certainly worth more than that. But cheaper than that you can have it. Ten thousand dollars? Less than that. Five thousand dollars? Less than that. One dollar? Less than that. One farthing? Less than that. "Without money and without price." No money to pay. No journey to take. No penance to suffer. Only just one decisive action of the soul, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." Shall I try to tell you what it is to be saved? I cannot tell you. No man, no angel, can tell you. But I can hint at it. For my text brings me up to this point, "Thou shalt be saved." It means a happy life here, and a peaceful death and a blissful eternity. It is a grand thing to go to sleep at night, and to get up in the morning, and to do business all day feeling that all is right between my heart and God. No accident, no sickness, no persecution, no peril, no sword can do me any permanent damage. I am a forgiven child of God, and he is bound to see me through. He has sworn he will see me through. The mountains may depart, the earth may burn, the light of the stars may be blown out by the blast of the judgment hurricane; but life and death, things present and things to come, are mine. Yea, further than that—it means a peaceful death.

DEATH.

Mrs. Hemans, Mrs. Sigourney, Dr. Young and almost all the poets have said handsome things about death. There is nothing beautiful about it. When we stand by the white and rigid features of those whom we love, and they give no answering pressure of the hand and no returning kiss of the lip, we do not want anybody poetizing around about us. Death is loathsomeness and midnight and the wringing of the heart until the tendrils snap and curl in the torture unless Christ be with us. I confess to you to an infinite fear, a consuming horror, of death unless Christ shall be with me. I would rather go down into a cave of wild beasts or a jungle of reptiles than into the grave unless Christ goes with me. Will you tell me that I am to be carried out from my bright home and put away in the darkness? I cannot bear darkness. At the first coming of the evening I must have the gas lit, and the further on in life I get the more I like to have my friends around about me. And am I to be put off for thousands of years in a dark place, with no one to speak to? When the holidays come and the gifts are distributed, shall I add no joy to the "Merry Christmas" or the "Happy New Year"? Ah, do not point down to the hole in the ground, the grave, and call it a beautiful place; unless there be some supernatural illumination, I shudder back from it. My whole nature revolts at it. But now this glorious lamp is lifted above the grave and all the darkness is gone and the way is clear. I look into it now without a single shudder. Now my anxiety is not about death; my anxiety is that I may live aright, for I know that if my life is conformed to [illegible] which I beg for your eternal salvation today are folded over the still heart, that then I shall only begin to live. What power is there in anything to chill me in the last hour, if Christ wraps around me the skirt of his own garment? What darkness can fall upon my eyelids then, amid the heavenly daybreak? O death, I will not fear thee then. Back to thy cavern of darkness, thou robber of all the earth. Fly, thou despoiler of families. With this battle-ax I hew thee in twain from helmet to sandal, the voice of Christ sounding all over the earth and through the heavens: "O death, I will be thy plague. O grave, I will be thy destruction."

JESUS THE CHIEF BLOOM OF HEAVEN.

To be saved is to wake up in the presence of Christ. You know when Jesus was upon earth how happy he made every house he went into, and when he brings us up to his house how great our glee. His voice has more music in it than is to be heard in all the oratorios of eternity. Talk not about banks dashed with efflorescence. Jesus is the chief bloom of heaven. We shall see the very face that beamed sympathy in Bethany, and take the very hand that dropped its blood from the short beam of the cross. O, I want to stand in eternity with him. Toward that harbor I steer. Toward that goal I run. I shall be satisfied when I awake in his likeness. Oh, broken hearted men and women, how sweet it will be in that good land to pour all your hardships and bereavements and losses into the loving ear of Christ, and then have him explain why it was best for you to be sick, and why it was best for you to be widowed, and why it was best for you to be persecuted, and why it was best for you to be tried, and have him point to an elevation proportionate to your disquietude here, saying: "You suffered with me on earth, come up now and be glorified with me in heaven."

Some one went into a house where there had been a good deal of trouble and said to the woman there: "You seem to be lonely." "Yes," she said, "I am lonely." "How many in the family?" "Only myself." "Have you had any children?" "I had seven children." "Where are they?" "Gone." "All gone?" "All." "All dead?" "All." Then she breathed a long sigh into the loneliness and said: "Oh, sir, I have been a good mother to the grave." And so there are hearts here that are utterly broken down by the bereavements of life. I point you today to the eternal balm of heaven. Are there any here that I am missing this morning? O, you poor waiting soul! your heart's sorrow poured in no human ear, lonely and sad! how glad you will be when Christ shall disband all your sorrows and crown you queen unto God and the Lamb forever! O, aged men and women, fed by his love and warmed by his grace for three score years and ten, will not your decrepitude change for the leap of a hart when you come to look face to face upon him whom, having not seen, you loved? O, that will be the Good Shepherd, not out in the night and watching to keep off the wolves, but with the lambs reclining on the sun lit hill. That will be the Captain of our salvation, not amid the roar, and crash, and boom of battle, but amid his disbanded troops keeping victorious festivity. That will be the Bridegroom of the Church coming from afar, the bride leaning upon his arm while he looks down into her face and says: "Behold, thou art fair, my love! Behold, thou art fair!"

Saved by His Enemy.

A curious incident occurred at the well known Parisian Cafe de la Paix a day or two ago. A Republican deputy, M. Jules Roche, while breakfasting, was on the point of being choked by a mouthful of bread, and would probably have succumbed had not his critical condition been noticed by M. de Susini, the fiery Boulangist, and one of M. Roche's most pronounced political enemies, who was having his dejeuner at a neighboring table. M. de Susini, who happens to be a doctor, forgetting all about political differences, hastened to assist the choking deputy, and, having saved him from certain suffocation, escorted him to the chamber. Even French political rivals, it would seem, are not so bitterly irreconcilable as is often made out.—London Figaro.

The wife cooks for both, but they eat their meals at separate tables.

THE Attleboro Sun records the following incident: "A good story is going the rounds about a certain married man on Pleasant street. He got up the other morning in a terrible hurry, rushed around frantically, built a fire, decided that he wouldn't have time to wait for breakfast, had his wife make him a cup of coffee—all he could take time for—swallowed the coffee, put on his overcoat, said 'good morning' to his wife, looked at the clock, found it was 2:30 a. m., and went back to bed.

AT Atlanta, Ga., recently two well-dressed men stopped on the corner of Broad and Marietta streets and began pointing upward, one of them often pointing to a telephone wire with his cane, as if trying to make his companion see something he was looking at. The other shaded his eyes with his hands, but shook his head, at which the first man mentioned caught him by the arm and led him backward a few steps. They kept up their antics until a big crowd collected. Finally, when asked they said: "We were just experimenting to see how many gaping idiots we could collect in ten minutes."

ADVERSITY often stiffens up the moral character. The angleworm never knows what it is to have any backbone at all till he swallows the fish-hook.

IF you have talents, industry will improve them; if moderate abilities, industry will supply the deficiencies. Nothing is denied to well-directed labor; nothing is ever to be obtained without it.

OUR times of greatest pleasure are when we have won some higher peak of difficulty, trodden under foot some evil, and felt day by day so sure a growth of moral strength within us that we can not conceive of an end of growth.

SHOES IN HISTORY.

THE account of Moses and the burning bush gives an antiquity of over three thousand years to the shoe.

SHOES, among the ancient Hebrews, were made of leather, rush or wool, those of soldiers being of brass or iron, with thongs.

SHOES among the Greeks were made so high as to reach generally to the middle of the leg, and were often of gold and silk and other precious stuff.

TIMES have changed since Sir Douglas Forsyth, the British envoy, was obliged to take off his boots before being presented to the King of Burmah.

IN the time of Chaucer the upper part of the long-toed shoes were cut to imitate a church window. Signifying that the feet were on the path of righteousness.

THE most gorgeous pair of shoes in history were those worn by Sir Walter Raleigh. They were covered with precious stones, and were worth about $50,-000 of our money.

A LEGEND exists that in 1361 a Chinese embassy of ten nobles and one thousand horsemen was put to death by order of the King of Siam, because they insisted on appearing in the royal presence with their shoes on.

NEWSPAPER NONSENSE.

IT is now admitted by electricians that a dead wire is full of life and likewise of death.

AN Omaha man has an egg he claims he has kept for ten years. It must be a decade egg, of course.

A PHILADELPHIAN who found part of a horseshoe in a New York sausage has had it gilded to hang up for luck.

AN autopsy on a man who recently died at Madison, Wis., revealed five jack-knives in his stomach. Western epicureanism goes to peculiar extremes.

ONE of the health commissioners of New York says the talk about the European influenza becoming epidemic here "is all blow." That's what it will be, if the court nose itself.

A GEORGIA sheriff erroneously shot an innocent man lately at Madison. The local newspapers spoke of him as a courteous gentleman, who was willing to apologize to the widow.

A MAN who didn't care two shakes of a lamb's tail about the newspapers rode fourteen miles through a heavy snow-storm to get a copy of a weekly that spoke of him as a "prominent citizen."

A YANKEE scientist has invented an electrical switch. The old-time vigorous patter of the soft-soled maternal slipper will still be heard in the land, though; for the small boy we have with us forever.

A MARION (O.) jeweler lately completed a medal which is to be given to the farmer who had the following sign posted on his farm regarding hunting: "Hunt all you please, and when the bell rings come in to dinner."

A PRIVATE telephone between his office and his home was recently put up by a merchant living in Wheeling. When his daughter put her ear to it the other day she received a terrible shock. Not an electric shock, however. She simply heard her papa swear at the office boy.

THE story is an old one of the party of tired travelers who entered a house decorated by a peculiar sign, and demanded oysters. "This is not a restaurant," said the courteous gentleman who met them; "I am an oculist." "Isn't that an oyster hung outside the door?" asked one. "No, gentlemen, it is an eye."

INDUSTRIAL IMPORT.

THE Bell Telephone Company in the past year has put out 22,000 phones.

METHYLIC alcohol is being produced in large quantities at Bay City, Mich., by utilization of the sawdust of the lumber mills.

ACCORDING to good authority the amount of English gold invested in American securities within the past two years is fully $100,000,000.

THE Germans are our largest customers for pig-iron, and they are also buying in this country considerable quantities of steel, mill work and machinery.

SINCE 1870 the cigar industry has steadily increased at Key West, until now the town boasts of 150 cigar manufactories, employing 9,000 Cubans and Americans, which last year shipped 90,000,000 cigars.

THERE was at the Paris Exposition a coal-digger which is worked by an electric motor. By its aid a man and a helper can undercut 110 tons of coal in ten hours in a seam six feet thick, and the power required for this at the pit-head is a little over two and a half horse power.

THE recent discovery by a New England chemist of a cheap method of dissolving zinc by combining it with hydrogen is regarded as a most valuable one. The product is a solution called zinc-water, and has the property of making wood to which it has been applied absolutely fire-proof and at a very low cost.

SACCHARINE enough to take the place of five thousand tons of beet-sugar has now been made in Germany. Though not a food and condemned as injurious by eminent medical men, it is used in the preparation of fruits and the production of sweet liquors. France, Italy and Portugal already propose imposing a tax on it.

IT has been demonstrated that the Alabama iron ores can be converted into steel by the open hearth method. The ores are remarkably free from sulphur, leaving only silicon to deal with. The English method is to run the metal into chilled molds and mix with manganese. The latter can be procured in large quantities in the Ozark Mountains in Arkansas.

VARIED AND INTERESTING.

EDWARD WILLIAM GROSSE and Edgar William Nye would scarcely be identified by their real names.

A GIRL will naturally express a candied opinion of the young man who is constantly bringing her confectionery.

THE most loving husbands and wives do not always agree, and the visitor who takes sides with either commits an indiscretion.

AN eminent artist recently painted a snow-storm so naturally that he caught a bad cold by sitting near it with his coat off.

IT has been justly noticed that the tribute paid by Dr. Mackenzie to his late patient, Emperor Frederick, recalls that given to General Grant by his physicians. Under great and protracted suffering both were alike patient, uncomplaining and considerate of those about them. The man is great indeed who remains heroic upon his death-bed.

GOSPATIN APOSTOLOFF, a young Cossack engineer, has designed a bateau plongeur, which will dive into the Atlantic off the English coast and come up in New York harbor twenty-six hours later. It is the old story of being shaped like a fish, with a spiral ridge on the outside running around it twice, which in some way or other will be made to revolve.

MISCELLANEOUS.

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT ?

A line may be very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite line to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Grafton, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan, and the journey to the Pacific coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. Write to F. I. WHITNEY, G. P. & T. A., St. Paul, Minn., for maps, books and guides. If you want a free farm in a lovely land, write for the "Great Reservation;" read it and resolve to accept the golden chance.

The Golden Days.

Something of Eden's golden hour remains
Our earth in bloom. 'Tis found in golden days
When beauty adds to light a softened haze;
Revealing all our universe contains.
As tho' it were a bride whose blushing gains
A deeper charm because her blush betrays
To Love, love's secret; while her actions [illegible]
Beguiling art, and win love's sweetest strains.
But holy is this golden hour when found
In human lives, made beautiful by years
Of faithful love. When two true hearts are bound,
Agree, with service each to each endears.
For such may golden bells of earth resound
And Heaven's smile, at last, replace earth's tears.
—Mary Mathews Barnes, in Independent.

Ingratitude.

I've praised thee, love, in all the ways I know,
I've called thee sweeter than the sweetest song,
I've said all graces unto thee belong,
And yet no trace of passion dost thou show;
Ah me! dear maid, love's labor doth not flow
Within thy sluggish veins—while on me throng
Most ardent fancies, earnest, deep and strong,
Thou e'er art cold and dost indifferent grow.
Considering how for months I've bought for thee
Fans, ice-cream, oysters, bon-bons by the ton,
Quaint bric-a-brac, and strings of shiny pearls,
'Tis hard to find thee frowning thus on me,
When with such toil I'm sure I might have won
The sweet affections of a dozen girls!
—Nathan M. Levy, in Munsey's Weekly.

The Child Musician.

He had played for his Lordship's levee,
He had played for her Ladyship's whim,
Till the poor little head was weary,
And the poor little brain would swim.

And the face grew peaked and eerie,
And the large eyes strange and bright,
And they said—too late—"He is weary,
He shall rest for at least to-night!"

But at dawn when the birds were waking,
As they watched in the silent room,
With the sound of a strained cord breaking
A something snapped in the gloom.

'Twas a string of his violincello,
And they heard him stir in his bed;
"Make room for a tired little fellow,
Kind God!" was the last he said.
—Austin Dobson.

The Lawyer and the Burglar.

Abou Ben Legis, may his tribe decrease!—
Awoke one night from a sweet dream of fees
And saw, within the precincts of his room,
Cautiously groping in the midnight gloom,
A burglar, helping himself to Abou's gold.
Defending rogues had made Ben Legis bold,
So, quiet-like, he to the rascal spoke:
"My precious friend, aren't you the self-same bloke
I saved from sentence of ten years or so
For such a job as this?" "I am the same,"
Replied the rogue. "You alibied from blame
For the performance of that little job."
"And now, ungratefully, you come to rob
Your benefactor!" angry Abou cried.
"Business is business!" the cool scamp replied;
"With cash I bought the good defense you made,
And now must rob to get back what I paid!"
"But now the law shall hold you in its toils;
To prison you'll go!" "Not so; for now my spoils
Amply will me enable to employ
A better lawyer! So, good-by, old boy!
Will see you later!" Here the rogue withdrew,
And Ben remarked, as he disappeared from view:
"This reclamation plainly doth record
That legal virtue is its own reward!"
—Chicago Tribune.

A Newspaper Clipping.

'Twas a clipping from the paper
Telling of some funny caper
On the stage;
So I read it every letter,
Saying that I'd seen no better
For an age.

Then I turned the clipping over
With no purpose to discover
What was there,
But in smiling contemplation
Of the [illegible],
Rich and rare.

As I looked I know I started
And the smile from lips departed,
For I saw,
Printed there in uncut column,
Notices of death, sad, solemn,
Full of awe.

So, I thought, come grief and pleasure,
Meted out with equal measure;
You may laugh,
For some other one is wailing,
For the tear is smiles entailing
Other half.
—Columbus Dispatch.

Marriage as a Success.

'Tis silly to wed for affection, they say,
And wicked to marry for gain;
So at first sight there seems to be no other way
Than single through life to remain.

But I've hit on a plan that is wise and complete,
Combining affection and sense;
'Tis to wed, if she'll have you, some demoiselle sweet
Who lives on the fruit of her rents.
—George Horton, in Texas Siftings.

Heirs of Time.

From street and square, from hill and glen
Of this vast world beyond my door
I hear the tread of marching men,
The patient armies of the poor.

The halo of the city's lamps
Hangs, a vast torchlight, in the air;
I watch it through the evening damps;
The masters of the world are there.

Not ermine-clad or clothed in state,
Their title-deeds not yet made plain;
But waking early, toiling late,
The heirs of all the earth remain.

Some day, by laws as fixed and fair
As guide the planets in their sweep,
The children of each outcast heir
The harvest-fruits of time shall reap.

The peasant brain shall yet be wise,
The untamed pulse grow calm and still;
The blind shall see, the lowly rise,
And work in peace Time's wondrous will.

Some day, without a trumpet's call,
This news will o'er the world be blown:
"This heritage come back to all!
The myriad monarchs take their own!"
—T. W. Higginson, in the Nationalist.

The Other Fellow.

How seldom do our dreams come true!
The very thing our fancy lets
Us hope in time will be our own
Some other fellow always gets.

We fall in love; the mind's diseased,
The brain is in a foolish whirl;
And while we worship from afar
Some other fellow gets the girl.

We try for wealth—deluded fools!—
As men from Adam's time have done;
And while we toil and strive and fret,
Some other fellow yanks the bun.

We yearn for fame, and struggle hard
To win some measure of renown,
And find that to posterity
Some other fellow's name goes down.

Ah! what a torment life would be
If we were of the hope bereft
That in some fairer world than this
The other fellow would get left.
—Somerville Journal.

PEOPLE WIDELY KNOWN.

TALLEYRAND laid great stress on a knowledge of whist as indispensable to a happy old age.

MYRON W. WHITNEY, the popular Boston basso, is proud of the fact that he was a bricklayer for seven years of his life.

A FINE monument has been placed above the grave of the late Oliver Ditson, the music publisher. It consists of Ball's statue of St. John, on a suitable pedestal.

MRS. MORTON, the wife of the Vice-President, was Miss Anna Livingston Street before her marriage, and is a descendant of Lord Stirling, of revolutionary fame.

SPURGEON, the great London preacher, has a correspondence that averages five hundred letters a day. He is obliged to employ three secretaries to answer the communications that come to him from all parts of the world.

WHEN Wilkie Collins was presented to President Grant two gentlemen made a bet that Grant never read one of Collins' works. As soon as the President met the novelist he told him he had read all of his works and thought that "No Name" was the best.

MR. PIERRE LORILLARD has invented a floating stable, which follows his yacht through waters. A coach and coach-horses, besides horses for cross-country riding and a pack of hounds are accommodated on this raft, and when the owner gets tired of sailing he anchors his stable, mounts his horse, and away he goes.

MRS. GLADSTONE takes a deep interest in politics. She concludes a recent letter to a friend as follows: "I must thank you in both our names, for it is only just that we should give you a share in the glorious victory. It seems to us significant, and, looking at the facts, we see in it the voice of the people; but we must persevere."

EMILE ZOLA, who has become fabulously wealthy for an author, even in these flush days of authorship, was extremely poor upon starting out and before he secured a place in Hachette's book concern; while writing his first romances he was often reduced to bread and water, and playfully remarks that he was compelled "to play Arab," or to stay in bed night and day because he had no clothes.

HENRY LABOUCHERE, editor of the London Truth and M. P. for Southampton, was for years a rover in the wilds of the far West. Finally he settled down and, through family interest, managed to secure an attacheship to the British legation at Washington, but at the end of two years he was dismissed for enlisting American citizens for the Crimean war at the same time with Crampton, the British Minister. He then turned his attention to journalism, and after serving on the editorial staff of several London papers he started his own successful journal, which now yields him an income of upward of $60,000 per annum.

ROSA BONHEUR, the great animal painter, wears the cross of the Legion of Honor, and M. Rene Peyrol, her brother-in-law, now tells us how the distinction was gained. The Empress asked for it for the artist, but the request could not be granted. The cross had never been given to a woman, and the ministers protested against a precedent. But the Empress bided her time till the following year, when, during the absence of the Emperor in Algeria, she acted as regent. One morning a servant hurriedly entered Rosa Bonheur's studio with the announcement that the Empress was below. In another minute she was in the studio borrowing a pin from one of her ladies. The Empress then kissed the artist, who, glancing down, saw the cross of the Legion of Honneur pinned on her breast.

A FORTUNE IN A BALL.

Mrs. Bradley-Martin's Heroic Effort to Capture Society.

Race for the Leadership in New York—A Programme of Unparalleled Splendor and Extravagance—Diamond-studded Favors for the German.

COPYRIGHT 1890.

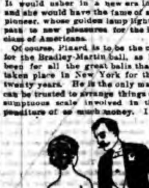
SOCIETY, for the second time this season, is enjoying a shock that has set its nerves a tingling. It likes to be tingled; for if there is anything that society dreads it is apathy. It was pleasantly electrified when Ward McAllister suggested that it should open wide its golden gates and let in a flood of outsiders—"rather good people, you know"—to dance with the elect at the New Year's ball. Throwing the tradition of caste to the winds, it danced its fill and it rather liked it, too.

But now it has a sensation to talk about that is worth a dozen New Year's balls rolled into one. One of its most exclusive members has tempted it with a promise of a ball such as, in its most imaginative moments, it never dreamed of. Mrs. Bradley-Martin, the wife of a millionaire with an income of something approaching $400,000 a year, has resolved to spend $50,000 on a single ball that will for size, magnificence and sheer lavishness of outlay, outshine anything ever heard of in the line of private entertainments on this side of the Atlantic.

Of course, after the first paroxysm of pleasure at the news the sensation was one of curiosity to know just what sort of a ball Mrs. Martin proposed to give that was to cost a modest fortune. Pretty soon it leaked out that the affair was part of a settled programme outlined by that lady, who has made up her mind to become famous in a single season. There are a number of costly entertainments planned for the coming months, but none it is safe to assert, that will cost within one-fifth of this affair. It even took McAllister's breath away when he heard of it; although his equanimity was somewhat restored when informed that he would be invited to officiate as generalissimo. There was no question of the blue-blooded qualities of the Bradley-Martins. For several years the family has lived abroad, and people in New York recall the recent marriage of Sherman Bradley, the son, to a London actress half a dozen years his senior.

Mrs. Bradley-Martin is now wild to go to the front. Insingnalising her re-entree in New York society by a $50,000 ball, she shrewdly calculated that it would furnish the sensation of the season. Coming on the heels of the McAllister ball it would fairly eclipse that ponderous and somewhat mixed event, and would hardly be equalled anywhere. It would usher in a new era in balls, and she would have the fame of a social pioneer, whose golden lamp lighted the path to new pleasures for the leisure class of Americans.

Of course, Pinard is to be the caterer for the Bradley-Martin ball, as he has been for all the great balls that have taken place in New York for the last twenty years. He is the only man who can be trusted to arrange things on the sumptuous scale involved in the expenditure of so much money. I had a chat with Mr. Pinard yesterday about it, being curious to know just how so much money could be spent upon a single ball without being wasted.

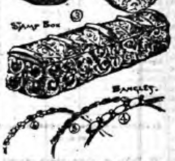


"MAY I HAVE THE PLEASURE?"

"It is quite possible to spend $50,000, or even a greater sum," said he, "on a single ball. There is absolutely no limit to the possibilities of expense, if one only knows how to go about it artistically. Now, in the first place, it would be necessary to secure the largest ballroom obtainable. There is no private ball-room in New York big enough for an entertainment of this magnitude. The finest private ball-room, without exception, is that of Mrs. William Astor. With the accompanying suite of rooms—all on one floor—it is the ideal place for a private ball, but would not accommodate one of unusual dimensions. The suite consists of parlors, hall, reception rooms and ballroom. It was there that the famous ball of 1880 was given, which was the most wonderful affair, in a private way, ever given up to that time.

"Now let us see," he continued, "how the budget of a $50,000 ball could be distributed. In the first place rent would cost about $1,000 or $2,000. Then, if it is desired to do everything in the most approved fashion, new carpets might be necessary for the halls and reception rooms. Then there are the hangings. Precious imported tapestries and portieres that cost a large sum are not infrequently put in. The mere hire of such articles would be considerable, and there are, I need hardly add, many hostesses who would not hesitate at the expense in order to make their ballroom and its belongings look as attractive as possible. But even supposing we had to spend nothing on carpets or tapestries there still would be field enough for spending all the money appropriated. The floral decorations at the New Years' ball cost about $5,000, I believe. Now, if orchids and other expensive plants were put in in profusion, as will be the case at the Bradley-Martin ball, it would be an easy matter to spend $10,000 or even $12,000 in this way. When you come to flowers, almost any idea of extravagance can be carried out. It depends wholly upon the wishes of the hostess and the magnificence of the decorations. Indeed, it would not be difficult to spend $25,000 in this way alone.

"Well, we have decorated the building with flowers and hung it with rich tapestries, and now we will look at the other paraphernalia of our grand ball. Maintaining the same scale of expense, I would set out a supper, which, with wines, would cost an average of $10 per plate. A Lucullian feast could be prepared for that amount, embracing all the delicacies of the season, with canvas-backs, ortolans, terrapin, English pheasants, western game, etc. The wines would be of the best imported brands; I need not enumerate them, further than to say that the clarets and Burgundies alone would cost $7, or possibly $8 a bottle—Clos Vougeot, Chambertin and the like. These are by no means imaginary prices. The cigars would cost half a dollar apiece. For each lady I would have a floral favor of the finest and most expensive roses. These would easily cost $10 each. Then there are the favors for the german.



COSTLY FAVORS FOR THE GERMAN.

There is absolutely no limit to the possibilities here again. The german favors at the Astor ball were exceedingly rich, and those given at Mr. Bennett's ball, at Newport, I think cost in the neighborhood of $25 or $30 each. They might consist of elegant pieces of jewelry set with precious stones. Some favors are diamond-studded; in fact, the hostess can expend just as much on this particular item as she wishes; but I am supposing a reasonable limit in placing them at $40 apiece. You see, these matters soon run up into the thousands."

Here is the estimate of which Mr. Pinard chatted as lightly as though it were a trifle of every-day occurrence:

Rent of ballroom (Stewart mansion or Metropolitan)	$2,000
Decorations with orchids and other rare flowers, say	12,000
500 floral favors for the ladies, at $10	5,000
500 jewelled favors for the German, at $40	20,000
Dinner at $10 per plate, with wines and cigars	10,000
Music—String and promenade bands	600
Making a grand total of	$49,600

If this feminine Croesus does not capture the rich prize she is striving for—the leadership of New York society—by this solitary coup she will at least have the sweet satisfaction of feeling that she has eclipsed all the records for extravagance in ball-giving. The Bradley-Martin visiting list is said to be the largest of any in Gotham, with the single exception of that of Mrs. William Astor, the present leader. Moreover, it will be reinforced by accessions from abroad, and there will be more than a few lions from over the sea at the coming ball. Large as her list is, the lady means to demonstrate that in ball-giving she can give points even to McAllister himself; for it is her purpose to have none but those of recognized social standing and not to cast her bread upon the waters as McAllister did, metaphorically, at his New Year's ball, when he let down the bars and invited the ambitious outsiders to come in and have a good time. She will demonstrate that there are at least a thousand people of unexceptionable family and position who are worthy of being bidden to her little dance and who are quite different from McAllister's incongruous host. Her portal is a wide one, but it will be quite as exclusive in a way as ever was that of the Four Hundred in the days when not to be one of the sacred circle was to be ignored.

Several other balls in high life are announced for the season, and, on the whole, it promises to be a very lively winter in Gotham, and the fight for the laurels of leadership opens merrily. Thousands will watch with interest the great battle that is about to begin. Hundreds of thousands of dollars will be spent ere all be done. The milliners, dressmakers, florists, jewelers and tradespeople will benefit by the activity, and lots of money will be put in circulation. The Croesuses and their dames are wealthy, and they can stand it. There is another class, too, who will watch the combat with eager expectant eyes and who will have lots of fun out of it while it lasts. These are the impecunious devotees of fashion—the-man-about-town, who hang on the skirts of society and who, precluded from entertaining on their own account, are still agreeable enough to be asked to help entertain others. They are the aides-de-camps of the leaders, useful as well as ornamental, but hopeless as far as their ambitions are concerned. These pleasant parasites will be in clover this season, if they never were before.

Let the best woman win. The battle is on, the money-bags are open, and the great scramble for the tinsel crown has fairly begun. How it will all end, who can tell?

G. H. SANDISON.

RARE AND REMARKABLE.

THREE aged ninety years are living in Wixom, Mich.

AN Idaho physician advertises: "The poor never refused."

JOE TAVERN is the name of a prosperous village in Georgia.

A COLORED somnambulist in Georgia walked to the next village, several miles distant, and back, awakening on getting within a few squares of his home.

A WOMAN in New York is showing a school of trained crocodiles and alligators. They shed real "crocodile tears," and dry them with pocket-handkerchiefs.

A TAME crow belonging to a farmer near Ridgeway, Ont., has been taught to distinguish colors, and will pick out from a pile of articles of various colors one of any color asked for.

A PETRIFIED apple was discovered at Harrington, Me., a few days ago by some boys. It had changed to the color of marble. The stem and blossom were apparently as perfect as when the fruit fell from the tree.

A MAN of Charleston, W. Va., while sound asleep got out of bed at night and swam across the river and back again. He was carried home by some gentlemen who had seen him perform this remarkable feat.

ON one street in Akron, O., only four squares long, reside thirteen families of the name of Brown. There were fourteen until recently, when one of them moved away, the members of the family declaring that they could stand the pressure no longer. Mail intended for one individual would be scattered all along the street, and there were other annoyances too numerous to mention.

NEAR Healdsburg, Cal., is a redwood tree twenty-four feet in diameter, within the hollow of which a squatter and his family have taken up their abode. A few days ago a hunter was attracted to the spot by the sound of voices. To close the opening in the tree a rude door had been constructed of deerskins. Inside the tree benches and tables had been constructed of redwood bark fastened together by wooden pins.

A BEAVER FALLS (Pa.) paper tells a story about an old man who has been dried up by the natural gas fires in his house until his weight is hardly that of a seven-year-old child. Of late, also, it has been noticed that when he walks his joints seem to give way under him, and his whole frame emits a queer, crackling sound like dried peas in a pod. Physicians have examined him and found that every joint in his frame had shrunk from its socket.

A REMARKABLE colored farmer lives near Middletown, Del. He has a family of fourteen children living, while two have died. He educates his children in a peculiar way. He sent his eldest son to college in New Jersey, where he acquired a fairly good education. The farmer then went to work and erected a suitable building for a school-house on the farm, and his eldest son is installed as teacher of his brothers and sisters. The school is opened in the fall when the work is all done, and in the spring, when the planting season commences, the school is closed and the children go to work on the farm.

THE sequel to a rather peculiar incident was lately brought to light in which a fish and an engagement ring were the principal actors. Some months ago a man living near Wellsville caught a large catfish in the Ohio river. On cutting it open a gold ring with an opal setting was found in its stomach with the initials M. S.—F. D. on the inner face of the band. By an accident this came to the notice of Frederick Dunham, of Springfield, Ill., and on examination he pronounced it the engagement ring which he had given to his wife twelve years before and which she had lost on a Missouri river steamer a few years after their marriage.

SIMPLETONS

Do Men Prefer Them to Bright Women?

Do Women Do Well to Affect Simplicity? A Clever Man's Mistake in His Ideal. Young Simpletons Charming to Masterful Men.

COPYRIGHT 1890.

Charles Reade has written the story of "A Simpleton," and has made her out a very sweet and charming woman, with just enough want of judgement and sense to make her most deliciously dependent upon the man to whom she belongs, and who seems to value her more especially because she is such a simpleton that he by comparison appears quite a monument of sagacity. The story reminds one a little of the fable of the lion who was found gazing at a group wherein a man was seen trampling upon an abject and conquered lion.

The sculptor asked His Majesty what he thought of it. "I think," replied the lion, "that it was a man who modeled it." And then it turned and began walking slowly toward the sculptor, who also turned and ran, not at all slowly, to a place of security.

However, it is to be supposed that Mr. Charles Reade liked this style of woman, and the question in my mind is, Do other men like her?

To begin with, one does not often meet just that sort of a simpleton. To be lacking in brains does not always imply abounding in heart. I have known plenty of women who were very foolish, very incompetent for any of the duties of life, even self-preservation, and who at the same time were selfish, cold and insincere. I have also known some women who from sweet simpletons of sixteen deteriorated, when the troubles of life or the neglect of men tried their tempers, into very waspish and disagreeable-tempered women, but without gaining any common sense or making any use of their dearly bought experience.

An old Latin proverb says that the sweetest things, in their decay, become the most offensive, and I have always noticed its truth in the matter of women's tempers; an insipid, sugar-and-milk young girl often becomes the most impossible kind of woman, and is capable of imparting more misery into a man's life than a clever woman could possibly do, for the latter, when her temper runs away with her, goes to such extremes, and so exhausts herself in injurious invectives, that the victim feels that it cannot last, and is hardly real, and is rather stunned and annoyed than cooly indignant.

The simpleton, on the contrary, has not the moral force to rise into this volcanic condition, or to produce this impression of brief chaos to end in a newly smiling heaven. She whines and she cries, and she makes half-accusations and won't stick to them, and above all she nags—oh, how fearfully she nags, and how untiringly!

Mrs. Caudle was a simpleton of this description, and the Caudle Lectures are a perfect Vade-mecum in the science of nagging.

I suppose there is nothing quite so maddening to the masculine temper as a long-continued course of nagging, and a husband who gets plenty of it generally takes to drink, to other women, or to Canada. He cannot stand it and live!

The difference between the two tempers is that of a cyclone, or a dreary pelting sleet rain, to which one is exposed all night, without shelter or motion.

The cyclone is pretty dangerous while it lasts, but the wise man throws himself flat on the ground or crouches in the lee of a big rock, holds on tight and waits. The other man battles on until strength and hope are gone, and he throws himself down and don't care.

But all this is of simpletons whose life has soured, and I do not at all deny that there are plenty of others who remain sweet and docile, yes, "child-like and bland," to the end of the chapter.

People always say of her, "What a sweet woman!" and if anybody adds, "But what a simpleton!" she is looked upon as uncharitable.

Perhaps somebody will say that I am uncharitable in the foregoing remarks, but indeed I do not mean to be.

I adore women as a class, and always claim my position as "a woman's woman," and I admire even the simpletons in some ways. I am only considering them as a man's favorite type of womanhood, and my conclusion is that here, as in many other particulars, man doesn't know what he is talking about when he talks as Charles Reade does in the book suggesting this paper.

The kind of simpleton many men admire and love is really only a sweet and simple woman, and not at all a fool. Plenty of those women there are, with child-like faith in all sorts of good things, their husbands included; rather narrow in their sympathies because not knowing much of the world outside their homes, but possessing infinite patience, self-denial, resource and good sense within their own domain.

They don't pretend to much authority over their children, but they love them and toil for them, and nurse them in illness, and so soon as the boys can mount a bicycle, submit to their decisions, and never think of resenting, being told that "women don't understand these things." But the boys love them dearly, and in after life say and believe that they had the best of mothers; while their sisters, if not simpletons themselves, patronize their "little mammas," laugh at her simple suggestions, and admit her to as much of their confidence as they think safe and wise.

Probably both sons and daughters feel the loss all their lives of what another sort of mother would have done for them, but then they never know it, and if her husband does, he keeps it to himself, and treats his wife indulgently, gratefully, for he never yet has had a cold breakfast or buttonless shirt or an unmended stocking; but he is careful not to say anything about his business before her that could harm him if repeated, and he would as soon think of consulting the baby as her about affairs outside the house. In fact, as the children grow up, it is no uncommon thing for the father to make a companion and occasional confident of the oldest daughter if she is bright, and the simple wife sees them set off for drives and walks and little journeys to which she is not invited.

If she is very good and sweet, and has plenty of that sort of sense which belongs to the best class of simpletons, she is glad that "father finds such companionship," and puts down that little ache at the heart with all the might she has.

But if she is not of this better grade, she encourages the little green snake of jealousy, feeds it, makes room for it, endures its stings, and though she may be silent, makes both husband and daughter feel its effects.

So many men fancy that their ideal woman is of this stamp, and so many men in after-years have found out their mistake.

"I want a wife who shall be a rest and a refuge after the day's worries and toils," says one of my friends, himself as keen and clever a lawyer as ever held a brief. "I don't want to discuss my cases at home, nor do I want to have my tired brain summoned to an argument upon the solar spectrum or the Semitic dialects. I want a sweet, gentle soul, who will have my slippers and my dinner ready, and while I enjoy them, entertain me with a little ripple of chat upon the events of the day, her new bonnet, Mrs. Tomkins's call, and Benny's success at school."

"And after you are well rested, and begin to tire of Mrs. Tompkins and Benny?"

"Oh, then I shall go to bed, and next morning to the office, secure that I know exactly what my wife will do with herself all day, and that my wishes, expressed or unexpressed, will be her law. Every man should be master in his own house, and your bright, sweet woman has generally a will of her own, and is determined on carrying it out. I do hate domestic controversy."

"Do you like domestic deceit better?" inquired I.

"There are very few women, I am happy to say, so abject as to have no wills of their own, and the difference is, that while your clever, self-respecting, courageous woman announces her wishes or opinions, and argues for them, just as you do for yours in court, the timid, self-distrustful, sweet simpleton says nothing, but silently makes her way toward the desired end, clouding the waters about her, cuttle-fish fashion. She gets there all the same, however."

"Well, I'd rather be cheated than bullied by my wife," was my young lawyer's ultimatum, but I don't believe he really meant it, and I think he has sense to see that life, in the long run, will be more satisfactory, to an intelligent man, spent with a companion than with a slave, for no matter how tenderly and justly he may determine to treat his pretty simpleton, he cannot help her degenerating, as the years go on, to the position of a mere appendage to his life, not an integral part of it.

But one of the oddest points in this whole subject is the infatuation which induces a good many women of average intellect to pretend to be simpletons. Why do they do it? It is because there is a class of men, like my young lawyer, who fancy that they like and wish to marry simpletons.

Or, do the women themselves admire this style? I cannot imagine which, but I will give all pretended simpletons the famous advice, Don't.

The real ingenue is a lovely creature, and we hope will, in time, become a sensible woman, and I suppose our style of simpleton may be called ingenue; but a make-believe ingenue and a make-believe simpleton are fearful mistakes, and what is worse, never deceive anybody into fancying them the real thing.

Don't. MRS. FRANK LESLIE.

WILL-O'-THE-WISP.

An Amusing Experiment That Can Be Practiced at Home.

The natural phenomenon of Jack-a-Lantern or Will-o'-the-Wisp can be produced by very simple means on a small scale. It is, as most people know, the effect of hydrocarbon gas generated by decomposing organic matter in a marsh and in a state of combustion. If we take an open-mouthed glass jar and put some baking soda in the bottom, then pour diluted sulphuric acid, or muriatic acid, or even strong vinegar over it, the jar will fill with carbonic acid gas. A lighted candle may be carefully lowered into the jar until the gas goes out, leaving the top of the flame still burning on the surface of the invisible gas.

The flame is fed by the gases ascending from the smoldering wick. The effect only lasts a short time, but it can be renewed by raising up the candle till the wick relights, then lowering it as before. The experiment can also be performed with a gas jet, but in this case the parallel is not so complete, for the candle produces the gas by its decomposition on the spot. It is necessary that the air of the room should be very still for the experiment to be successfull.

PROPRIETOR of a summer resort (to departing guest)—"I am not satisfied with the name of my hotel and think of changing it. Can you suggest a name?" Guest (glancing at his bill)—"How does 'The Eiffel' strike you?"

JACKSON—"This picture I have just had taken doesn't do me justice." Johnson—"I see it doesn't, but let me advise you as a friend to always patronize that photographer in future." Jackson is still wondering if his friend meant any more than he said.

GOVERNOR ABBETT.

The emphatic and thorough advocacy of ballot reform so nobly set forth by Governor Abbett in his recent inaugural address, confers not only honor upon him, but upon the State of New Jersey and the party of Democracy.

Governor Abbett does not favor any half-way, politician-tinkered system of reform, attractive in name, but deceptive in fact. He goes for the genuine article, and if the present Legislature of our State will discharge its imperative duty by promptly enacting such a law as he recommends, the political atmosphere will be greatly purified, and the abomination of ballot box corruption measurably removed.

Every honest-intentioned citizen, be he Democrat or Republican, must glory in the triumph of such needed reform.

None but scurvy political tricksters and traders can or will oppose a measure designed to protect from fraud and dishonor the dearest privilege of free citizenship—the elective franchise; and the sooner such opponents are swept overboard and away by the surging waves of popular indignation, safer will be the interests of the people and fairer the reputation of our country.

New Jersey is to be congratulated upon having a Chief Magistrate like Leon Abbett. He will never delegate his imposed official authority to any man or set of men, neither will he ever be found neglecting his post of duty for any outside purpose whatever. With statesmanlike ability to formulate, industry to attend to business, and intelligent bravery to act as circumstances may demand, he will faithfully observe the official oath he has for the second time just taken.

He will be the real Governor of New Jersey, and a mere figure-head.

Leon Abbett is justly popular.

Why?

Because the people know exactly where to find him, and have reason to believe what he says.

He is the right man in the right place, and never for a moment hesitates to proclaim what, in his opinion, is right action.

THE WOMEN VOTE.

And $20,000 is Appropriated for the [illegible] School [illegible].

A large and enthusiastic school meeting was held at Arcanum Hall, Westfield, on Monday, for the purpose of voting on a proposed appropriation of $20,000, in addition to the $25,000 already authorized for the building of a new school house and the purchase of a site.

The total number of votes cast was 347. For, 179; against, 168. Thus resulting in a majority of eleven in favor of the appropriation. A large number of women voted.

Councilman Smith's Large Contract.

Councilman S. G. Smith, of this city, Monday secured the contract for trimming the scows of the New York Street Cleaning Department, for which privilege he pays $1,000 a week. Over 200 men will be employed in the work. Mr. Smith had the same contract two years ago, for which he paid at the rate of $250 a week.

New Jersey Historical Society.

The annual meeting of the New Jersey Historical Society was held at the State House, Trenton, Jan 28 at 11 a. m. Memorials were read of the late Rev. Samuel M. Hamill, President of the society, by the Rev. Samuel M. Studdiford, D. D.; of the late Hon. John T. Nixon, LL. D., First Vice-President of the society, by A. Q. Keasby, Esq.; and of the late Prof. George H. Cook, State Geologist. The annual election of officers also took place, and other business came up for consideration.

A Sample of Every Day.

The following in addition to many other interesting local items, were published exclusively in Monday's Press, Plainfield's only news paper:

The death and funeral of the wife of ex-Councilman Marsh;

The sad case of Wm. S. Benton;

The marriage of Miss Jennie Clarkson and Mr Nicolas Godfrey;

The attempted burglary at the house of Mrs. Dr. Penfield;

The progress at last made by the committee on Plainfield's soldiers' monument;

The death of Dr. Edward Rushmore's uncle;

The alarm of fire in Mr. Louis Van Alstine's house;

The serious condition of Assessor Brokaw's health;

The individual records for the season of the Crescent League bowlers.

Cut This Out and Paste It Up.

For the year 1890 the days and dates of important events, anniversaries and holidays will fall as follows:

Saint Valentine's Day, Friday, February 14; Shrove Tuesday, (Fastnacht,) February 18; Ash Wednesday, February 19; Washington's Birthday, Saturday, February 22; First Sunday in Lent, February 23; St. Patrick's Day, Monday, March 17; Palm Sunday, March 30; Good Friday, April 4; Easter Sunday, April 6; Low Sunday, April 13; Rogation Sunday, May 11; Ascension Day, (Holy Thursday,) May 15; Pentecost, (Whit Sunday,) May 25; Decoration Day, Friday, May 30; Trinity Sunday, June 1; Corpus Christi, Thursday, June 5; St. John's Day, Tuesday, June 24; Independence Day, Friday, July 4; Michaelmas Day, Monday, September 29; First Sunday in Advent, November 30; Christmas, Thursday, December 25.

Sweepstake Shooting at Elizabeth.

A large number of pigeon shooters gathered Monday afternoon at the grounds of the Elizabeth Gun Club to witness a match, at fifteen live birds each, between Daniel Post of Elizabeth, and Wm. Smith of Scotch Plains, for $50 a side. Post, to the disgust of the spectators, failed to show up, and the $50 forfeit was paid over to Smith.

A sweepstakes match was shot, there being seven entries. Dan Terry of this city, was first money. Each man shot at five birds. Following is the score:

Dockerman	0	1	0	1	0
Smith	0	0	1	0	1
Terry	1	1	1	0	1
Wallace	1	1	0	1	0
Trautman	0	0	1	0	1
Thompson	0	0	0	1	0
Pearce	0	1	1	0	0

Another small sweepstakes was shot at four birds each, as follows:

Ashton	1	1	0	1
Tucker	1	1	0	1

The last two shot off, Ashton winning. The pigeons furnished were the poorest lot ever sprung from traps at the grounds. They all proved strong, erratic flyers, very difficult to kill. After the supply of pigeons was exhausted a number of sweepstakes with clay birds were shot. Then the day's contest closed.

AN EVENING AT HOME.

A Large Number of Guests Entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Gilbert.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Gilbert gave a reception to their innumerable friends, Thursday. Their handsome home at Crescent avenue and Eighth street, decorated and furnished with so much quiet elegance and good taste, was additionally beautified by banks of chrysanthemums, orchids and roses on the mantels, and smilax twined about the balustrades.

Two hundred and fifty guests were warmly entertained during the evening. Mrs. Gilbert was assisted in her duties as hostess by Mrs. F. O. Herring and Mrs. Clinton F. Randolph. The supper, by Jaeger of New York, was served in rooms above the salon. The orchestra was stationed in an alcove at the foot of the main staircase.

Among those present were, Ex-Mayor L. V. F. Randolph and wife, Miss Randolph, Corporation Counsel C. A. Marsh and Mrs. Marsh, Ex-Councilman B. O. Bowers and Mrs. Bowers, Ex-Councilman J. D. Dumont and Mrs. Dumont, Colonel and Mrs. Mason W. Tyler, School Trustee G. H. Babcock and Mrs. Babcock, Ex-Councilman O. T. Waring and Mrs. Waring, Dr. and Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Murray, Ex-Councilman E. N. Erickson and Mrs. Erickson.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Bloodgood, Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Kaufman, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Fisk, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Higbee, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. F. O. Herring, Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Hooley, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. ELIZABETH WINS.

The Deciding Game of The Union County League Tournament.

A big crowd of enthusiastic club men from all parts of Union County, and including many of Plainfield's crack bowlers, filled the alleys of the Elizabeth Athletic Club Monday to witness the deciding game of the tournament for the championship of the Union County Bowling League, composed of the Crescent League of this city, the Elizabeths, and the Monday Nights, Pastimes and Nameless, of Westfield.

The leaders in the struggle were the Elizabeths and Nameless. The successful club gets two-thirds of the purse of $125 subscribed by the League and the second club gets the remainder. The game was very close and exciting, the Elizabeths leading on the first frame, when the Nameless went ahead and held the lead until the fourth frame, when the home club again went to the front and stayed there. The game was practically won by Turnbull, the last man, who made six consecutive strikes in the wind up. The score:

There is one more game to play. It will be at Westfield, on Tuesday evening, February 4, between the Crescent League and the Pastimes to decide the tie for last place.

Monday Night's Cock Fight.

A cock fight between Somerset and Union county birds, took place at a well-known resort in Somerset county, Monday evening, and the main was witnessed by about twenty-five sports, including several from this city. The purse went to Somerset county.

A well-known Plainfield handler had charge of the Union county birds.

Death at Liberty Corner.

Mr. Daniel Irving, an old and respected resident of Liberty Corner died on Sunday, Jan 19, at the advanced age of eighty-seven years. Death resulted from old age. The deceased was the grandfather of Councilman Smalley of North Plainfield.

The funeral took place from the house, following Wednesday, the pall bearers being six of the grandchildren of the deceased, whose ages ranged from twenty-five to thirty years. Interment was made at Liberty Corner.

$25 and $30 Overcoats for $15.

Watson & Co. have less than five hundred overcoats on hand, but they are very choice ones, as most of them have been made since the holidays by their fine tailors, from left over custom patterns. You can take your choice of these now for $15, and also see some handsome black chinchillas that they will close for $10, like samples shown in their North window next to Market street.

All winters go now for $10 and $15, as Watson & Co. do not propose to carry over a single Winter garment.—Newark Press.

Another New Building on North Avenue.

The building owned by Mr. E. O. Mulford, and occupied by B. F. Moore, the butcher, is being removed to make way for a new building to be erected for the Hon. John Ulrich by the Central Land Improvement Co. The building is to be erected this side of Lowrie's, on North avenue, and will be of pressed brick, with stone trimmings, plate and cathedral glass. It is to be a model in design, and will be entirely used for office purposes by ex-Judge Ulrich, who proposes after his legislative term to give his undivided time and attention to his profession.

A QUARTETTE FOR ALL TASTES.

The Four Best Productions of Music, Drama, Burlesque and Variety, That New York Has.

While "The Brigands" can draw to the Casino audiences of the proportions recently noticed there need be no serious thought of a change of programme; and then Lillian Russell has never been in better voice or livelier mood than at present, which is an added attraction of the revival. But "The Grand Duchess" is being carefully rehearsed just the same, and Manager Aronson will have it in readiness for an emergency.

"The Charity Ball's" success at the Lyceum experiences no faltering as week follows week. On the contrary, there are tokens that the charming play is strengthening its hold upon the best theatregoers of the city. No cast could be devised in contemporaneous drama which would develop more accurately balanced acting than is done in this piece by Kelcey, LeMoyne, Wheatcroft, Georgia Cayvan and Effie Shannon.

"The Seven Ages" will get as far as its 125th performance at the Standard by the close of this week. Still, Dixey's friends seem not to tire of it, and the comedian himself isn't slighting his work in the least. Bettina Padelford of the cast denies that she is engaged for a "Gondoliers" troupe, but "The Seven Ages" will lose her after February 1. Probably Elvia Crox will fill her place with Dixey.

"Prince Lavender's Reception," the new thing at Koster & Bial's, continues to be the principal entertainment at that concert hall. The specialty programme employs the Braatz Brothers, musical acrobats; Arthur West, comedian; the Deverle Sisters, vocalists and dancers; Sherman and Morrissey, trapezists; Col Upts, the midget comedian, and the Tissots in their singing cats. Next week a new musical burlesque, "The Chandeliers of Venice in New York," will have its first production. Bright costumes and some new dances are promised.

A SEASON'S RECORD.

The Bowling Averages of the Crescent League's Team Members.

Below is given the individual averages made by all the members of the Plainfield Crescent League who have taken part in the match bowling games of this season. VanEmburgh who is not doing as well as last year, is still at the head, while Captain Davis, who has bowled in more games, is a close second. Then follow at a tie, Reed, Emerson and Rogers. PLAINFIELD'S LONG DEFERRED EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The People of Grace Church Advised by Their Pastor to Begin it at Once.

The Rev. F. M. Rodman talked very plainly and emphatically to his people, Sunday morning, about the erection of the long talked of Grace church building on the fine site at the corner of Seventh and Sycamore streets.

He said that there was nearly $6,000 for the purpose in the bank, and $5,000 more already promised. A start should be made at once, he thought. If it is not a good time now, it will never be a good time.

THE BUBBLE BURST.

Collapse of the Randolph West Virginia Boom Company.

A decree of sale was entered Friday in the United States Circuit Court at Parkersburg, West Virginia, to sell the property of the Randolph West Virginia Boom Company, organized under the laws of West Virginia, by New York and New Jersey parties, who own 40,000 acres of the finest timber and mineral lands in the State.

This company was organized by M. A. Shaw of Crescent avenue, who drew into the scheme Messrs L. A. Rhoume, Wm. J Bonfield, Frank Lock, John Cathcart and others of this city and the Borough. Shaw was arrested in Washington recently and taken to New York for trial on criminal charges connected with the issuance of a large amount of stock in the company to Eastern parties. Harris Hoyt, of New York, who was connected with the concern, was also arrested in New York on a charge of perjury in swearing falsely as to his pecuniary circumstances as one of the bondsmen of the receiver.

The Spring Garden National Bank of Philadelphia, is connected with the suit, having purchased nearly 2,000,000 feet of lumber from the President, as it is now alleged, after he had been deposed. The Central Trust Company of New York, is also said to be connected with the suit. The sale will take place May 1. The land is valued at $1,000,000, and Shaw's victims here will probably now get their money back.

NOT THE MEMBERS FAULT.

They Charge the Borough Council With Crippling the Borough Fire Department.

Some explanation is due the members of the North Plainfield fire department for their apparent lack of interest and absence of service upon the occasion of the Linke fire of Monday morning. The foreman of the Borough engine company is sick, but Assistant Foreman George H. Fairchild was promptly on hand, rang the alarm and helped run the steamer out of the house.

Some of the members of the North Plainfield fire department say the Borough authorities have driven the horses out of the engine house and use the stalls for the confinement of tramps and disorderlies. Consequently when a fire breaks out, a team to draw the steamer must be hunted up. At two o'clock in the morning, horses all harnessed and a driver all dressed and ready to go, are not to be found at the nearest corner. Therefore the presence of the North Plainfield steamer should not be expected at many of the Borough fires.

Assistant Foreman Fairchild tells a Press reporter that out of 21 members of his company, 11 answered the roll call at the house after the fire was out, which is a very good percentage.

Lots of Profit and Applause.

Quite a large audience, many of whom were in evening dress, enjoyed the concert on Monday in Music Hall by the glee and banjo clubs of Columbia College, New York. The affair was under the auspices of the St. Andrew's Society and for the benefit of the Grace church building fund. A satisfactory financial profit resulted, and the repeated encores to all the numbers on the programme, proved the musical gratification of most everybody present.

PROGRESS AT LAST.

The Soldiers' Monument Committee Take Some Decisive Action.

There was a large attendance Saturday evening at the meeting of the Soldiers' Monument committee. New designs were considered, and upon the request of other builders for time to submit their plans and estimates, the committee adjourned for two weeks.

After the next meeting no more designs will be received, and a sub-committee consisting of Gen'l Negley, Col. Tyler, J. Evarts Tracy, Esq., and comrades Olsen of Post 109, and Stewart of Post 73, will proceed with full power to decide upon a design for the monument and enter into a contract for its erection.

SAD CASE OF WILLIAM S. BENTON.

What is Said to be a Hereditary Taint, Develops Itself in Him.

The sad story has at last become public of the serious affection of the brain that has come upon Wm. S. Benton, a well-known business man of this city, who lives on the Railway road just over Short Hills. The attendant physician believes that the unfortunate man will never be entirely sane again, and advises his confinement in one of the institutions specially provided for such patients.

It is said that the taint of insanity is in the victim's family. He imagines now that he has extended and intricate business accounts to straighten out, and is being so pushed that he can't accomplish the work. About the middle of last month, Benton sold his market at the corner of Park avenue and Second street, to J. B. Hatfield. It had been even then noticed by those connected in business with him, that he had developed strange ways and made many unusual mistakes.

It is said he had not slept for some two weeks or more. The other night he fell on the floor of the kitchen in convulsions so violent that he broke some of the furniture; and in his unconsciousness of his acts, he tore the beard from one side of his face. He now seems to recognize those who are admitted to see him, but his mind is undoubtedly shattered.

THE THIRD ATTEMPT.

Incendiaries Again Set Fire to Linke's Property and the Family Narrowly Escape With Their Lives.

At 2:30 o'clock Monday morning, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Linke were awakened by their little child, and discovered they were all being smothered to death by the *smoke that filled their rooms on the sec*ond floor of their home on Somerset street. Mr Linke found he could not get down the stairway—the heat of a fire below was so intense, and the smoke so dense. He helped his wife and child through a window on a shed, and then succeeded in wakening his man below who got a ladder and rescued them.

One of the neighbors who was aroused, hurried to the engine house and rang the borough alarm bell so loud and long that Chief Doane of this city was aroused. Over the brook, however, only Hiram K. Voorhees, Frank Schenck and Andrew Love, Sr., of this city's department, turned out. They ran the borough engine out of its house but could not pull it alone. Then they left it and hurried to the scene of the fire.

They deserve great credit for their efforts and success in putting out the fire. One of the lower windows was found open through which it is supposed some one crawled and after saturating the interior with kerosene, set it afire. Voorhees with a scuttle full of water, would jump into the blazing room with his mouth tightly closed, dashed the water on the flames and jump out again. After the fire was somewhat quenched, and a door could be forced open, the blazing furniture was thrown into the yard and the fire put out entirely.

AMONG THE BI'S.

The Fair Grows Until it Has Spread Over Another Day.

At a special meeting of the Plainfield Bicycle Club, held on Saturday evening last, the committee having charge of the various booths for the fair, made reports as to how they were progressing. As the prospects for a mammoth fair, the like of which has never before been held in Plainfield, are very apparent, it was decided to open on Thursday evening instead of Friday. The dates are February 20, 21, and 22.

Mr. T. S. Burr, of gymnasium fame, and editor-in chief of the almanac-programme to be issued in connection with the fair, is pushing things. The members are united in the work and are all in earnest.

A committee consisting of Messrs Townsend Rushmore, A. L. C. Marsh and F. L. C. Martin, was appointed to co-operate with the committee recently appointed by the Chief Consul of the N. J., Division, L. A. W., to formulate plans for the Division meeting to be held in this city, on May 30 and 31.

After the adjournment of the meeting the evening was devoted to general sport. The committee for the evening was Messrs J. E. Erickson and J. Frank Martin, and they provided the members with a bounteous repast which the Bi boys know so well how to do justice to.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.

A Young Lad Dragged From the Icy Waters as He Sank for the Last Time.

The young son of the Rev. J. P. Taylor of Park avenue, was rescued from drowning in Green Brook, Monday afternoon, by Mr. John King.

The lad was returning from a visit to Mayor Cooley's house on Westervelt avenue. In crossing the temporary bridge at Water street, he lost his balance and fell into the brook. Some young companions were with him but they were powerless to help, and the unfortunate boy sunk to the bottom.

Mr. John King happened to be passing and, calling another man to his assistance, succeeded in seizing the boy just as he rose to the surface for the second and last time. With some difficulty they pulled him out. The boy was so chilled he could hardly stand, and entirely deaf. He was taken back to Mayor Cooley's where he was dressed in dry clothing and subsequently sent home.

The Rev. Mr. Taylor and his wife request the publication of the following: "We desire through The Press to return our devout thanks to the unknown rescuers of our son, Welles, from drowning at the Water street crossing, yesterday; also to Dr. and Mrs. Cooley to whose hospitable house he was taken, for their skillful treatment and kind nursing."

Thought the House Was Unprotected.

Burglars attempted to enter the residence of Mrs. Penfield, at the corner of Park avenue and 7th street, Sunday night, about 11:30 o'clock. Mrs. Penfield was awakened by their attempts to unlock the back door, and aroused her father, Mr. George Smock. The latter asked who was there, and the burglars surprised to find there was a man in the house, left with much commotion.

A Charitable Act.

Mr. Andrew McCardell, one of the Pond Tool Works employes performed a charitable act, on Saturday, by taking up a collection among the employes in the foundry amounting to $116, for the benefit of the widow and children of Patrick McCoy, a brother employe, who died on Friday, and whose funeral took place today. Mr. McCardell personally delivered the money to Mrs. McCoy, on Saturday evening.

AGAIN THE OTHER SIDE.

A Reply to the Article Published in These Columns of Yesterday.

In The Press of Thursday appeared an article giving the reverse side of the contract that has recently been entered into between the city and the "Water Works Company of Plainfield." The article was so strong that it was deemed best by the friends of the contractors to answer it at once and overcome, as far as possible its effect. That answer is rescued from oblivion by The Press and given in full below. "Its literary style and method of reasoning unmistakably disclose the writer, as if there had been appended the signature of a certain"—Corporation Counsel.

The literary style and method of reasoning adopted in the leading editorial of yesterday's Plainfield Times as unmistakably disclose the writer of the editorial in my opinion as if there had been appended the signature of a certain ex-Mayor. It will not do merely to retort that an ex-Mayor might find better employment than that of suggesting means by which the Water Co., if disposed to be unscrupulous, might with safety water its stock and bonds, betray confidence and break faith with the city. That would be to show feeling of a kind not unlike that manifested in the Times article. Neither is it sufficient to say that assuming that the editorial contains anything seriously worth considering, the worthy ex-Mayor ought to have given the city the benefit of his astuteness when the city invited him and others—when it would have done some good—that is to say when Mr. Yates and other citizens furnished their really valuable suggestions during the negotiations which resulted in so greatly improving the city's contract. All this might be just, but the man who commands the editorial columns of a newspaper may reach some reader who would be misled unless a direct answer be made to some of the erroneous assertions of the editorial. I leave to others the task of exposing in detail the errors of statement and deduction with which the editorial in question is replete, and briefly suggest some of the more obvious considerations that occurred to my mind this evening on a single perusal.

The first attempt of the article was to show that the public are wrong in supposing that the $50,000 bond of the Water Company and its sureties was an abundant security to the city that all should be done according to contract. The ex-Mayor remarks that it is a "penal bond." So much is true. He might have added that it is highly penal. But he deduces from the fact that the bond is penal, that the only remedy of the city in case the contract is broken in any particular is "the inestimable privilege of bringing a law suit." It is not often that such an intelligent man and forceful writer makes such a careless statement when the cold type before his very eyes stands ready to convict him of error. To illustrate, suppose that the Water Company should fail in the most important feature of the contract, namely by providing water that is not pure. According to the ex-Mayor, the city's only remedy is "the inestimable privilege of a law suit." According to the contract, however, "the city [without going to law at all] may employ a competent engineer or engineers and other necessary help, and forthwith proceed to remedy the defect without unnecessary expense, and the company will reimburse the city on demand for all expenses so incurred."

Precisely similar rights are secured to the city in case any material should prove defective, or any workmanship should not equal the requirements of the contract. The Times editorial would leave us to infer that a law suit would be necessary to find out whether the material was in fact defective, and whether the workmanship did in fact come up to the requirements of the contract. But the contract easily refutes that position. Section 72 gives the city the extraordinary advantages of relying upon the decision of its own engineer on both points, and makes such decision final and conclusive upon the company.

So if the company fails or is too slow in completing any part of the work (76), or in repairing the streets (74), or in making extensions (83), or in furnishing plans (84) or in completing the entire works within the stipulated time (82), or in keeping or operating any part of the works as required by the contract (78), or in complying with any instructions from the engineer regarding the quality of the material and workmanship, or any other requirements of the specifications for the construction or extension of the works, etc., (73); in any and all of these cases, the city is given the right to step in and do what is required at the expense of the company. The company is bound by the contract and the sureties by their bond to reimburse the city on demand for all expenses incurred by the city under such circumstances.

Does the ex-Mayor see where the penal bond comes in? Would he like to be one of the sureties who bound themselves in the sum of $50,000 each to secure the performance of all and singular the provisions of this contract? If the company should not be able to respond, I suspect that Col. James Moore and Charles Moore and John Kean, Jr., are good for all expenses the city may incur in making absolutely sure the full performance of the contract.

But when it is remembered that the company cannot earn $1 for hydrant rentals until after the city's engineer certifies to the completion of the work according to contract (97), will any sane man believe that the company will take very long to complete the work according to contract, so as to get that little additional revenue from the city of not less than $3,750 per annum?

The fact of the matter is that the city could not have more effective control if it were the city that was going to build the works. And when it is remembered that somebody else is to pay for these works and that there is nothing to prevent the city at any time from giving another franchise to another company, or from building its own works, it is a matter of amazement to sound business men in this community that the city ever was able to secure such favorable terms. I have talked with upwards of a hundred of our largest tax payers, and have found only two men who do not regard the making of the contract as one of the best things ever done by a Plainfield Common Council.

I noticed in again reading over the first half of the Times editorial that it concludes "there is no absolute forfeiture provided in such connection—not even the forfeiture of the company's charter." I have shown that the contract, the performance of which is secured by the bond, is one of the strongest possible in its terms and penalties, but I must confess that the portion of the ex-Mayor's last remark which follows the dash is true—"not even the forfeiture of the company's charter." The city council did not undertake to forfeit a charter granted by the State of New Jersey, because the city council did not regard the Pope's bull against the comet as a good precedent.

A TAX PAYER.

—At the morning service in St. Mary's church, Sunday, Rev. Father Smyth, the pastor, spoke against the granting of the liquor licenses as petitioned for on the boulevard.

A NIGHT KINDERGARTEN.

Manual Training Successfully Taught in Boys' Evening Clubs.

It is an old saying that Satan finds some mischief for idle hands to do. What better means could he ask to corrupt the men of the future, than that afforded him by turning boys out at night into the streets of the cities and villages? Some such provision should be made as that afforded by a Boys' Club, for the little fellows whom all know are spending their evenings amid the temptations of the streets.

A Boys' Club, if managed by the right man or woman, and in the right way, is a great and grand institution. It is a night kindergarten for the boys of the street, and may be made a means of successfully resisting the almost overwhelming influence for evil that surrounds many a boy's life on the streets, and of lifting him into *a life both honorable to himself and use*ful to the State. It should be in no sense a religious club—although it has much religion in it—for if religious services, so called, were held in connection with the work, Roman Catholics and Jews would have cause for complaint.

It is in every sense a social club, and as it should not be expected to open or close a children's party with religious exercises, so it should not be forced upon the street boys in their club.

Manual training is the street boys salvation. The indirect social and economic benefits derived from turning the attention of boys toward mechanical pursuits, and from the fostering of a higher appreciation of the value and dignity of labor, are of great importance. How many boys of thirteen want to go to work at a trade? Let them go, however, not where a trade is taught, but where they are taught to use tools, and what have they learned? They have learned to like tools and to want to be machinists or carpenters, and when they enter these fields they will become skilled mechanics.

This club is not a charitable institution entirely, but a preventive and educational institution—a social factor. It should command the support of every intelligent member of this community. It is from our street boys that the criminals of the future are to be manufactured. The Boys' Club will help many such boys to avoid evil and strive after noble things. It is a wise investment, financially, for any community. One hour's work may save the State several hundred dollars. What folly to neglect the child, and then labor with ten-fold effort in after years to reclaim him when thoroughly grounded in evil. Truly, "a stitch in time saves not nine," but ninety-nine.

Another meeting to consider this work in this city will be held at the Unitarian church, Second place, on Thursday evening, January 30, at 8 o'clock. At this meeting a committee chosen from all the churches, will report a plan of action.

HOLY CROSS CHOIR GUILD ENTERTAINS.

A Good Time Provided by the Committees of Reception, Entertainment and Refreshments.

The Holy Cross Choir Guild of Holy Cross church, gave a reception January 22 to the gentlemen of the church in the Sunday School building, and the only persons who will have cause for regret on the occasion are those who were not there. The spacious rooms had been transformed, through the efforts of a few ladies of the church, into the cosiest and most beautiful of parlors, and the members of the Guild, divided into reception, entertainment and refreshment committees, took care that the guests were made to feel at home.

An impromptu programme of music and reading opened the evening, and was followed by a few remarks from President William H. Hardy, the Rev. T. Logan Murphy, Choir-master Charles W. Kellogg, and the ten honorary members who were then elected. Refreshments next claimed attention and a bountiful supply of good things disappeared with a rapidity which spoke well for their quality. General sociability reigned throughout the evening, and when at last the guests took their departure it was with many thanks to the young men of the choir for the pleasant time they had provided, and with many sincere good wishes for the Guild and its work.

The following gentlemen were elected honorary members: Geo. P. Dupee, Samuel Townsend, H. B. Phillips, C. J. Taggart, Will E. MacClymont, G. N. Hartley, Wm Mooney, P. S. Browne and Messrs Goff and Holmes.

$1,000 More Than Last Year.

Collector H. N. Spencer, of North Plainfield, settled with Treasurer R. B. Fairchild, last Friday. The amount of township taxes collected for 1889 to date is $24,422.79.

Another Protest in the Borough.

Prominent citizens of the borough of North Plainfield, have secured able counsel and propose to use all legal means to prevent the granting of a license to sell intoxicating liquors on the premises now occupied by James K. Arnold, at the corner of Somerset and Chatham streets, which premises have been sold.

A Westfield Hotel Sold to a Plainfielder.

Mr. Wm. H. Grogan, formerly of this city, has purchased the North avenue hotel at Westfield, of Mr. J. J. Wahl. Mr. Grogan is experienced in the business, and is well-known in Plainfield, having been in the employ of Miller Bros., Chas. Smith and E. P. Thorn for a number of years. Mr. Grogan will furnish accomodation for man or beast.

A Result of Reckless Driving.

A reckless driver ran over a little lad on Park avenue near Front street, Friday. The unfortunate boy was crossing the street when the accident occurred. He's a son of Erwin Waters, ex-Chief of the Plainfield Fire Department. The horses knocked him down and the wheels of the coach passed over the calf of his leg, making a deep indentation although it is thought no bones are broken. Chief Carey chased the driver until he caught him.

Sons of Temperance Speak in Reform Hall.

There was a well attended and very interesting meeting in Reform Hall Sunday evening. President Harper presided, George M. Angleman offered prayer, and the choir, under the leadership of Mr King, with Miss Alice Smith as organist, discoursed attractive music.

After a few preliminary remarks by the President, he introduced in succession the speakers of the evening, who were all members of the Sons of Temperance and as follows:—Brother Mackefield of Elizabeth, and Brothers Ayres, Scribner and Angleman of Plainfield. They each in turn clearly and practically advocated the cause of total abstinence from the liquor evil, pointed out the blessed results of taking and keeping the pledge, detailed the workings of the Order of Sons of Temperance which was an outcome of the first popular crusade against liquor drinking in this country, the great Washingtonian movement of over half a century ago, and heartily seconded the project of harmonious action among all kindred organizations, thanking the Reform Club for having set the laudable example. The speakers were all listened to with marked attention. The pledge was offered and three young men came forward and signed it.

"A CITY OF HOMES."

What a Memphis Magazine Publishes About Plainfield.

The Hon. James E. Martine, who has lived in this Crescent City longer than the majority of The Press readers have lived in all their lives, is one of those broad minded, universally benevolent men who aims to do good to all mankind. Every opportunity of doing the whole city, or anyone of its people, a good turn, that he sees he seizes. Following is an article from his pen, in The Great South, a periodical published at Memphis.

Plainfield is most happily situated in the Southwest corner of Union county, in the best part of New Jersey, within easy reach of the sea coast, and but twenty-four miles distant and a forty-five minute ride from New York City, via. the Central Railroad of New Jersey which is excelled in equipment by no railway in America, and whose New York terminus, equals in extent and finish any in the country; the road is ballasted by stone, hence entire freedom from dust; the passenger stations along its route are surrounded with literal lawns laid out in the most tasteful landscape manner. Trip tickets to and from New York are sold at yearly commutation; beginning at the rate of thirteen cents per trip or in book form as desired.

We sometimes think that the name Plainfield is a misnomer, for instead of being a plain field, it is a beautiful diversified tract of land lying between the Blue Ridge on the north and west and the beautiful and historical Short Hills on the east—its fortunate and beautiful surroundings serve more than a rich background to the charming landscape—protected from the winters blasts on the north by the Blue Ridge and sheltered on the east from the sea line effects of ocean and coast, it has been fitly styled the "Colorado of the East," inasmuch as it represents especial advantages to a large class of people afflicted with throat and lung troubles. Its tonic atmosphere serving to rapidly invigorate the ailing and cure the sick..

The soil underlying this tract is a light loam resting upon a strata of porus gravel which may be readily traced by reference to the elaborate maps prepared by the State Geologist; this strata or "glacial drift," secures to this beautiful city entire freedom at all times of standing pools of water—and at the same time gives absolute dry cellars. The water drawn from this sub-strata, through means of artesian wells is sparkling and pure and far famed for its excellence

These fortunate freaks, so to speak, of nature, tend to reduce the death rate to a minimum, the vital statistics, compiled by the state authorities place Plainfield at the lowest loss per thousand of any city in the State. As a result of these many advantages the city's progress is large and rapid. Beautiful macadamized avenues radiate in every direction, lined with elegant villas and cosey homes; a drive or walk through the streets will convince one that the advantages of city and country are here most pleasantly and happily blended on every side. Elegant churches of every denomination to the number of sixteen, and liberal schools of both public and private present advantages that will be appreciated by the head of every household

The business streets present a metropolitan aspect, being lined with elegant stores, which supply the householders' every want at New York prices. The marketmen and grocers calling at your house for orders and delivering your goods without additional cost.

The city has a population of sixteen thousand, and as its healthfulness becomes better known, it is taking on rapid growth. It is a most beautiful little city and none who visit us go away without expressing a desire to return for a permanent residence, as it it is emphatically a city of homes.

"ANOTHER TALMAGE."

What the Southern Papers Say of a Young Minister Who Grew up in Plainfield.

During all the early years of his life, S. C. Kennedy lived in Plainfield. He is the brother of Mrs. T. A. Van Zant, of Crescent avenue, and is well-known and most pleasantly remembered by many of those now residents here. The following notices from prominent papers of the South will therefore be of interest:

The Journal of Sandford, Fla., says:

"Our honored friend Dr. A. J. French, the second Mayor of Sandford, has for a guest the Rev. S. C. Kennedy, of Brooklyn, New York, now pastor of the Con*gregational Church at New Smyrna, Florida.*

"Though he has been ordained scarcely four years, no man today shows greater evidence of broadening and deepening power in the pulpit. He is freely compared to Talmage. Mr Kennedy handles his theme with reference to the men and truth of today, with unsurpassed grace and beauty of language and imagery. He was sent to New Smyrna to endeavor to rebuild the church there on shattered foundations. In a few weeks he had not only done this, but had added five hundred per cent. to the membership. The beautiful new church building there was erected for him. He will occupy the pulpit of the Presbyterian church on the morning and night of Sunday, the 22d, and we predict large audiences for him."

Another paper says:

"Those who heard the discourses of the Rev. S. C. Kennedy, in the Presbyterian church here, on Sunday, December 22d, will fully endorse the eulogistic notices preceding them. In the combination of elements making the pulpit orator, Mr. Kennedy has few, if any, equals in the State. It will surprise no one, therefore, to learn that a movement is on foot, enthusiastically endorsed and forwarded by many of our leading citizens to organize a broad, liberal, undenominational church, to be known as "The Church of the People," of which Mr. Kennedy will be called to be pastor; provided the movement receives the needed financial support, of which there ought to be little doubt."

The Grand Jury Will Sit on the Coachman.

Coachman Spratt was brought before Judge Codington, on Monday, and arraigned for running over Erwin Waters' little boy. As the testimony showed the horses were on a walk, the complaint was discharged so far as the city is concerned, as the ordinance only provides a penalty for "fast driving."

Chief Carey, however, had Spratt held to await the action of the Grand Jury, on a charge of assault. The accused's employer, Mr. Thomas of Union avenue, furnished the required bail. He protests his entire belief in his coachman's innocence, and intends to fight the case in the courts.

The story is that Spratt was turning the corner of Park avenue and Front streets, on a walk, when young Waters suddenly stepped off the curb in front of the horses and was knocked down by the carriage pole. Spratt claims he was looking out for a big furniture van that was crowding into his carriage, and consequently did not see the boy. He drove on towards the station with Mrs. Thomas in the carriage to meet her husband. Chief Carey followed and arrested him.

AN AGED LOTHARIO.

Seventy-Six, Yet He Leaves His Wife for a Younger Woman.

Prof Robert Butterworth, a musician and piano tuner, who is 76 years of age, is accused of unhusbandly conduct by his wife, a pleasant-featured lady, about thirty years the professor's junior. They have been married thirty years. The wife says that she found that her husband was an ardent admirer of the charms of a younger and prettier woman than she. This young woman is Emma Graham, who, for several months, has been living in Newark, N J., at the professor's expense. His means did not permit him to provide for the running expenses of two households, and the consequence was that his wife was neglected. She called upon Capt. McManus at the Second Precinct Newark, Jan. 20, and in his confiding ears she poured out her tale of woe. She told him that she had received no support from her husband for two months and that he had pawned a number of articles of furniture besides securing money by giving a chattel mortgage on his piano. He had also struck her when she remonstrated with him on his misconduct.

An officer was detailed to accompany Mrs Butterworth to the house at No. 29 Lemon street. A young woman named Cusick, a companion of the fair Emma, informed the neglected wife that her husband and Miss Graham were out for a walk. They returned after a short while and the aged lover was dumbfounded when he saw his wife. A stormy scene followed, but the professor remained in the house. His wife retired with a threat to take legal action and have her husband brought to a realization of what is due her.

The professor says that he will under no consideration again live with his wife, by whose jealousy he claims to have been driven to act as he has.

TWO VICTORIES FOR PLAINFIELD.

The Olympic and Crescent Bowling Teams, Each Win a Game on Strange Alleys.

On the 22d inst., Plainfield's two crack bowling teams rolled matches away from home, but won them both. The Olympics who had already beaten the Fanwoods on the Olympia alleys by a score of 1,360 to 1,335, went to Fanwood and again won but by a much larger score. The Plainfield team was short a man by the absence of Drayton, so Wood was substituted. He proved a mascot and rolled up for himself the highest score of the evening. Three of the Westfield bowlers were included in the Fanwood team, but without avail.

The score of the Olympics was: Van Alstyne, 136; Hudson, 131; Wilbur, 122; Murray, 121; Wood, 182; Hawkins, 173; Hall, 139; White, 141; Collier, 151; Lowry, 134. Total—1,430. Fanwood total—1,403.

The Crescent League bowlers went to Somerville and rolled the Somersets, on 22d inst., winning with ease although there were two substitutes on the Plainfield team. The new men, however, proved they had the nerve, and Brett especially did himself proud. The average of all the Crescents, in fact, considering the alleys were strange ones, was very creditable.

Their score was: VanEmburgh, 151; H. Teel, 127; Carey, 143; Emerson, 148; Brett, 131; C. Teel, 146; Leggett, 118; Rogers, 134; Reed, 167; Davis, 150. Total—1,415. Somerset total—1,375.

Third Assembly Ball.

Another society event in this city was the third assembly ball, which took place at the Seminary, on Monday, Jan. 20. Mazetti of New York, furnished the supper. The patronesses were Mrs. William E. Bloodgood, Mrs Charles E. Brooks, Mrs. Pliny Fisk, Mrs Fred. J. Kuhn, Mrs. Robert L. Burnett, Mrs. Harry G. Runkle, Mrs. William T. Kaufman and Mrs. DeWitt Clinton Ivins.

How Somerset Fared.

Senator Thompson is chairman of two committees at Trenton—Treasurer's Accounts and Corporations—and a member of committees on Printing, Deaf and Dumb Asylum, Railroads and Canals, and Miscellaneous Business.

Assemblyman Klotz is chairman of the committee on Riparian Rights, and member of the committees on Passed Bills and Commerce and Navigation.

A Word to the Boys.

The public school-law in force in this State provides that the use of profane language by any pupil shall constitute good cause for expulsion from schools; also that any pupils who shall cut, deface or injure school houses, fences or outbuildings thereof, are liable to suspension and punishment, and the parents of such pupils shall be liable for damages for the amount of injury, on complaint by the teacher, the amount to be determined by the directors and collected by the Court.

He Wants Protection From the Horrid Girls.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Is there no way to protect honest, respectable workingmen from a certain set of colored girls that infest our streets nightly? My son was stopped last evening, on returning from an errand to his office, by a gang of three. I hear two of them belong on Third street, and the other on West Fourth street

Very Respectfully,
ISAAC PETERSON,
30 Cottage Place.

Cruelty to a Horse.

Special Officer Kriney went before Mr. W. A. Coddington, an officer of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, Jan. 22, and lodged a complaint against one Charles Drake of Dunellen, charging him with cruelty to a horse. Drake was driving the horse on West Front street, evening Jan 21, when the animal accidentally broke a leg, and it is alleged that he allowed the horse to remain in the gutter for five hours unattended.

Installation of Officers.

Plainfield Lodge, No. 305, Order of Tonti, Thursday, installed the officers elected at the annual meeting on Saturday, January 4, as follows:

Past President—George E. Stillman.
President—W. R. Codington.
Vice-President—J. A. Hubbard.
Secretary—J. C. Randall.
Treasurer—F. A. Dunham.
Chaplain—Rev. C. Schenck.
Marshal—Edwin B. Finch.
Guard—Thomas E. Cardner.
Sentinel—L. T. Titsworth.
Trustees—Robert Gotthell, E. W. Titsworth, L. A. Hummer.

Deputy Supreme, P. P., G. E. Stillman, of this city, was the installing officer.

A Remarkable Family.

Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Laire of this city, went to Annandale, Hunterdon county, Saturday to attend funeral of Miss Sarah Fritts, a spinster, who died on January 25, at the advanced age of eighty-three years. This remarkable story is told in relation to Miss Fritts' family.

It appears that she was one of three sisters, all of whom were deaf and dumb. They were of wealthy parentage, and all of them have lived over the allotted "three score years and ten." Elizabeth, the youngest and only surviving member of the family, is seventy-five years of age, and is enjoying good health.

The family also included three brothers, Benjamin, Charles and Joseph, and the latter was at one time a Democratic member of the New Jersey Legislature. Sarah Fritts has for many years past made her home with Mrs. Laire's parents at Annandale.

An Anti-Saloon Organ for Revenue Only.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Why is it that a newspaper which claims that every other paper is a "saloon organ," should try to get up public sympathy in behalf of a rumseller who is charged un*der oath with violating the law habitually* by selling rum on Sunday, and by the glass, under a so called bottler's license?

The Somerset street contemporary is so moved to compassion by the misfortunes of its advertiser Frank Linke, that its very type seems softened and unable to print without blurring.

While no right minded person will seek to uphold the firing of dwellings either as a means of revenge or an attempt to drive out saloons, yet who can doubt that had the saloon fired been the one which was the subject of Chief Carey's famous remark—"It has ruined more young men than any saloon in the city"—the man on Somerset street would have attributed the origin of the blaze to the wrath of Heaven rather than to earthly enemies.

If Mr. Linke is the persecuted man he claims to be, why does he not demand a hearing before a Justice, where he may be confronted with the State's witnesses and have an opportunity to vindicate himself? The officer who served the warrant upon him on that occasion, was an unexpected visitor, and found certain citizens of the borough who will not be likely to prejudice themselves to shield Linke, drinking beer in his establishment. Does that indicate that the charges against him are groundless?

Why be tormented by the use of irritating powders, snuffs or liquids. Ely's Cream Balm, pleasant of application and a sure cure for catarrh and cold in head, can be had for 50c. It is easily applied into the nostrils, is safe and pleasant and is curing the most obstinate cases. It gives relief at once.

When baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she was a Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

The proprietors of Ely's Cream Balm do not claim it to be a cure-all, but a sure remedy for catarrh, colds in the head and hay fever. It is not a liquid or a snuff, but is easily applied into the nostrils. It gives relief at once.

PEERLESS DYES Are the BEST.

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—Oh, for a Y. M. C. A. building.

—The work of beautifying the depot park is well under way.

—Next Monday evening the City Council meets in regular session.

—House hunters are already scouring the city in search of desirable residence places.

—Decided improvements have recently been made about the interior of the electric light station on Madison avenue.

—The Street Commissioner has actually taken some of the mud off of Park avenue between the railroad and Front street.

—During the high wind of January 23, the frame of a barn in course of erection at Netherwood, was totally demolished.

—A bill to enable people to have their wills probated before they die will be introduced in the Legislature this Winter.

—The Young Men's meeting of the Y. M. C. A. will, commencing February 2, be held hereafter on Sunday afternoons at 4:15 P. M.

—The cornice and front ornaments on the new Hand building on West Second Street, were designed by Mr. Jacob [illegible].

—Warren Engine Company, No. 3, of North Plainfield, has not gone out of existence. The company has merged itself into a social club.

—Considerable difficulty is experienced in getting stone fast enough to complete the work on the county road between the city and Elizabeth.

—Residents of Highland Park, a suburb of New Brunswick, have subscribed $10,000 for the erection of a new Reformed church building there.

—The ladies' "Y" served an enjoyable supper to the members of the Y. M. C. A., Devotional committee, who were present at the meeting Thursday evening.

—Before you waste too much fear on the prospects of an "ice famine," remember that [illegible] did not cut a pound of ice from his lake last year, until February 11.

—Fifty of the men employed on the county roads were discharged on Saturday, and others will be laid off from time to time in order to cut down the expenses.

—The Good Samaritans, a society of colored people, held a festival in Manning's Hall, a few evenings since, and the society was financially benefited by the project.

—A special meeting of the Co-operative Society of this city was announced to take place at Laing's Hall, last evening but there was not a quorum present, and the meeting was adjourned indefinitely.

—The waltz is becoming unpopular and is being superseded by square-dances with the graceful minuet figures. If the waltz should be discarded entirely it would remove one of the greatest objections to dancing.

—Mr. H. H. Brokaw has assumed the care of his father's real estate business in North Plainfield during the latter's sickness. He will be pleased to show a large line of desirable properties to those wishing to buy or rent.

—Some of the ice dealers here will entertain hopes of securing at least a portion of their crop of ice from the lakes in this vicinity. All of the dealers are ready to harvest their crop as soon as the ice is of sufficient thickness.

—It is rumored that the Elizabeth bowlers object to the Fanwood club entering the new league for teams of five men. They say the latter's alleys are so short in the run, that it breaks a bowler all up for a week afterwards.

—Judge Codington reprimanded and suspended sentence on a prisoner brought before him on Monday charged with taking Mr. James [illegible]' horse out of the stable, Sunday, without leave, and driving it about the country.

—The Fireman's Herald, in its issue of the 23d inst., heartily endorses Mayor Male's sentiments concerning the Plainfield Fire Department in his annual message to the City Council presented at a recent meeting of that body.

—A sociable will be given in T. A. B. Association Hall, under the auspices of St. Mary's T. A. B. Society, on Thursday evening February 6. The committee of arrangements consists of Messrs. J. O'Rourke, J. Welsh, J. Roth, G. Butcher and J. C. Creamy.

—The back draft in the chimney of the house occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Louis VanAlstine, on Webster place, filled the parlor with smoke and frightened the inmates so that an alarm was sent out and the fire department raced through the streets shortly after noon Monday.

—At the business meeting of the Woman's Temperance Aid Society, Tuesday, a plan, which has been in contemplation for some months, was proposed and will probably be carried into effect speedily, to establish a Boy's League, in connection with the other work at Reform Hall.

—Prof. Wm. R. Harper, of Yale, will deliver a free lecture on the book of Joel, in the Crescent Avenue church, on Friday at 8 P. M. In this lecture he will illustrate his inductive studies. The Young People's Association invite all who are interested in Bible study, to attend.

—The work of the Plainfield Camera Club, to be displayed this year at the Y. M. C. A. rooms, beginning Friday evening of this week, will include even more of merit, quantity and interest than ever before. Mr. Day will have a flash light photograph of those who are present Friday evening.

—The facilities for turning out work at the Pond Tool Works, since the [illegible], has been [illegible] crippled. When the epidemic was at its worst, it is said, 125 of the employees were at home sick. One day this week there were forty employees laid up with la grippe.

—A Flemington conductor on the New Jersey Central Railroad, left two boxes of cigars in one of the cars detached from an evening train at Dunellen, Tuesday night, and did not notice his mistake until he arrived at Somerville. The man telegraphed back to Dunellen and station agent Carpenter found the cigars and forwarded them to Somerville.

OBITUARY.

Elizabeth Steele March.

After a long but painless illness, and a wasting away from consumption, the death occurred on Saturday evening at seven o'clock of Elizabeth Steele, the wife of Ex-Councilman Francis E. March. At five o'clock realizing that her end was near, Mrs. March gathered those in the house around her bed and requested them to sing "Jesus Lover of My Soul." The bereaved husband who has been very ill since the beginning of the year, was just able to leave his bed and walk into the room to bid his wife a last farewell.

Mrs. March was born April 5, 1834, and is a daughter of Daniel R. Steele, of Jerseyville, Ill., who originally owned the "Steele Farm" in North Plainfield which included what is now known as Washington Park. She leaves two daughters with their father on Earth, while she joins her two sons in Heaven.

The funeral services were held at the house, 125 Madison avenue, on Monday at three o'clock, the Rev. D. J. Yerkes, D. D., officiating. Interment was made in Evergreen cemetery, Tuesday, upon the arrival of Mrs. March's father from Illinois.

PERSONALIA.

Mrs. M. M. Walker, of North avenue, is visiting her sister, Mrs. William Demler, of Washingtonville.

Miss Rachie Wilson, of Rahway, is visiting the Misses Nellie and Minnie [illegible], of 132 West Front street.

Miss Lucy M. Dunham, of No. 7 West Fifth street, has been confined to the house with la grippe since Monday.

Assemblyman Ulrich's Trenton address during the Legislative session is at the "Windsor," rooms Nos. 100 and 101.

Mr. Percy H. Stewart, of this city, was one of the Seniors at Yale, elected Friday on the "Promenade Committee."

The engagement is announced of Miss Annie B. [illegible], of North Plainfield, and Mr. David A. McIntyre of Newark.

Councilman Newhall and family left Friday afternoon for Old Point Comfort. They will be absent until the first of February.

Miss Annie Buckley of West Fourth street, has returned from a three weeks visit with her parents at Rosedale, Nova Scotia.

Past Commander Atwood of Winchester Post, No. 73, G. A. R., now of Brooklyn, visited members of the post on Thursday.

Patrick McCoy, of No. 71 West Third street, died Friday afternoon of pneumonia. Funeral Monday morning from St. Mary's church.

At a regular communication of Unity Lodge, No. 102, K. of P. of this city, held January 22, Mr. Jeremiah Van Winkle, Jr., took the third degree.

Miss Lizzie Gavin, organist of St. Joseph church, is recovering from an attack of la grippe. She was able to resume her duties Sunday.

Mary Ellen Daly, daughter of Mrs. Mary Daly, of No. 40 West Sixth street, died Friday morning, in her 13th year. Funeral from St. Mary's church, Sunday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Flemming of Park avenue, gave a reception from four to six o'clock, afternoon of Jan. 22, that was attended by many of the society people of this city and New York.

The Rev. Mr. Reilly, of All Saints Episcopal church, at Scotch Plains, is improving, but is not yet able to attend to his duties. W. J. Leonard of this city, had charge of his services Sunday.

E. W. Hedges, M. D., returned to this city, Friday, after a few days' rest at his father's home in Chester, N. J. His sister, Miss Hedges, who has been seriously ill for some weeks, is convalescing rapidly.

A masquerade was held last evening at the home of Mr. George Wyckoff in Dunellen. About forty couple were present from this city, Somerville and elsewhere. Prof. Frazee furnished the music. Supper was also served.

The venerable Abram Runyon, who lived for many years in this city, is seriously ill at his home in Newark. He is nearly ninety years old, the father of Ex-Chancellor Runyon, and uncle of Mr. Albert Runyon, of Duer street, North Plainfield.

Miss Ella Coakley entertained a few of her young friends at the home of her aunt, Mrs. N. W. French, on West Fourth street, Thursday evening. The occasion was one of much enjoyment, and it will be long remembered by those who participated.

G. Q. Dolliver, of Manning avenue, for many years in the employ of the Central Railroad of N. J., as head carpenter and now a bookkeeper in one of the offices at Jersey City, was presented with a gold watch recently, by his friends in the employ of the road.

Dr. T. S. Davis, whose handsome carriage horse was killed by an accident a few days ago, has just received a beautiful dapple grey mare, which he will use in connection with his professional duties. The animal was sent to the doctor by his family, and it is a beauty.

The death occurred at her home on Franklin place, Tuesday, Jan. 21, of Mrs. Alexander M. Earle. The cause was nervous prostration. Mrs. Earle was in the fifty-second year of her age. Funeral services were held at the house, on Friday afternoon at 2:45 o'clock.

The young gentleman who has just been put in charge of the Crescent club house, is Fred Spencer who not long ago was noted in Cleveland as one of the best amateur pitchers in the base ball fraternity. He may fool some of Plainfield's visiting talent with his curves, before next Fall.

An evening social was held at the home of Mr. G. S. Whitlock, No. 73 West Fifth street, Thursday, by the "Silent Four." A large number of young people from this city and vicinity were present and a very social and enjoy[illegible] was had by all. Prof. O'Reilly furnished the music for dancing which lasted until an early hour this morning.

Probably the most beautiful of the women in the Corsair company that appears in Music Hall, to-morrow evening, is Estelle Clinton, and she is a charming actress also who has a future before her. She was originally in the Casino company, New York, on a large salary, but when Edward Rice wants a handsome woman in his cast he does not hesitate about the price.

The marriage was celebrated very quietly in the Madison avenue Baptist church, New York, Saturday, of Miss Jennie Clarkson, the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. R. Clarkson of this city, to Mr. Stephen Godfrey. Mr. and Mrs. Godfrey will be at home, Tuesday evening, February 4, from eight to ten o'clock, at The Hamilton, Fifth avenue and 43d street, New York.

A[illegible] paper frequently, [illegible] anonymous communication was sent the Plainfield [illegible] the wife of [illegible] prominent merchant of the city was "out [illegible] gripped [illegible]." THE PRESS, [illegible] unswerving policy, would not [illegible] the item unless it knew of its truth. But [illegible] in dire need of something [illegible] inserted the notice. The item, as suspected, was false.

The many friends in this city of Miss Gertrude Cornell, who was a Summer resident here, will be glad to learn that she has recently passed through a very successful surgical operation at St. Andrew's Infirmary, Second avenue, New York city. Miss Cornell fell from a hammock, some years ago sustaining injuries to her spine, which necessitated the operation. The patient is yet very much prostrated, and it will be a long time before she will be able to leave the Infirmary.

The condition of Assessor Isaac Brokaw, of the Borough, was deemed to be so critical, Sunday that Dr. Janeway of New York was wired for consultation. It was midnight before a reply was received in which he said that it was impossible for him to come to Plainfield before 7:30 this evening. The patient though still dangerously ill, was, however, so much better on Monday that a consultation is not immediately deemed necessary. Inflammation of the bowels and liver, is the main trouble.

The Rev. and Mrs. W. R. Richards—whose sudden departure for the South because of the former's ill health, was first told of in THE PRESS—are now at Hampton, Va., where Mr. Richards' has a sister who has been for some years bound heart and hand in the glorious work of educating the negro at the Institute of that place. Monday Mr. and Mrs. Richards' enjoyed the tenth anniversary of their wedding day. During their absence, Mr. Richards' mother and sister of Litchfield, Conn., are at the parsonage here.

Mr. S. A. Baines, of Netherwood, spoke at Hope chapel, Sunday evening.

Mr. John P. Munn sailed Saturday on steamer "Adirondack," for a trip to the West Indies.

Miss Grace Phillips of Evona, spent Monday with Miss Ida Lorton, of West Fifth street.

Mrs. Baner, of Brooklyn, New Jersey, is visiting her sister, Mrs. P. M. Demarest, of Craig place.

Freeholder Andrew M. Vanderbeek is recovering slowly but surely from his recent dangerous illness.

Mr. Edward Nelson was able to go out Tuesday for the first time and enjoy the bright sunshine and crisp air.

Miss Jennie VanWinkle of Madison avenue, started today for a two weeks' visit among friends at Asbury, N. J.

Mr. Wm F. Gordon and Mr. Jack Leonard, both of Trenton, were the guests on Sunday of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson Fulper, of North avenue.

The Presbyterian church at Dunellen is yet without a pastor. On Sunday next, Rev. Mr. Wilson, of Nebraska will occupy the pulpit in that church.

Mr. Frank Newman is home for a week's vacation from the Boston Institute of Technology where he is taking a three-years' course in architecture.

Mr. Eldon Lowry, of Dunellen, is receiving the congratulations of his friends over the arrival of an heir, whose age will be recorded from Sunday.

Master Fred Armstrong, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas S. Armstrong, of North Plainfield, is so much better that he is able to be up and round his room again.

Master Theodore Hazell, the younger of the sons of Mr. T. E. Hazell who were left motherless a few days ago, is so far recovered from his severe illness as to be round again.

Miss Charlotte Allen, who entertained the friends of the Boys' Branch of the Y. M. C. A., at Reform Hall, on Tuesday, was the guest during her stay in this city, of Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson.

Mrs. Burrows, aged 82 years, a lady living on Washington avenue, fell down a flight of stairs, Monday night, fracturing her right arm. Dr. O. L. Jenkins attended the unfortunate woman.

The venerable Wm. C. Ayres, one of Plainfield's oldest inhabitants, is very ill at his home on West Second street, of prostration of the entire nervous system. No one is allowed to see him.

A reception to a number of the young society people of Plainfield, was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Simonds, Monday night, at Broadway and Ninth street. There was dancing and supper.

The Rev. Marvin R. Vincent, formerly of the Church of the Covenant in New York city, and now a Professor in the Union Theological Seminary, preached in the pulpit of the Crescent avenue church, Sunday.

The condition of Cornelius Stryker, the painter, who fell from a swinging platform at the Netherwood Hotel, over a week ago, is said to be very much improved, and his friends now look for his speedy recovery.

Special Officer S. R. Hope of this city, received a telegram Tuesday, announcing the sudden dangerous illness of his father, who resides at Trenton. Mr. Hope's wife is just recovering from an attack of la grippe.

Mr. A. M. Frazee, of this city, who has himself traveled more miles than would take him twenty times round the World, greeted Nellie Bly with a shake of the hand and a hearty welcome when she landed in New York, Saturday.

Mrs. Elizabeth Schneider, mother-in-law of Officer Charles Giesse, while on the way to church on Sunday morning, fell on the sidewalk in front of Dr. Probasco's residence on East Front street, and painfully injured her right arm and left leg.

In his lecture at the Crescent Avenue church on Friday night, Prof Harper will illustrate his method of studying one book of the Bible as a unit. He will take up the book of Joel. The young people's association invite all their friends to attend.

First Assistant Chief E. A. Laine, of the Plainfield Fire Department, was whittling a block of wood in his barber shop on North avenue, on Tuesday when the penknife slipped, cutting a deep gash in the palm of his left hand. Dr. Davis dressed the wound.

Mr. J. Fred MacDonald has leased his present home on East Second street, to the Rev. Mr. Schenck who will occupy it in the Spring. Mr. and Mrs. MacDonald intend taking up their residence with Mr. MacDonald's mother in the old homestead at Front and Peace streets.

The death occurred in North Plainfield Tuesday, of Anna, younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David W. King. The little one was just past three years of age. She died of membranous croup. The funeral took place this afternoon at 1:30 P. M. Interment at Bound Brook.

Sunday at Westbury, L. I., occurred the death of Edmund F. Rushmore, the only brother of the father of Dr. Edward Rushmore of this city, which brother died only two weeks ago. Mr. Edmund Rushmore was a frequent visitor in Plainfield, which he esteemed highly as a health resort. He was much prostrated by the recent death of his brother, and never rallied from its effects.

By to-morrow evening it is intended, the offices of the C. L. S. C., in this city will be closed forever here to be reopened in Buffalo as soon as the carload of furniture, files, class-records and other paraphernalia arrive in that city. Secretary [illegible] will go to the new office, but of her clerks only Miss Angleman, Miss [illegible] and Miss Chamberlin will be transferred to Buffalo.

Mr. Ernest Marx of this city, who will exhibit fifty of his choicest studies in instantaneous photography at the Y. M. C. A., Thursday evening, has never before been persuaded to make a public display of his work except at the Paris Exposition of last year. There he was awarded a diploma of merit, made a member of the Legion of Honor, and offered a professorship in the French Academy of Fine Arts.

The Rev. W. R. Honeyman and wife of North Plainfield, returned Tuesday from Dover, N. J., where they attended on Monday the funeral of the late Charles C. DeHart, a brother of Mrs. Honeyman, who died on Thursday last from spinal meningitis, aged 42 years. He was an elder in the Presbyterian church at that place, and was also Superintendent of the Sunday School. He leaves a wife and three children.

Owing to the illness of the Rev. C. L. Goodrich, the Rev. M. K. Dwight supplied the pulpit of the Congregational church, last Sunday, and preached a very excellent sermon to the pleasure and profit of the hearers. Mr. Dwight was formerly pastor of the Congregational church in Fairfield, Iowa, but has retired from that active ministry for a time on account of ill health, and is now making his home on Rock View avenue, North Plainfield. He is a decided addition to the good people of this goodly city.

The funeral services over the remains of Mrs. Francis E. March, were held at her home on Madison avenue, during Monday afternoon. The Rev. D. J. Yerkes, D. D., of this city, addressed the large gathering present, and the Rev. Mr. Brown, of Tunkhannock, Pa., a college mate of Mr. March, made the closing prayer. Vocal music was given by Mrs. Myers, Miss Holmes, Mr. C. W. McCutchen and Mr. B. T. Barnes. The remains were interred in Evergreen Cemetery, Tuesday afternoon, the Rev. E. P. Ketcham offering a prayer at the grave.

DeGRAFF—MILLIKEN.

A Winter Wedding in the Crescent Avenue Church.

In the Crescent Avenue church, at six o'clock January 22, took place the marriage of Mr. James W. DeGraff of this city, and Miss Carrie Milliken, only daughter of Mr. Samuel Milliken, of Crescent avenue, the wealthy iron merchant.

The church was filled, and an unusual number of the audience were in full dress. The altar was banked with plants among which callas in bloom predominated. Miss Utter was the organist, and favored the gathering with never ceasing music. The ushers were Messrs. Robert A. Fairbairn, William T. Kirk, Ernest R. Ackerman, Herbert W. Stover, Frank Raymond and Harry V. Borden.

The bride's dress was a mass of costly lace trimmed with orange blossoms. The veil was fastened with a cluster of large diamonds. She entered on the arm of her uncle, Mr. James Milliken, of Bellefonte, preceded by her maid of honor, Miss Lilian Dorman, in white; and the bridesmaids, Miss Gussie Murray and Miss Josie Drake, in pink. The groom received the bride at the altar, where he was attended by Mr. Edward Milliken, the bride's brother. The Rev. W. R. Richards performed the ceremony.

The reception that followed at the home of the bride's parents, was a brilliant one. A wedding supper was served, and all were allowed an inspection of the quantities of costly presents received. Mr. and Mrs. DeGraff left for a short trip and will return on Monday to the pretty home at 23 East Ninth street that the groom has handsomely refurnished throughout for the bride.

The Endowment Bank.

General William Ward, Supreme Chancellor Knights of Pythias, is in Chicago, attending the session of the Board of Control of the Endowment Bank. He sends the following statement for the last quarter: Losses incurred—October, $60,000; November, $62,000; December, $34,000; total, $154,000. Resources over and above all liabilities January 1, 1890, $31,839,01.

At the Prize Ring.

It is said that about fifty sports from this city were present at the prize fight between Dwyer of Bound Brook and Tobin of Troy, which took place near South Plainfield early morning of Jan. 22. One man is reported to have won over three hundred dollars on the mill. It is also reported that the carriage owned by a Plainfielder was used to convey the defeated pugilist from the battle field.

Under Her Window.

The current number of The Suburban contains the following by a clever young literator, of Washington Park:

My love is at her window,
I can see her as I go;
She is sitting there and reading,
Rocking gently to and fro;
And I wonder what she's reading,
For so interested she
That I pass beneath unnoticed,
And my bow she fails to see.
Next time I visit her, forsooth
I'll learn from her own lips,
That the volume she was reading
Was a book of racing tips!

—George P. Taggart.

Celebrating a Tin Wedding.

Ex-Councilman S. P. T. Wilbur and wife celebrated the tenth anniversary of their wedding, Friday night, by bountifully entertaining a host of their friends. Everybody enjoyed themselves thoroughly. Many of the presents were very "unique." Among those present were:

Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Campbell, Mrs. Wm. Kelly, Mr. and Mrs. D. S. Roberts, Mrs. Addie Roberts, Mr. Harry Roberts, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Bettman, Mrs. Nelli Chandler, of Plainfield; Mrs. C. A. Campbell, Miss Minnie Campbell, Mrs. Wm Fink, Miss Carrie Fink, of Woodbridge; Mrs. L. A. Dunn, of Elizabeth; Mrs. T. J. Nicholl, Miss Lydia Townsend, Miss Florence Young, Mr. Stephen Townsend Mr. Burt Strong.

Everybody Thoroughly Entertained.

The entertainment in Reform Hall, on Tuesday, was such a success in every way, that the audience was thoroughly satisfied and the Boys' Branch of the Y. M. C. A., will reap a financial profit towards the building fund.

Mr. John Lewis was chairman of the committee that arranged the affair. Mr. Harry H. Coward, the President, being unavoidably absent, Vice President William Crawford presided and with much good taste and dignity introduced Miss Charlotte Allen. That handsome young woman gave a monologue entertainment of much originality, interest and amusement, interspersed with music by Miss Dewey. Miss Allen is a graceful and talented elocutionist, and her entertainment is not equalled in its line.

Prohibition Plainfield.

During the past year there were no licensed hotels or saloons in this city, yet the quantity of liquor and beer drank was about the same as in former years. The city got no revenue for liquor licenses last year, and the North Plainfield bottlers reaped the benefit. Of one dealer in the borough, it is said, that he paid off an eighteen hundred dollar mortgage within the past year, besides purchasing a desirable building lot near the Pond Tool Works. All of this was paid for from his receipts during the year. The same dealer, it is said, delivered over seven hundred cases of beer to his customers in this city on the two days before Christmas, which is an equivalent to fourteen hundred dozen bottles. Thus it will be seen that in spite of the fact that Plainfield was a prohibition town during 1889, the inhabitants were by no means obliged to go "dry."

Seniors on a Spree.

At the home of one of their number, Thursday evening, the boys of the Class of '90 of Stillman High School, laid aside the dignity of Seniors and made things lively with the aid of an old-fashioned candy pull. The candy could scarcely be called a success, but the "pull" was a "howling" one.

Among the many features of the evening was the fine rendering of music by Andrew Hallock of New York city. Supper was served at 11:30 by Herrmann. At a late hour the company departed, giving as they dispersed the class yell:

Rah! Rah! Rah!
Cream of 'em!
Hur-rah for the class
Of Eighteen-ninety!

The members of the P. H. S. Senior class are: Walter R. Darby, Edmund F. Nischwitz, Asa F. Randolph, Alfred P. White, Edward C. Petrie, Edward J. Peterson, Herman Simmonds, Jr., and W. W. Cottell.

A Wedding That Causes Gossip.

According to Washington despatches the census office clerks are gossiping over the marriage of Mr. Cullen and Miss Pryor, two $900 clerks in the office. The gossip is all due to the alleged fact that while Mr. Cullen is a white man, his wife has a very slight trace of African blood in her veins.

Mr. Cullen since his marriage, has been one of the clerks appointed to Dr. Carroll's office of the census, in this city. Mrs. Cullen is but 17 or 18 years of age. She is regarded as one of the most expert typewriters in the government service. She was at one time a student at Howard University, and later studied at New Haven, Conn. Last week Mr. Cullen said good bye to his few acquaintances in Plainfield and left for Philadelphia, to which city he and his wife have been detailed to assist in collecting statistics regarding the coal production.

A CITIZENS LEAGUE.

To Promote Good Order With the Help of Public Opinion.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Permit the undersigned to report the following items to your readers. The question of organizing the citizens of Plainfield and North Plainfield, so as to unite and make effectual the public sentiment in favor of good order, and the general welfare of the city and borough, was discussed at a meeting of the Ministers Association, in October last.

At a subsequent meeting held with Dr. Yerkes—at which some citizens, not clergymen, were present—a committee was appointed to report a basis for organization. That committee reported last evening, and an organization was effected, for the purposes named above. Communications, written or verbal, were received from several gentlemen who could not be present, expressing interest and sympathy with the movement—including Aaron M. Powell, L. W. Serrell, General Nagle, Charles Potter and D. E. Titsworth.

The city and borough are so related to each other that their interests are essentially one, and an organized public sentiment, wisely expressed, cannot fail to strengthen the hands of the officers of both governments; this the more because of the too common error on the part of good citizens of leaving "things to run themselves," and of supposing that a good police force and good executive officers insure success. On the contrary, the most efficient officers are weak, and sometimes powerless, for want of the support of that most potent factor in government—public opinion.

There was not time on Tuesday to complete the details of the organization, and the meeting was adjourned to a future date.

There'll be no Bad Boys in Plainfield Soon.

The Y. M. C. A., has its "Boy's Branch," a number of philanthropic people are organizing a "Boy's Club," and the Woman's Aid Society are considering a plan for a "Boy's League."

Improvements at Dunellen.

Mr. W. E. Warman, of Red Bank, who recently purchased a part of the Todd estate at Dunellen, has divided the property into building lots, and has already commenced the erection of three handsome frame dwellings on lots facing the Central Railroad station.

A New Market Man Injured.

Mr. A. L. Storms, an old man living at New Market, while attempting to board a Lehigh Valley train at Jersey City, on Monday evening, fell and was badly injured. He became unconscious and the railroad officials had him removed to a hospital. Afterward the injured man's identity became known, and Tuesday afternoon he was taken to his home at New Market, where he is now under the care of a doctor.

City Garbage Collectors Proposed.

The Plainfield Board of Health held a meeting on Tuesday, and decided upon making an effort to bring about one of the most important benefits this city needs. Accordingly the Board advertises for bids for the collecting of the city's garbage. Those offering to do the work should leave their statements in writing with George W. Rockfellow, President of the Board, at his office corner of Park and North avenues, by noon of Saturday next.

Follow This up With the Arrest of All Violators.

Chief Carey Tuesday served on the tobacco dealers of this city, the following printed notice:

MAYOR'S OFFICE, PLAINFIELD, N. J.,
January 24th, 1890.

SIR:—Your attention is called to the law of this state which enacts—

SECTION 1.—That hereafter no person or persons in this State shall knowingly sell any cigarette or cigarettes or tobacco in any of its forms, to any minor under the age of sixteen years.

It is the purpose of the authorities to see that this law is strictly enforced in the city of Plainfield.

JOB MALE, Mayor.

But the Primrose Quartette Should be Shot Dead.

One of the largest audiences of the season filled Music Hall, on Tuesday, when Rice & Dixey's road company gave "The Corsair." The show is perfect in every respect—cast, costumes and scenery. Martha Porteous cannot be excelled as a Conrad, and Messrs Udell and Hagan are great comedians, while all the girls are bright and pretty. Miss Estelle Clinton is the particular beauty of the company, and does her little part of Gulnare in the third act in a way that displays her sweet voice, pretty teeth, bright eyes and fine figure, to the additional gratification of the audience.

Programme of the Next Local Circle Meeting.

The next meeting of the Hurlbut local circle of the C. L. S. C., will be held at the home of the Misses Hasbrouck, No. 9 East Fifth street, Wednesday evening of next week, at eight o'clock. The programme will be as follows:

Roll Call—Each member to bring a question or bit of news, about the work of the Pan American Congress.

Resolutions by the Consistory.

At a meeting of the Consistory of Trinity Reformed church, held January 22, 1890, the undersigned committee was appointed to prepare a paper of condolence expressive of their feelings and sympathy in the sudden death of Mrs. T. E. Hazell, which they respectfully submit:

WHEREAS: Our Heavenly Father in His inscrutable providence has permitted the Angel of death to enter the abode of our much beloved Brother, T. E. Hazell, a member of the consistory, and suddenly taken therefrom his dearly beloved wife and mother of their four children so much needing a mother's care and love, therefore;

Resolved, That we bow humbly and submissively to the Divine will (however mysterious) in taking one of our number, who had but a few years since entered the Master's service, and whose bright Christian life and light was so full of helpfulness to us and all who knew her, as to render the providence almost inconsolable.

2d, That her earnest Christian life among us, and her testimony to the Master so clear and positive compels us to believe that our loss (although great) is her everlasting gain, and that Heaven is thus made nearer and dearer to us, by her abode there.

3d, That we tender to our dear bereaved brother our deepest heartfelt sympathies in his sad and sore experiences, and commend him and his motherless children to Him who has said, "I, even I, am He, that comforteth you."

4th, That these resolutions be entered on our church records and printed in the DAILY PRESS and a copy be given to the family bereaved.

P. P. VAN ARSDALE,
ALBERT L. FORCE,
O. W. DUNHAM.

Tickling the Palate.

The only trouble with HAMBURG FIGS is that they are so pleasant to the palate that children are apt to eat them when not absolutely necessary, if they can get hold of them surreptitiously. They will injure no one, but medicine should not be taken unless needed. 25 cents. Dose, one fig. Mack Drug Co., N. Y. For sale by J. G. Miller.

Uncle Sam and His Agents.

Uncle Sam pays his 200,000 employees, including soldiers and sailors, an average salary of $900 apiece. The average earnings of the plain, every-day citizen, who gets pay in proportion to the work he does, are about half that much, probably. This state of affairs explains, perhaps, why about 20,000,000 male American citizens make a dead set for about 50,000 offices every four years.

Bridges That Will be Seldom Used.

The New York Board of Street Openings Monday, granted permission to the Central Railroad of New Jersey and the Pennsylvania Railroad to construct across West street two iron bridges for the use of foot passengers, upon giving bonds each to the amount of $25,000 to indemnify the city against any claims for damages that may arise. The work is to be done under the direction of the Commissioner of Public Works.

The structures are to be sixteen feet above the street, shall cross in a clear span, and are at all times to be free to pedestrians.

It was stipulated that the vending of articles upon the bridges or the placing of advertising signs would not be allowed.

The New Bowling League.

A meeting was held in Westfield, on Tuesday, for the purpose of forming a bowling league of teams of 5 men each. The following clubs were represented: The Crescent League and Olympics of Plainfield, Monday Nights and Nameless of Westfield, Elizabeth Athletic Club of Elizabeth, Fanwood Club of Fanwood, and the Somerset Bowling Club of Somerville.

Mr. Burnett of the Crescents was chosen President, and Mr. Young of the Nameless, Secretary.

It was decided to adopt the name of the Central Bowling League of New Jersey. A schedule of games will be issued at the next meeting, which will be held at the Crescent League club house.

Activity Among Church People.

The Church Temperance Commission for New Jersey met in Trenton recently for purposes of counsel. The Presbyterian Synod, Newark Conference, New Jersey Conference and Methodist Protestant church were present by representatives, and the Congregational, Lutheran and Baptist were represented by letter.

It was resolved that the committee be instructed to prepare and submit to the Legislature of the State a county local option act, and to urge the passage of the same. That the Church Temperance Commission reaffirm the antagonism of the churches of New Jersey to the traffic in strong drinks, and urge the earnest prayers of Christian hearts for such legislation as may prohibit the evil.

She Didn't Stop Young Peterson, but Can Stop His Superiors.

The Editor of THE PRESS has been handed the following for publication, by the writer. It is in answer to a communication in these columns of last Thursday:

"Isaac Peterson, No. 35 Cottage place, if you can prove that I infest the streets I wish you would, and remember you will have it to prove. I want you to distinctly understand that I and the other girl didn't stop your son Thomas H. Peterson. I think more of myself than to stop and ask him any questions on the street, for it is immaterial to me whether I utter a word to him or not. I can stop your son's superiors if you only knew it. Before you publish anything else in the paper, always find out the author before you squeal. If we had stopped him we wouldn't have said anything, but we didn't and we will not have the blame on us under any circumstances at all. But it must be dropped immediately.

Engine 145 to be Experimented With.

(From the Elizabeth Journal.)

Locomotive 145, which has been in use on the Central Railroad of New Jersey between Bound Brook and Jersey City for several years, under the engineership of Charles Houston of Dunellen, has been at the downtown shops for about six weeks, for the purpose of having the experiment tried as to whether a less amount of fuel can be dispensed with, and allow the engine to make as good time as heretofore. Mr. Houston is the originator of the idea, and has high hopes of seeing his plan carried into successful operation.

The engine has received a thorough overhauling, but exactly what is to be the nature of the change to bring about the sought for result, is not explained. The expense is being borne by the company, which is anxious to see how the experiment will succeed, as it will probably effect a revolution in the running of locomotives, and save a vast quantity of coal. Engineer Houston awaits the result of the trial trip, which will be made in a day or two, with considerable interest. If successful a patent will be applied for.

MEANT FOR MERRIMENT.

"Who is the author of fiction whose skill you most admire, Mrs. Marriedayear?" Mrs. Marriedayear (promptly)—"My husband."

YOUNG WIFE—"Ah, how fortunate I am in possessing a husband who always stays at home in the evening!" Bosom Friend—"Yes; your husband never was much addicted to pleasure."

AT A First-class Restaurant—"Can you give me oysters on the half-shell to-night?" Waiter—"Yes, sir; but you will have to wait a few minutes. All our half-shells is in use at present."

A MAN, desiring to have a pet dog licensed, facetiously asked the clerk if the dog had to make a personal application. "No," was the reply. "You, as next of kin, can take out the papers."

GROCER—"I've a lot of Limburger cheese that I'm going to sell at cost. I want to stick up some taking notice of the sale. Can't you give me something?" Reddiwit—"How would 'unapproachable bargain' suit you?"

FATHER (starting down town)—"Yes, Robert, my son, keep in mind what your mother says, and always say 'Please.' Though a little word, it indicates the gentleman. Here, wife, hold my overcoat and hat; be quick about it."

THE little boy was on his knees in his little night-dress saying his prayers, and his little sister could not resist the temptation to tickle the soles of his little feet. He stood it as long as he could and then said: "Please, God, excuse me while I knock the stuffing out of Nellie."

AN event of a lifetime. Teacher (to boys in back part of the room engaged in earnest conversation)—"Boys, what are you talking about?" Confusion on part of the boys. Teacher—"Boys, I demand an explanation." One of the boys (reluctantly)—"Please, ma'am, Ike says his whiskers is beginnin' to push."

MOTHER—"Johnnie, why are you crying? I'm only going to be away a week, and your papa will be home with you." "No, he won't; he's going to Rome." "Going to Rome? Why, child, what do you mean?" "I heard him say that he would make Rome howl when you left." "Oh, indeed? Well, I won't leave you, Johnnie."

FREDERSON—"I'm awfully puzzled about what Miss Dassie said to me last evening. I asked her if I might accompany her to the ball, and she said: 'You know I have the reputation of having no nonsense about me. Well, I intend to remain true to my reputation.' While I was trying to think what she meant she went off without remembering to answer my question."

LAURA—Auntie, would I be justified in writing to a young man who has never written to me?

Auntie—Only on very important business, my dear.

Laura—Well, this is important business. I want to marry him.

INTERESTING STATISTICS.

A MILLION cigarettes are smoked in London every day.

VERMONT HAS 7,126 pensioners, according to the latest statistics.

THE excess of women over men in England and Wales is estimated at 765,000.

DURING the year ending December 1 29,984,772 persons crossed the Brooklyn bridge by railway and 3,196,667 on foot.

IT is estimated that Santa Barbara County, Cal., contains thirty bee farms, with 2,350 beehives. The output of honey this year was 40,000 pounds.

RECENTLY-compiled statistics show that during the last ten years to every forty-nine marriages performed in New Jersey there has been one divorce.

DURING the past year $6,562,753 were embezzled from corporations, private persons and the United States Government. Most of the money is being spent in Canada.

GERMAN emigration to this country is diminishing. The number of departures from January to October was about 82,000, against 96,000 for the same time last year and 100,000 in 1885.

FOR the twelve months ending with November the exports of this country amounted to $815,920,977, against $679,233,011 last year, and the imports to $771,220,167, against $716,255,705 last year.

THE immigration to this country for the last eleven months has been estimated at 407,227, against 498,591 in eleven months of 1888. France sent us the most immigrants, viz., 92,627; Scotland, 59,178; Germany, 59,600; Russia, except Poland, 41,298; Poland, 31,614; Ireland, 27,610.

THE schedule for service by the great guns is thought to be as follows: The 160-ton gun, with good luck, can be fired 95 times before becoming unfit for service; the 67-ton gun 127 times and the 45-ton gun 150 times. The cost of each round for the big one is £327; £184 for the 67-tonner and £98 for the 45-tonner.

THE United States has an area of more than 440,000 square miles of coal fields, and more than 100,000,000 tons of coal were mined in this country last year, enough to run a ring around the earth at the center 5½ feet wide and 5¼ feet thick. Competent scientists say that there is enough coal in the United States to supply the world for the next 2,000 years.

THE number of persons employed in 1888 in and about mines in the United Kingdom under the coal mines regulation act was 534,985, of whom 3,935 were women working above ground. In these mines there were 821 fatal accidents and 888 deaths. There was one fatal accident for every 652 persons employed, and one death for every 602 persons employed.

A STATISTICIAN gives the following table, showing what a comparatively small number of flowers are odoriferous: Of the 4,200 kinds of flowers which grow in Europe only 420 or 10 per cent. are odoriferous. The commonest flowers are the white ones, of which there are 1,194 kinds. Less than one-fifth of these are fragrant. Of the 951 kinds of yellow flowers, 77 are odoriferous; of the 823 red kinds, 84; of the 594 blue kinds, 31; of the 308 violet-blue kinds, 13. Of 240 kinds with combined colors, 28 are fragrant.

THERE were about 300 distinct epidemics of influenza in Europe between 1510, when the disease was first noted at Malta, and 1850. In 1729 the whole of Europe suffered severely. According to statistics published by the Novoe Vremya, the disease caused 908 deaths in London in one week, and in Vienna 60,000 persons were affected. In 1737 and 1743 there were further outbreaks, and the deaths in one week in London amounted to 1,000. In 1775 domestic animals were first attacked by it. In 1782 40,000 persons fell ill of it in St. Petersburg in twenty-four hours. In St. Petersburg quinine is now served out daily to the troops, mixed with vodka.

PHILADELPHIA is said to be the greatest novel-reading city in the country. The favorites are Dickens, George Eliot, E. P. Roe, Black and Ouida, in the order named.

GENERAL LEW WALLACE, the author of "Ben Hur," has invented a steel railroad cross-tie which, if it is as successful as the inventor claims it will be, will revolutionize railroad construction.

AMY LEVY, the young English girl who recently leaped into literary fame with her novel, "Reuben Sachs," died the other day at the age of twenty-three. She was cremated at her own request.

ALDERMAN DONOHUE, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., gained almost a world-wide reputation for his novel method of punishing a wife-beater by himself recently flogging the prisoner at the bar. A letter commending his action has been received from a French lady residing in New York.

PHILADELPHIA, which is troubled with a scarcity of room for the burial of paupers, proposes to establish a crematory for their incineration. It is apparently taken for granted that the sentiment which checks the progress of cremation's wise reform does not apply in the case of beggars.

WILLIAM BLACK says that he never writes more than three hours a day—two after breakfast and one after dinner. During the rest of the day he walks or reads or writes letters. He writes rapidly and makes few erasures. "I rarely attempt analysis," he says, "and I am never didactic. I write to please."

A MORMON colony left Utah for Canada when the United States Government began its attack upon polygamy, and settled in the Northwest Territory. An agent of the Government visited them last year, but could get no answer to his inquiries as to polygamy among them, except a copy of their articles of faith, in which polygamy is approved. They claim there is no law of the Dominion which forbids the practice, but there is likely to be one pretty soon.

OLD WORLD INTELLIGENCE.

The distilleries of Edinburgh, Scotland, produce over 4,000,000 gallons of whisky annually.

It is said there are not more than one hundred negroes in all Paris, and throughout France very few persons of African blood are to be found.

Two hundred million dollars are spent in China annually on ancestral worship alone. The ratio of gifts to income in several families ranges from one-fifth to one-third, and in no case is so small as one-tenth.

English child-life is said to wither in the delta of the Ganges, one of the malarial tracts of India. There the British race can not reproduce itself, if unmixed with Indian blood, beyond the third generation.

An Englishman has discovered the ancient porphyry quarries where the Romans obtained the stones used in their famous buildings. The quarries are ninety-six miles from the Nile, and 4,000 feet above the level of the sea.

It appears that besides having ships with no guns England has cavalrymen with no horses. For example, the Third Regiment of Household Cavalry has but 800 horses for 1,300 men, and 17,000 dragoons and hussars have but 10,000 horses. In the German army the usual proportion is 1,000 horses to 700 men.

The most high-toned dynasty in the world is that of Japan, according to a Japanese lecturer in the Berlin Academy of Oriental Languages. The Mikado is descended from the gods, and is the one hundred and twenty-first of his race. The national religion, Shintoism, possesses 8,000,000 gods and saints, and there are 120,000 temples.

It was not until last year that the Moors would permit an examination of the cliff dwellings which have long been known to exist some days' journey southwest of the city of Morocco. This strange city of the cave-dwellers is almost exactly like some of those in New Mexico and other Territories which archaeologists have explored. The dwellings were dug out of the solid rock, and many of them are over two hundred feet above the bottom of the valley.

Poaching was formerly a heinous offense in England and severely punished, but in dealing with offenders English justice is now tempered with mercy. At Ipswich a justice of the High Court of Justice ruled in the case of a poacher who had severely wounded a gamekeeper that the keeper had no right to arrest and detain poachers as he would wild beasts. He said that poaching was only a misdemeanor. The jury acquitted the poacher on the ground of self-defense.

One of the oldest industries in Egypt is artificial egg hatching, principally engaged in by Copts. There are said to be 700 establishments of this nature in the country, and the productions of chickens from the ovens is estimated at from 18,000,000 to 19,000,000 annually. The season for incubating lasts through three months of early summer. The country people bring eggs to the proprietors of the "furnace," and give two good eggs for every newly-hatched chick.

A little northeast of India is Kafiristan, whose lovely valleys are densely populated by tribes that are physically among the handsomest of Asiatics. Their country is almost a sealed book to us. Only one white man, Mr. McNair, has succeeded in crossing their threshold. About four years ago, staining his skin with walnut juice and in the guise of an Indian doctor, he pushed some way in the territory, until the suspicions of the natives became so inquisitive that he thought it prudent to retreat.

Secretary Rusk is the most eccentric member of the Cabinet. He is thoroughly democratic in his tastes, and there is an undercurrent of hostility between him and the aristocratic Secretary of State. Blaine and Rusk are about as different in tastes and habits as two men could be.

Lord Falmouth, the "racing peer," famous in English turf annals, who died recently, is said never to have made a bet in his life except once, when he bet and lost a sixpence with Mrs. Dawson, wife of his trainer, and handed her the coin beautifully set in diamonds and mounted as a brooch.

Senator Voorhees said the other day that "only those who have participated in a fierce political campaign have any idea of the wear and tear of such a life. It is not so much the speaking as the irregular hours of sleeping and eating, villainous food, riding in all kinds of railroad trains, the exposure to all kinds of weather and draughts."

The Italian Government has devised what may be a useful plan for diminishing the number of duels. Dueling in Italy is allowed under certain conditions, and it is supposed that many duels are due to the fear of those challenged that if they do not fight they will be branded as cowards. In future any Italian who calls a countryman a coward because the latter will not fight will be made to pay an extremely heavy fine.

He says that he is "in dread of being asked to Balmoral." An English critic suggests that he must have been a Socialist at heart, but others may believe that he was unnerved at the prospect of having to praise her Majesty's water-colors.

Mlle. Rosa Bonheur had the other day at Fontainebleau an experience which may be of use to many art lovers. She saw in an advertisement that there was to be sold a picture attributed to her brush. She went to the sale and found that the painting in question, though signed with her name, was not only not her handiwork, but was a "travesty" of the most [illegible] description. On her refusal to let the canvas be sold as one of her works, the auctioneer scratched out the signature.

A hitherto unknown painting by Leonardo da Vinci has been placed in the gallery of the Pinakothek in Munich, which, if genuine, is of inestimable value. The picture was bought not long ago for twenty-two marks at an auction in a small town in South Germany, and the buyer sold it at a good profit to the Pinakothek, which has had it well restored. It represents Mary with the infant Jesus in a room through the window of which one sees a hilly landscape. The Madonna, somewhat under life size, is visible down to the knees. On one side stands a glass with flowers. The picture is believed to be one of the earliest works of the great master.

ON HIS WAY HOME.

DR. TALMAGE'S LAST SERMON IN THE OLD WORLD.

Delivered at Queenstown, Ireland—"What Is in a Name?"—The Music of Two Syllables—The Word "Jesus" Fits the Tongue in Every Dialect.

Queenstown, Jan. 26.—While the steamer Arizona, from Liverpool, was lying in this harbor a few hours today waiting for the mails, many of the passengers went ashore. The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., was among the number, and took advantage of the opportunity to preach. His subject was "What Is in a Name?" and his text, Philippians ii, 9: "A name which is above every name." The eminent preacher said:

On my way from the Holy Land, and while I wait for the steamer to resume her voyage to America, I preach to you from that text, which was one of Paul's rapturous and enthusiastic descriptions of the name of Jesus. By common practice we have come to believe that there is nothing in a name, and so parents present their children for baptism regardless of the title given them, and not thinking that that particular name will be either a hindrance or a help. [illegible]

[illegible] we forget the titles of our very best friends, and we have to pause and think before we can recall the name. But can you imagine any freak of intellect in which you could forget the Saviour's designation? That word "Jesus" seems to fit the tongue in every dialect. When the voice in old age gets feeble and tremulous, and indistinct, still this regal word has potent utterance.

Jesus, I love Thy charming name,
'Tis music to my ear;
Fain would I sound it out so loud
That heaven and earth might hear.

Still further, I remark it is a beautiful name. You have noticed that it is impossible to dissociate a name from the person who has the name. So there are names that are to me repulsive—I do not want to hear them at all—while those very names are attractive to you. Why the difference? It is because I happen to know persons by those names who are cross, and sour, and snappish, and queer, while the persons you used to know by those names were pleasant and attractive. As we cannot dissociate a name from the person who holds the name, that consideration makes Christ's name so unspeakably beautiful. No sooner is it pronounced in your presence than you think of Bethlehem, and Gethsemane, and Golgotha, and you see the loving face and hear the tender voice, and feel the gentle touch. You see Jesus, the one who, though [illegible] with heavenly hierarchs, stoops down to breakfast on the fish that rough men had just hauled out of Gennesaret; Jesus, the one who, though the clouds are the dust of his feet, walked footsore on the road to Emmaus. Just as soon as that name is pronounced in your presence you think of how the shining one gave back the centurion's daughter, and how he helped the blind man to the sunlight, and how he made the cripple's crutches useless, and how he looked down into the babe's laughing eyes, and, as the little one struggled to go to him, flung out his arms around it and impressed a loving kiss on its brow, and said: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Beautiful name—Jesus! It stands for love, for patience, for kindness, for forbearance, for self sacrifice, for magnanimity. It is aromatic with all odors and accordant with all harmonies. Sometimes I see that name, and the letters seem to be made out of tears, and then again they look like glittering crowns. Sometimes they seem to me as though twisted out of the straw on which he lay, and then as though built out of the thrones on which his people shall reign. Sometimes I sound that word "Jesus," and I hear coming through the two syllables the sigh of Gethsemane and the groan of Calvary; and again I sound it, and it is all a-ripple with gladness and a-ring with hosannas. Take all the glories of book binding and put them around the page where that name is printed. On Christmas morning wreathe it on the wall.

Let it drip from harp's string and thunder out in organ's diapason. Sound it often, sound it well, until every star shall seem to shine it, and every flower shall seem to breathe it, and mountain and sea, and day and night, and earth and heaven acclaim in full chant: "Blessed be his glorious name forever. The name that is above every name."

Jesus, the name high over all,
In heaven and earth and sky.

To the repenting soul, to the exhausted invalid, to the Sunday school girl, to the snow white octogenarian, it is beautiful. The old man comes in from a long walk, and tremblingly opens the doors, and hangs his hat on the old nail, and sets his cane in the usual corner, and lies down on a couch, and says to his children and grandchildren: "My dears, I am going to leave you." They say: "Why, where are you going, grandfather?" "I am going to Jesus." And so, the old man faints away into heaven. The little child comes in from play and throws herself on your lap, and says: "Mamma, I am so sick, I am so sick." And you put her to bed, and the fever is worse and worse, until in some midnight she looks up into your face and says: "Mamma, kiss me good-by, I am going away from you." And you say: "My dear, where are you going to?" And she says: "I am going to Jesus." And the red cheek which you thought was the mark of the fever, only turns out to be the carnation bloom of heaven! Oh, yes; it is a sweet name spoken by the lips of childhood, or when by the old man.

Still further: it is a mighty name. Rothschild is a potent name in the commercial world, Cuvier in the scientific world, Irving a powerful name in the literary world, Washington an influential name in the political world, Wellington a mighty name in the military world: but tell me any name in all the earth so potent to awe, and lift, and thrill, and rouse, and agitate, and bless as this name of Jesus. That one word [illegible] and flung Newton on his face on ship's deck, and today holds 400,000,000 of the race with omnipotent spell. That name in England today means more than Victoria; in Germany, means more than Emperor William; in France, means more than Carnot; in Italy, means more than Humbert of the present or Garibaldi of the past. I have seen a man bound hand and foot in sin, satan his hard task master, in a bondage from which no human power could deliver him, and yet at the pronunciation of that one word he dashed down his chains and marched out forever free. I have seen a man overwhelmed with disaster, the last hope fled, the last light gone out, that name pronounced in his hearing, the tears dropped, the clouds scattered, and a sunburst of eternal gladness poured into his soul. I have seen a man hardened in infidelity, defiant of God, full of scoff and jeer, jocose of the judgment, reckless of an unending eternity, at the mere pronunciation of that name blanch, and cower, and quake, and pray, and sob, and groan, and believe, and rejoice. O it is a mighty name! At its utterance the last wall of sin will fall, the last temple of superstition crumble, the last juggernaut of cruelty crash to pieces. That name will first make all the earth tremble, and then it will make all the nations sing. It is to be the password at every gate of honor, the insignia on every flag, the battle shout in every conflict. All the millions of the earth are to know it. The red horse of carnage seen in apocalyptic vision, and the black horse of death, are to fall back on their haunches, and the white horse of victory will go forth, mounted by him who hath the moon under his feet, and the stars of heaven for his tiara. Other dominions seem to be giving out; this seems to be enlarging. Spain has had to give up much of its dominion. Austria has been wonderfully depleted in power. France had to surrender some of her favorite provinces. Most of the thrones of the world are being lowered, and most of the scepters of the world are being shortened; but every Bible printed, every tract distributed, every Sunday school class taught, every school founded, every church established, is extending the power of Christ's name. That name has already been spoken under the Chinese wall, and in Siberian snow cabin, in Brazilian grove and in eastern pagoda. That name is to swallow up all other names. That crown is to cover up all other crowns. That empire is to absorb all other dominions.

All crimes shall cease, and ancient frauds shall fail,
Returning Justice lift aloft her scale;
Peace o'er the world her olive wand extend,
And white robed innocence from heaven descend.

Still further: it is an enduring name. You clamber over the fence of the graveyard and pull aside the weeds, and you see the faded inscription on the tombstone. That was the name of a man who once ruled all that town. The mightiest names of the world have either perished or are perishing. Gregory VI, [illegible], Conrad I of Germany, Richard I of England, Louis XVI of France, Catharine of Russia—mighty names once, that made the world tremble; but now, none so poor as to do them reverence, and to the great mass of the people they mean absolutely nothing; they never heard of them. But the name of Christ is to endure forever. It will be perpetuated in art, for there will be other Raphaels to depict the Madonna, there will be other Ghirlandajos to represent Christ's baptism; there will be other Bronzinos to show us Christ visiting the spirits in prison; other Giottos to appall our sight with the crucifixion. The name will be preserved in song, for there will be other Alexander Popes to write the "Messiah," other Dr. Youngs to portray his triumph, other Cowpers to sing his love. It will be preserved in costly and magnificent architecture, for Protestantism as well as Catholicism is yet to have its St. Marks and its St. Peters. That name will be preserved in the literature of the world, for already it is embalmed in the best books, and there will be other Dr. Paleys to write the "Evidences of Christianity," and other Richard Baxters to describe the Saviour's coming to judgment. But above all, and more than all, that name will be embalmed in the memory of all the good of earth and all the great ones of heaven. Will the delivered bondmen of earth ever forget who freed them? Will the blind man of earth forget who gave him sight? Will the outcast of earth forget who brought him home? No! No!

To destroy the memory of that name of Christ, you would have to burn up all the Bibles and all the churches on earth, and then in a spirit of universal arson go through the gate of heaven, and put a torch to the temples and the towers and the palaces, and after all that city was wrapped in awful conflagration, and the citizens came out and gazed on the ruins—even then, they would hear that name in the thunder of falling tower and the crash of crumbling wall, and see it inwrought in the fiery banners of flame, and the redeemed of the Lord on high would be happy yet and cry out: "Let the palaces and the temples burn, we have Jesus left!" "Blessed be his glorious name for ever and ever. The name that is above every name."

[illegible] by what name you will call Christ when you meet him in heaven. You know he has many names. Will you call him Jesus, or the Anointed One, or the Messiah, or will you take some of the symbolical names which on earth you learned from your Bible?

Wandering some day in the garden of God on high, [illegible] you may look up into his face and say: "My Lord, thou art the rose of Sharon and the lily of the valley."

Some day, as a soul comes up from earth to where the [illegible] in the firmament, and shine as a star for ever and ever, and the luster of a useful life shall break forth, tremulous and beautiful, you may look up into the face of Christ and say: "My Lord, thou art a brighter star—the morning star—[illegible] forever."

Wandering some day until the fountains of life that toss in the sunlight and fall in crash of pearl and amethyst in golden and crystalline urn, and you wander up the round banked river to where it first begins its silver on the rock, and out of the chalices of loveliness drink to honor and everlasting joy, you may look up into the face of Christ and say: "My Lord, thou art the fountain of living water."

Some day, wandering amid the lambs and sheep in the heavenly pastures, feeding by the rock, rejoicing in the presence of him who brought you out of the wolfish wilderness to the sheepfold above, you may look up into his loving and watchful eye and say: "My Lord, thou art the shepherd of the everlasting hills."

But there is another name you may select. I will imagine that heaven is done. Every throne has its king. Every harp has its harper. Heaven has gathered up everything that is worth having. The treasures of the whole universe have poured into it. The song full. The realm full. The mansions full. Heaven full. The sun shall set afire with splendor the domes of the temples, and burnish the golden streets into a blaze, and be reflected back from the solid pearl of the twelve gates, and it shall be noon in heaven, noon on the river, noon on the hills, noon in all the valleys—high noon. Then the soul may look up, gradually accustoming itself to the vision, shading the eyes as from the almost insufferable splendor of the noonday light, until the vision can endure it, then crying out: "Thou art the sun that never sets!"

At this point I am staggered with the thought that notwithstanding all the charm in the name of Jesus, and the fact that it is so easy a name, and so beautiful a name, and so potent a name, and so enduring a name, there are people who find no charm in those two syllables. O come this day and see whether there is anything in Jesus. I challenge those of you who are farther from God to come at the close of this service and test with me whether God is good, and Christ is gracious, and the Holy Spirit is omnipotent. I challenge you to come and kneel down with me at the altar of mercy. I will kneel on one side of the altar and you kneel on the other side of it, and neither of us will rise up until our sins are forgiven, and we arrive, in the words of the text, all honor to the name of Jesus—you pronouncing it, I pronouncing it—the name that is above every name.

His worth if all the nations knew,
Sure the whole earth would love him too.

O that God today, by the power of his holy spirit, would roll over you a vision of that blessed Christ, and you would begin to weep and pray and believe and rejoice. You have heard of the warrior who went out to fight against Christ. He knew he was in the wrong, and while waging the war against the kingdom of Christ, an arrow struck him and he fell. It pierced him in the heart, and lying there, his face to the sun, his life blood running away, he caught a handful of the blood that was rushing out in his right hand, and held it up before the sun and cried out: "O Jesus, thou hast conquered!" And if today the arrow of God's spirit piercing your soul, you felt the truth of what I have been trying to proclaim, you would surrender now and forever to the Lord who bought you. Glorious name! I know not whether you will accept it or not; but I will tell you one thing here and now, in the presence of angels and men, I take him to be my Lord, my God, my pardon, my peace, my life, my joy, my salvation, my heaven! "Blessed be his glorious name forever. The name that is above every name." "Hallelujah! unto him that sitteth upon the throne and unto the lamb for ever and ever. Amen and amen and amen."

The Old Folks.

I am keeping a complete file of that department, and have done so ever since it commenced. Among others who are doing the same thing is a gentleman in London—Savel by name—who frequently writes for evidence to confirm or more correctly disprove the statements of your correspondents. He is responsible for an elaborate argument that the biblical limit of three score years and ten is seldom exceeded by more than twenty years, and that the centenarian is a myth. When Montefiore celebrated the centennial of his birth, Savel saved his theory by ringing in the old [illegible] about exceptions proving rules, and every time he gets confirmation of an American centenarian he comforts himself and his friends by criticising the American system of registering births.

But the English papers give particulars of a very remarkable case nearer his home. A Yorkshire lady named Bilderbaw was reported to be 106 years old, and Savel lost no time in going to Yorkshire to "dispel the illusion." For two weeks he conscientiously hunted up local records and church registers of christenings. In his report he says: "There can be no doubt this venerable lady was born on oak apple day, 1783. I found her hale and hearty, but opposed to talking to me, because some one told her I was a doctor, and she expects to die from the effects of medicine. I found her only surviving son, who is over 80, several grandchildren nearly 50, great-grandchildren as old as 25, and at least three of her great-great-grandchildren are attending the village school." Such testimony from such a skeptic is very gratifying to old people like myself.—Interview in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Just How to Cut a Justice's Gown.

The supreme court is a place of traditions and precedents, and even the cut and make of the gowns of the justices are so well defined by custom that there is but little scope left for the individual taste of the wearer.

An authority on this subject says that the gown is made of wide straight widths. At the bottom it is three yards and a quarter wide, and it comes down to the ankles. The gown has a narrow hem around the bottom and a broad one straight down the front. At the top it is gauged to a yoke, which is short on the shoulders and forms a deep scallop at the back. This yoke has a silk lining between the outside and the inner one of silk. The sleeves are a yard and a quarter wide and reach to the hands. The lining of the sleeves is formed by doubling the material at the bottom, turning it up on the inside, and placing it about a quarter of a yard above the bottom to a narrower silk lining, which nicely fits the justice's arm. The arrangement makes the lower part of each sleeve appear to be a wide, loose puff. The sleeves are gauged to a yoke on the shoulders with many rows of gauging, but not so many as at the back of the gown, where it is a quarter of a yard deep.

One woman has made these gowns for the last forty years, and she gets $100 for every one of them. They are made alike, the only difference being in the material, the chief justice wearing black Chinese satin, while his associates are robed in black silk. The chief justice always wears a new gown when he swears in a president. The new gown is always subject to a good deal of criticism by the older justices, and its fit is closely scanned.—Boston Herald.

The Crazy Quilt Craze.

Paris is afflicted with the crazy quilt craze, from which this country suffered a few years ago. A Paris paper says: "All the world has set itself 'crazy.' Having emptied their drawers and cabinets, despoiled the linings of their old dresses and their used up hats, they have addressed themselves to the dressmaker and the modiste: 'As little as you please; the more it will be little, the more you will send, and the more you will render me happy,' and letters being sent to the different furnishers of the Rue de la Paix, they receive some days afterward little post packages filled with clippings of the latest creations." The French woman tire of such a fad sooner than the fair American, and the craze will not afflict Paris long.

Fashion's Gloves.

Mrs. Morton, wife of the vice president, has the credit of being always the most elegantly gloved woman of any assembly. When the occasion demands, she wears them above the elbow, as no device can save them from wrinkles if they end anywhere on the upper arm. They are supplied to her by a Paris firm, are suede and very light tan in color. Mrs. Morton considers the most glorious toilet ruined if the gloves are not faultless in tone and fit.

A gentleman recently returned from Brazil writes: "Incredible as it may appear to this day there are many of the sacred images in various provinces of Brazil, especially those of Minas Geraes, Para and Pernambuco, who are borne on the active list of the army, and, through legally constituted guardians, receive the regular salaries of the rank assigned them. At intervals these images are promoted, and receive (by terrestrial deputy) arrears of salary and increase from date of appointment."

An illustration of the continual force of the wind at a great elevation may be seen by the fact that in less than seven weeks after the flag on the summit of the Eiffel tower was raised it was almost entirely destroyed. A small portion of the center alone remained.

A remarkable spot in Vermont is the farming town of Waltham, which contains 5,760 acres of land and has 250 inhabitants. It has no post-office, church, town house, poor house, store, lawyer, doctor, blacksmith's shop, nor even a bridge, and yet it is one of the thriving towns of Addison County. Its taxes are merely nominal.

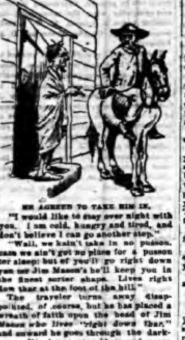
A LIE THAT DIDN'T PAY.

He Claimed to Be a Preacher Who Wasn't Ready to Preach.

They Gave Him Shelter, Expecting Him to Stir Up Their Feelings With a Sermon, But He Stole Away Through a Hole in the Roof.

COPYRIGHT 1890.

To be overtaken by night in the loneliest part of East Tennessee is to the traveler a condition to be lamented. The road is rough, and the deep valleys have gathered a darkness so dense that they seem the very bottomless pits of blackness. A ray of yellowish light, trembling its way through the gloom, comes down from a hill where dogs are barking. The traveler is gladdened, and, riding up to a log cabin, shouts: "Halloo." Some one opens the door.



HE AGREED TO TAKE HIM IN.

"I would like to stay over night with you. I am cold, hungry and tired, and don't believe I can go another step."

"Wall, we hain't take in no passon, case we ain't got no place fur a passon ter sleep; but ef you'll go right down yan ter Jim Mason's he'll keep you in the finest sorter shape. Lives right dow thar at the foot of the hill."

The traveler turns away disappointed, of course, but he has placed a wreath of faith upon the head of Jim Mason who lives "right down thar," and onward he goes through the darkness. His horse stumbles, and some times he has to stop and feel his way. Mile after mile is passed, it seems, but no beam of light comes trembling out to meet him. He curses the man who has lied to him, and in his anger he thinks of finding his way back and choking the scoundrel, when suddenly a light down the valley warms his heart. He rides up to a cabin. "Halloo." Door is opened; man pokes his head out.

"Mr. Jim Mason live here?"

"What do you want with him?"

"I want to stay all night."

"Oh, 'lowed mebbe you wanted ter snatch him up 'fore' the Gran' Jury. Yes, I live here."

"Well, I was told away back yonder, I don't know how far, that you would accommodate me for the night."

"Red-headed feller was it that told you?" he asked, still standing with his head poked out.

"I don't know; it was too dark to see."

"Wall, if it was a red-headed feller it was my son-in-law, an' I reckon he's the biggest liar in East Tennessy."

"I don't know who it was, but the question is, can I stay?"

"Question's mighty easy answered. You kain't."

"But, my dear sir, I cannot go any further."

"Blessed to you fur callin' me a dear sar, but I reckon you'll hafter go furder. Sam Meyhew lives right down thar an' I think he'd be glad to take you. No use in talkin' now; kaint take you. Jest tell Sam that you air from Texas an' know his folks that went out thar three years ago. Tell him you knowed Alf and Tobe an' the rest of 'em. My brother Pete went out thar with them. Community lost a good man when Pete left, I tell you. Tall rawboned feller that could lift one side of a steer."

I was the traveler, and I saw my chance. No casuistry could stand up against such inducements to tell a lie—yes, so great a necessity of it. I would deceive him.

"My dear sir, I am from Texas, sure enough, and I do know his people though, of course, not intimately."

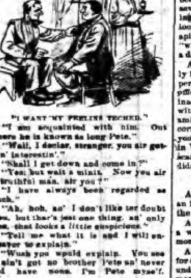
"Know Alf?"

"Yes."

"An' Tobe?"

"I do."

"Look here, you mout know my brother Pete, that lives out thar in Calhoun County."



"I WANT MY FEELINS TECHED."

"I am acquainted with him. Out there he is known as long Pete."

"Wall, I declar, stranger, you air gettin' interestin'."

"Shall I get down and come in?"

"Yes; but wait a minit. Now you air a truthful man, air you?"

"I have always been regarded as such."

"Ah, hoh, an' I don't like ter doubt you, but thar's jest one thing, an' only one, that looks a little suspicious."

"Tell me what it is and I will endeavor to explain."

"Wush you would explain. You see I ain't got no brother Pete an' never did have none. I'm Pete myse'f. Knowed you was a rascal soon as I heard you speak. Good night."

He shut the door and I turned away. My horse stumbled, so rough was the way, and at one time fell to his knees. It must have been twelve o'clock when I saw another light. When I yelled a man opened the door.

"Who's thar?"

Another lie might be successful. I would take a desperate chance.

"I am a preacher," I answered. "Cold, hungry, tired and lost in this awful night of darkness. Can you take me in?"

"What sort of a preacher?"

"Methodist."

"Wall, I reckon he ken," a woman's voice answered. "Jest get right down an' come in, an' Dick you take the brother's hoss. Bless my life! the idea of a preacher bein' lost sich a night as this. Walk right in, brother."

"Mighty glad ter see you, brother. Hain't been a preacher at my house fur a powerful long time."

He leaned over and placing one hand on my knee, gazed affectionately into my face.

"Dick," exclaimed his wife, "don't eat the brother up, fur mussy sake."

"No, Puss," he rejoined. "I love you too well ter deprive you of that air pleasure. Brother, what is yo' name?"

"Sanderson," I answered.

"Wall, I am powerful glad to see you. Puss slip out thar an' snatch the feathers offen the dominecker hen and cook her fur brother Sanderson. Wake up Sim an' tell him thar's er preacher in the house. What sort of a hoss air you ridin'?"

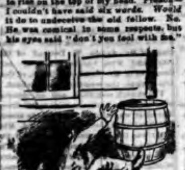
"A pretty fair animal."

"Wall, I reckon we ken strike up a trade ter morrow before church time."

"Before church time?"

"Yes; the meetin' house is right down thar in the holler; so you didn't miss it so mighty fur after all. Don't pay no 'tention ter that noise. It's only the dominecker hen a squawlin'. Better squawl, too, fur when that wife of mine spreads the palms of her hands out on a hen, why the hen's life ends pretty soon atterwards, if not right thar. Mighty good thing they sent you, fur our regular preacher is sick an' kaint fill the pulpit an' the folks don't know it, but I reckon you heard of it an' come to take his place."

I must have looked bad at that moment: indeed my hair must have begun to rise on the top of my head. Preach—I couldn't have said six words. Would it do to undeceive the old fellow. No. He was comical in some respects, but his eyes said "don't you fool with me."



THE ESCAPE.

The woman entered: "Fur pity sake, Dick, air you still tryin' ter eat the brother up? A passon would think that you never hurt nobody in your life, you air so lovin', but Sam Hettis wouldn't think so."

"Wall, he told me a lie, Puss, an' I won't stand that from nobody. I don't mind a man cheatin' me outen a dime once in a while, but it won't do fur a passon ter lie ter me about nothin' a' tall."

"Come on, brother, an eat a bite," said the woman.

"I expect a powerful sermon from you termorrer, brother," my affectionate host continued. "We ain't had our feelin's stirred up in some time an' we want 'em stirred. Jest want you ter pile doctrine up on that pulpit 'till you'd think it was a fodder stack. That's the only way to please our folks."

We returned to the sitting room. Something had to be done.

"Now, brother," said the host, "jest step right up thar an' go to bed, fur you'll need a little sleep."

"Thank you, but let me go out and see about my horse."

"Oh, no; I've fixed him all right."

"But I'd rather look after him again."

"Wall, I'll go out and see to him. You jist must sleep, fur we want a powerful sermon termorrer. Take off yo' shoes right down here by the fire."

"No, I'll take them off up stairs."

The room above was reached by means of a ladder. I bade them good night and climbed up. My intention was to escape before daylight. I could not help but groan when I had glanced about the room. There was no window, and I could not escape through the room below. I must make a hole through the roof," I mused.

Would they never stop talking! At last they were quiet. The clap-boards must have been held down by spikes. It was awful work, but at last I succeeded in making an opening large enough. To get out on the roof was an easy matter, but how was I to get down? I crawled to one corner, and, in trying to climb down, slipped and fell off. I fell on a dog. It must have killed him, for nothing far removed from the grave could have sounded such a note of despair. The old man did not awake. I roamed round and round trying to find the stable. Found it at last.

I mounted and rode away. My horse was so tired, notwithstanding his f od and rest that he traveled with difficulty; but I urged him on. Daylight came and then I cursed myself. I had left my horse, a magnificent animal and had taken an old stiff-jointed, knock-kneed thing that would not have brought ten dollars on the public square of a village. Should I go back? Oh, no. I rode, or stumbled on, until the old plug gave out, and then I walked and carried my saddle.

OPIE P. READ.

PRESS PLUNDER.

A paper says: "Notwithstanding the heavy rain on Friday there was a short supply of milk on Saturday morning."

An editor, puffing air-tight coffins, said: "No person having once tried one of these coffins will ever use any other."

A beggar held out his hand. "I haven't a cent," said the gentleman. "I didn't specify the coin," responded the mendicant.

"Try our surpassing coffee with pure, rich cream!" echoed the hungry wayfarer as he read the restaurant sign. "Why, all 'em adjectives just fills a feller clean up to der neck. Dat bloke's advertisin' is enough to drive away custom!"

An old maid in Connecticut adopted a boy and called him "Moses David Absalom Daniel Mark White." The other day when he became of age he sued her for $25,000 damages for hitching all these names in front of him, and it is hoped that the jury will give him every cent of it.

A New Bedford clergyman who has been in service a long time advertises seven hundred sermons for sale, covering all subjects and applicable to any locality. He only wants one dollar apiece for the lot, if taken in a lump, "which is one-half off regular price and a decided bargain for the money."

A competitive examination was lately held for the purpose of appointing fit persons to some of the Government offices in Canada. One of the candidates inadvertently spelled the word Venice with two n's, thus: Vennice. The examiner, a clever man, but not always a correct speaker, sternly inquired: "Do you know, sir, that there is but one hen in Venice?" "Then eggs must be very scarce there," was the reply. The candidate passed.

NEW INVENTIONS.

A West Virginia man has patented an invention for making houses without the use of nails.

A Wheeling inventor is at work upon a watch which is expected to run a month without winding.

An incandescent lamp arrangement for showing the interior of boilers while under steam has been made by a German inventor.

A curious watch has been brought out in France. The dial is transparent, but there are no works behind it and the hands appear to move by magic.

P. S. Bates, of York, Pa., has invented an ingenious electric motor which entirely eclipses any thing of the kind yet invented. It is entirely automatic and when once started will perform its work for 100,000 hours without attention.

A late invention by Mr. E. T. Lincoln, of Topeka, Kan. (who it is said within the last two years has taken out more patents than any other man in the country), is a toboggan brake. This device enables a toboggan to stop in the middle of the steepest incline instantly.

RIPPLES OF MIRTH.

"How intense are the fires of love!" ejaculated the poet. "Yes," answered the father of six marriageable daughters; "but they do take an awful sight of coal."

If your friend, who has been cultivating a kitchen garden all summer, looks thin and wan, don't lay it wholly to hard work. He may be trying to live on what he raised.

Algernon—"Dearest Emily, I can not conceal my feelings any longer. I must tell you now how dearly I love you. May I hope for your love in return?" Emily—"Certainly. Will that be all to-day?"

Nothing seems to be too mean for some men. There is an old fellow in Maine who is imposing on his hens most shamefully. He has put an electric light in the hen house and the hens lay day and night.

Mrs. Wallbeck—"I'm sorry to hear of your little boy's illness. Scarlet fever, isn't it?" Mrs. Coolberg—"Yes, so the doctor says; and it's dreadfully aggravating. We just had the nursery redecorated in blue and gold, and Freddy doesn't match it a bit."

It was a warm Sunday night and some of the congregation in the little church were slumbering languidly except one man, who snored in a manner not at all languid. The preacher, observing this, left his notes, and said to one of the deacons in the front row: "Will you please ask that brother to stop snoring or he will keep the other brethren awake." The rest of the sermon was listened to.

LITERARY BREVITIES.

Rose Elizabeth Cleveland now publishes her own novels.

"Ben Hur" has been translated recently into Dutch, as has also "John Ward, Preacher."

Lord Tennyson asserts that his coming volume of poems will be his absolutely farewell contribution to literature.

The Marchioness of Stafford contemplates publishing a volume relative to travels around the world made in company with her husband.

Mr. Carnegie's "Triumphant Democracy" has been translated into Spanish, and is now in the hands of citizens of the Argentine Republic.

One-third of all the second-class matter mailed at the Boston post-office consists of copies of the Youth's Companion. It is said to have now 430,000 circulation.

W. Clark Russell, the marine novelist who is now hopelessly crippled by rheumatism, lives at Brighton, Eng., and has most of his time to put in in a wheeled chair. He was born in Philadelphia.

At the Paris Exposition the highest award to any author of juvenile books was given to Thomas W. Knox, whose Boy Travelers series and other works for young people are published by Messrs. Harper & Brothers.

The New York booksellers report that of the expensive books having the largest sales, "Burke's Peerage" almost heads the list. Nearly every fashionable family in that city has one copy of it, notwithstanding it costs about $15.

HOW CAN THE LONG

BE THE SHORT

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. PENNED BY THE POETS.

The Shadows of the Heart.

'Tis strange that when when most glad,
Enwoven through our merry hours,
Should run a thread so dark, so sad,
Like death among the summer flowers.
A laugh may ring in happy glee,
And mingle with the saddest strain;
The lip may smile—the heart may be
O'ershadowed with a secret pain.

The beams of love and friendship bright
May for a time our hearts beguile;
The world were dark but for their light,
And living hardly worth the while.
If love is true and friendship real,
How sweet to live, how hard to die,
When throbbing hearts can passion feel,
And thought is flashed from eye to eye!

But, ah! too oft can love betray,
And friendship's hand grow cold as nigh;
Life is not all a primrose way;
Were shadow lost, there were no light!
We all have hours in which we yearn
For something never known before;
And all our days we seldom learn
That what we have is sweetest store.

"My heart's desire, oh, give to me!"
So prayeth oft the restless soul
Who thinks that bliss is still to be,
And that he may yet reach the goal.
But years pass on, and youth has flown,
With all its hopes, with all its fire;
And sadly to our hearts we own
We never reach our heart's desire.
—Ballou's Magazine.

Friends Old and New.

Make new friends, but keep the old,
Those are silver, these are gold;
New-made friendships, like new wine,
Age will mellow and refine.
Friendships that have stood the test—
Time and change—are surely best;
Brow may wrinkle, hair grow gray,
Friendship never knows decay.
For 'mid old friends tried and true
Once more we our youth renew;
But old friends, alas! may die,
New friends must their place supply.
Cherish friendship in your breast,
New is good, but old is best;
Make new friends, but keep the old,
Those are silver, these are gold.
—Philadelphia Press.

The Hairpin.

What is home without a hairpin,
When the glove-hook can't be found,
And the street-car is approaching,
To the northern depots bound?

Or the paper-cutter's missing
As the thrilling tale she reads;
And the hero's planned elopement
On an uncut page succeeds?

What is home without a hairpin
Deftly bent upon the floor;
When one finds it, walking barefoot—
Hark! was that a voice that swore?

Sending echoes through the darkness,
With a swift profane dispatch,
Till they swarmed upon a toothpick
And became a parlor match!

Oh! the wicked little hairpin—
Treacherous wire of dual point—
You were better hid in tresses
Than in wrenching out a joint.
—J. B. Alden, in Boston Transcript.

You're Bound to Find It.

When every thing is going wrong,
And nothing goes to suit you,
When men, instead of shaking hands,
Seem more inclined to boot you,
Don't be discouraged, nor cast down,
Nor swear, nor cry confound it!
Brace up, and let your spirits climb!
You're bound to find in course of time
Some way to get around it!

And when the mother of your wife,
According to the fashion,
Insists on living at your house,
Don't fly up in a passion,
But when your temper starts to rise
Just push it down and ground it.
Her very presence you may hate.
Cheer up! and you'll find, soon or late,
Some way to get around it!

If with a maiden you're in love,
And round her waist are trying
To get your arm, while she resists
With efforts most undying,
Don't get excited, fume nor prance,
Nor beat your breast and pound it.
Upon her waist just keep your eye,
And you'll discover, if you try,
Some way to get around it!
—Lawrence American.

When Fortune Frowns.

When fortune frowns—the changeful dame—
Then matters are not quite the same;
Then where's the fair and fickle throng
Who loved you much, but not for long;
To you they make no further claim.

Perhaps your erstwhile fondest flame
Forgets you; ay, forgets your name;
How soon is sung a different song
When fortune frowns.

How vain your evanescent fame!
Your wealth is gone; you are to blame:
Where you were right you now are wrong,
And you are weak where you were strong;
Yes, life's indeed a losing game—
When fortune frowns.
—America.

Whence? and Whither?

A little crib. A tiny babe. A mother's lullaby.
A gracious ray of sunshine from a bright, unclouded sky.
A breath of light and loveliness. A cherished hope, a prayer.
Dropped down into the present from that strange, mysterious where!

A cold, white stone. A little mound. A mother's grief and tears.
A shadow reaching out across the sunshine of the years.
A voice unanswered evermore, an echo of despair.
Gone from the living present to that strange, mysterious where?

NOTES FOR NATURALISTS.

NEARLY all the insects, crustaceans, worms, snails and the like go into winter quarters; frogs and all the reptile kind hibernate by burying themselves in the mud or under stones.

THE Chinese sacred lily is a narcissus belonging to the polyanthus group. It can be grown in bowls or shallow dishes filled with small pebbles and kept well supplied with water.

IT is said that a singular fact connected with the cultivation of the banana is that it seeds only in one small spot on the earth—the Andaman Islands. Everywhere else it must be raised from suckers.

AN entirely new rose, called the "rainbow rose," was exhibited at a recent flower show in San Francisco and received first prize. It is small, of a delicate shade of rose pink, with darker bars running lengthwise of the petals.

KANSAS claims to have the finest collection of North American birds on exhibition in this country. In a room at the State capitol building are 1,352 birds handsomely mounted and placed in glass show-cases. The collection is due to the labors of Colonel N. S. Goss.

WHAT is known as the "tree of life" is growing in the United Brethren Church at Falmouth, Lancaster County, Pa. The plant is of the spice-wood variety. It has now attained the height of three feet, and shot from the earth through a knot-hole in the pulpit floor.

A MISSIONARY in Africa was astonished while walking in a wood to hear a clock strike, though no human habitation was within miles of the place. He discovered that the noise proceeded from a bird known as the clock-bird and called by the Spanish the campanero. The bird gives a note every few minutes which is identical with the sound of a striking clock.

A SPECIES of ape in Dutch Guiana, called the Quatta, is described as using its tail so constantly and deftly when climbing among the trees that it is difficult to tell which is tail and which foot. Their tails are usually wrapped around the limbs so tightly that when the apes are shot they do not fall from the trees, but hang to them, sometimes till putrefaction sets in. For this reason the native Indians shoot them with arrows dipped in a poison called woura, the effect of which is to paralyze the muscles of the tail and insure a speedy fall of the slain animal.

THERE is a pretty little wild flower common to Oregon and Washington that blooms much earlier than any other. It is the "February Flower" (Synthyris Hesphloniana). This interesting plant never fails to put forth its pretty blue racemes early in February, and in sunny nooks it often anticipates that time and opens in January. It is found abundantly in that region, but, like the lovely arbutus of the East, seems somewhat capricious in its choice of a home, large spaces being literally carpeted with it, while others near, and seeming equally favorable, present not a single specimen.

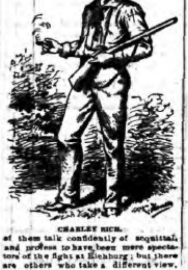
IN A PUGILISTS' PARADISE

Indicted Sports Who Expect to Join Charley Rich's Boarders.

The Mississippi Lumber King Who Gives Asylum to the Fighters at Richburg—Kilrain Having a Good Time on Rich's Farm.

COPYRIGHT 1890.

There are a dozen or more sporting men in New York just now who would be delighted to have the broad Atlantic between them and the long arm of Governor Lowry of Mississippi, which has reached out and grabbed them unexpectedly in connection with the Sullivan and Kilrain "mill" last July. Some of them talk confidently of acquittal, and profess to have been mere spectators of the fight at Richburg; but there are others who take a different view, and who fully expect ere long to make acquaintance with Mississippi justice and Mississippi jails.



CHARLEY RICH.

"It looks now as though some of the boys might have to board with Charley Rich next summer for a month or two," said sporting editor William E. Harding, recently.

There was the suspicion of a grin on the face of Kilrain's representative, as he spoke. Harding; Muldoon, the second of Sullivan; Mike Cleary and Professor Donovan, the latter Kilrain's second, composed the unlucky quartette who were "scooped in" by Governor Lowry's detective. There arrest on belated warrants does not seem to trouble them seriously. They are out on bail, and the Kilrain contingent are disposed to be rather merry over the situation. Muldoon and Cleary are somewhat sad and are probably reflecting enviously on the good fortune that enabled Frank Stevenson, Charley Johnston and Jim Wakely to escape to the wilds of New Jersey, at the first note of alarm.

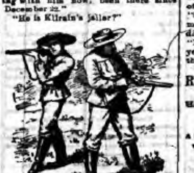
Harding kept grinning. I was a bit puzzled to know where the funny end of a prospect of fine or imprisonment, or both, came in, and ventured to ask about it.

"You never met Charley Rich, of Richburg, did you?" he interrogated. "Well, he is the man you want to get acquainted with, if you should ever happen to be arrested in Mississippi. Charley is the tallest, wealthiest and jelliest fellow in the county, six feet high and over, and a typical Mississippian. He owns 80,000 acres of woodland, and he has a contract with the State government which gives him the 'first call' on all culprits condemned to imprisonment at hard labor. There's always a number of men on his place working out their sentences on State account."

"A sort of chain-gang ——"

"Chain-gang be blanked!" was the retort. "Rich isn't that kind of a man. He's a sport from the ground up. You ought to see him go 'round with his Winchester over his arm, a pistol stuck in his belt and wearing a flannel tennis shirt and a great broad sombrero. And he can shoot, too, being one of the best marksmen in the State, which is saying a good deal, for Mississippi marksmen are famous, you know. Kilrain is boarding with him now; been there since December 22."

"He is Kilrain's jailer?"



RICH AND KILRAIN OUT FOR A SHOOT.

"Oh, Jake does just about as he pleases; puts on a flannel shirt and pantaloons, hunting boots and a straw hat, and goes out gunning with Rich. He can have a good time, for there is the best kind of shooting up in the pineries just back of the village. Rich owns nearly the whole place and the woods around it. He is one of the lumber kings of the Southwest. Whenever a sporting man falls into his hands he treats him like a prince; nothing is too good for him. Kilrain is in clover there, living on the best. I had news from him the other day. He is gradually getting in splendid condition for his next battle, and is enjoying his vacation thoroughly."

"Any society in Richburg?"

"Um—not much; but it's good what there is. There's only about 200 people and a dozen houses in the place. Mr. Rich's house is a picturesque, two-story cottage, a little way off the railroad. He has a farm and sawmills where the prisoners work at cutting up the lumber for market. Mrs. Rich is a young and handsome woman and very popular. There are half a dozen darky servants in the cottage and the table is first rate. Kilrain is like one of the family and roams over the place pretty much as he pleases. When a man is convicted and sentenced by the State authorities, Charley has only to say that he wants him and he gets him. How he treats him is nobody's business, is it?"

"Then you expect that the whole party will have to spend their summer vacation with this jolly jailer?"

"Not much we don't," was the emphatic reply. "Rich will have nothing to do with the Sullivan crowd. They can board where they please, or lie in jail, as Governor Lowry may decide. Charley put his money on Kilrain, and he would do anything in the world for him or his friends. See? By the way," he added, "people don't seem to know exactly how the case stands. The Grand Jury at Purvis, Miss., didn't charge Jake with prize-fighting at all. They indicted him for assault and battery. Mississippi juries draw the line very close, you know."

"And what is Sullivan charged with?"

"We don't know," he answered mysteriously, "unless it's for being assaulted and battered by Kilrain. I suppose we will be accused of aiding and abetting an assault and battery, whatever that is; but it can't be a very terrible crime, anyhow. Would I rather be fined than imprisoned? Well, if it wasn't for business considerations, I'd just as soon be one of Rich's boarders for a month or so. Richburg is only one hundred miles from New Orleans. What with hunting and shooting at a mark daytimes, as Jake is doing, a table equal to any hotel outside of the big cities, and music or a band at poker evenings, I don't think there would be much to complain of?"

"Past offenses on the pugilistic line won't count with the Mississippi court, then?"

"We don't see why they should," replied Mr. Harding. "It's true I've been at forty or fifty prize fights, and so have most of the others, but in this case, the jury holds that there was no prize fight. It would be like reviving old acquaintance to go to Richburg," he added with a laugh. "Charley would take the best care of the boys. He is known as the friend and host of sporting men all over the country. All we have to do, when a sport is arrested, is to drop Rich a line and he is taken good care of. He was so strong a partisan of Kilrain at the fight that he wanted to come in and guard the ring with a squad of men armed with Winchesters; but that was a little too steep for an assault and battery mill. Bud Renaud, the famous New Orleans club man, and Hennessey, the Chief of Police, they are his intimate friends. Only the other day he sent Frank Stevenson a cask of Arbita Springs mineral water by express.

HIGH JINKS AT RICHPORT.

"It'll be like going into training. If we are sent down there," he added, "and we won't mind being Charley's boarders awhile."

If Kilrain had the worst of it at the "mill," he may yet have the best end of the bargain before Governor Lowry gets through. His case is before the Appellate Court in Mississippi, but the chances are that weeks will elapse before a decision is reached. Meanwhile, should Governor Hill consent to a requisition, the Kilrain men will go South pretty much as though they were setting out on a picnic. The Sullivan contingent, having no such pleasant prospect ahead, are wishing with all their might that the offence of the "big fellow" and his associates may be settled by the imposition of a fine.

A LIBERAL OFFER.

A Deformed Clergyman Would Pay Half the Expenses of His Cure.

A clergyman was presented to a living in the vicinity of Glasgow, who had a protuberance between his shoulders arising from diseased spine and a corresponding protrusion of the chest. The parishioners were opposed to a person of such an ungainly appearance occupying their pulpit. The presentee heard of the dissatisfaction, and, being a personage of some humor and tack convened a meeting of the malcontents, in order to ascertain their objections. "I have heard," said he, "that my settlement amongst you is not likely to be agreeable. Now, as I am not aware of any objection to my opinions or practice—my slender abilities for such a charge I admit—I should just like, as we are all friends and brethren, and have only one object to serve, that you would state your objections." One glanced to another, which was as significantly returned almost round the vetoists, and silence prevailed for some time. "Speak out," said the presentee, "don't be afraid; I am not ready to take offense." when one stammered out, "Sir, you see! we—you see—sir—sin' I maun speak for my brethren here—dinna like your bodily appearance." "Neither do I," was the reply, "and if ye can get it repaired I'll be at half the expense myself."

RICH WOMEN WHO SHOP.

How Some of Them Are Regarded in the Stores.

A Fine Art and Its Devotees—Miss Caldwell Gets Her Money's Worth—Mrs. Harrison's Shopping Excursions—Mrs. Astor and the Milliner.

COPYRIGHT 1890.

I have an unholy joy in watching women who are "shopping," they are so naively rude and the primal elements of human nature come to the surface so frankly. In January, when the bargain sales are in progress, it is easy to believe in evolution. We revert to the ways of our ancestors and grab whatever we can lay paws on. Yet shopping is an art, and the time may come when we shall have professors to teach it. The good shopper, who has in her hands the bulk of the spendings of a family, and who knows just where to go for the best or cheapest ribbons or gloves or hosiery or shoes or hats, is one of the most characteristic outcomes of that progressive division of labor which marks the advance of civilization.

Saleswomen have their own rules for judging women as shoppers, and it must be said that these rules are usually of the bourgeois order, based on the readiness with which money is lavished rather than on any nice discrimination shown in the expenditure. Now and then, however, when you come upon one who has waited on grand dames, perhaps, for two decades, and who is gifted with memory and a sense of humor, her revelations become interesting. Such a one was telling me this morning that she had known a woman to hold a position at a counter, blocking the way of other buyers, for nearly half an hour on a "rush" Saturday, waiting for the return of a parcel which had been sent to be done up a second and a third time, because it had come to her in the first instance in a box the shape of which did not suit her and in the second tied with a gray string instead of the pink and white which was more to her fancy. The customer could not be offended, for she was Mrs. A. T. Stewart and in her husband's store.

Miss Mary Gwendoline Caldwell, who didn't conclude her bargain for a husband, is a woman, who knows how to get the worth of her money, as, somehow, only rich women seem to do, and she is remembered in New York as having a positive scent for bargains, much as a harrier has for hares. There is a small, brown-eyed creature, who handles laces in a large establishment, who tells me that she has never seen Miss Caldwell's equal for detecting at a glance what goods are really being sold below their actual values, for, of course, no merchant sacrifices that which he can profitably carry over to another season. The woman at whose command is very little money will often buy recklessly under the eyes of clerks and other customers, but Miss Caldwell, on one occasion, spent half a morning looking over thousands of dollars' worth of lace handkerchiefs, and finally picked out one of exquisite pattern which was badly torn and going for half price, saying that she knew a young girl brought up in a convent, who would darn it for a trifle so that no one would ever suspect the damage.

Many of New York's rich women are of little profit to shopkeepers, for they buy their wearing apparel largely in Paris, and what they get at home is obtained through semi-private hands. Still there are no women in the city, with the possible exception of the Vanderbilts who do not indulge in the dear delights of shopping once in a while. Mrs. Cleveland is one of the nicest customers that salesmen and saleswomen have to wait on. She did all her important shopping in New York while she was still lady of the White House, and was well-known before taking up her abode in the city, in several of the stores. I was buying a cup and saucer in a Japanese store about 4 o'clock one afternoon recently, when in walked Mrs. Cleveland. She was unattended and had not even, I think, a carriage in waiting, having taken the democratic vehicle, a horse car. She passed from table to table and from case to case through the room, looking over all the pretty things with an interest that was plainly genuine. She is very quiet but rapid in her movements, and one gloved finger and a little nod indicated the bronze paper cutter and the curious little idol to whose charms she succumbed. She did not order her purchases sent home, according to the city woman's almost invariable custom, but took them in her hand in democratic style. It is easy to see why the shop people like her, she costs them neither patience nor time.

On one occasion also I have seen Mrs. Harrison shopping, but it was not in a store. The street venders have sprung upon the city a species of mechanical toy which is really very amusing. Sometimes it is a small tin ostrich which strides across the pavement, and sometimes it is a baker's cart driven by a baker's boy. This is what bewitched the first lady of Washington. She passed it, stopped, then turned about and passed it again. Then she made a purchase, presumably for Baby McKee or that important young person's sister, who is almost as obscure as poor little Maria de las Mercedas since the baby King of Spain got well.

Mrs. Harrison has shopped at half a dozen of the larger New York dry goods houses, and a clever girl, who has sold her stockings speaks of her as a careful, sensible buyer, of a town rather than a city type, who doesn't like any superfluous attentions from clerks or pay much attention to their recommendations, preferring to form her own judgment in all instances. On the occasion of the stocking purchase—they were fine black silk, by the way—Mrs. Harrison said: "If these wear well I may send for more." When the order for others came from the White House the clever girl made application to have her wages raised.

Mrs. Leiter, the mother of the beautiful Miss Leiter, whose father's money has opened, not without squeaking, the gates of society both in New York and Washington, is the average saleswoman's ideal purchaser. She seldom asks the price of anything, taking whatever strikes her fancy without regard to cash considerations. In many houses the salesgirls have a commission on what they sell above a specified figure, and a certain mistress of ribbons of whom I always buy when I have an opportunity, because I am bewitched by the yellow curls of her hair, often alludes to the day she struck a bonanza in Mrs. Leiter and her order for '$150 worth of assorted colors. Mrs. Hammersley, now Her Grace the Duchess of Marlborough, used to buy in the same lavish manner, and one is regretted by those who laid aside their choicest things for her inspection, sure she would praise them whether she purchased them or not, and would have a smile for the exhibitor. She had a mania for pretty underwear and was one of the first women in New York to wear colored silk nightgowns. A small, dark Frenchwoman who controls this department in one of the large houses says that on one occasion Mrs. Hammersley bought up their entire importation—not as large then as now—because she didn't want, even if one doesn't jostle such things on the street, her bed toilets duplicated. Her only equal in taste in this direction, the Frenchwoman declares, is the Marquise Lanza, who also has a pretty corset reputation.

The Astors almost never shop, but Mrs. Astor has made the reputation of one interesting little milliner. A well educated young woman had fitted herself at the cost of considerable sacrifice on her own part and her mother's, for teaching. She obtained a position, but proved too shy and sensitive to control the half-grown boys. She was a poor "disciplinarian," and stung by a sense of failure wandered up and down the streets wondering what she could do. Downhearted, giddy and almost fainting she stumbled against a milliner's sidewalk showcase and stared blankly at the Paris bonnets inside. Then she went to the bank, drew out her small savings and induced a cousin who kept a little stationer's shop in a moderately good location to allow her window room for a half dozen hats of her own concoction. It sounds like a fairy story, but in three years she had sold barely enough to keep soul and body together when a carriage drove up one morning and a lady bought a black bonnet that was as chic as it was unassuming. The lady had business, it seemed, with a decorator who lived next door, and something about the small stock of headgear had caught her eye in passing. The lady was Mrs. Astor, and the sale was to the milliner the beginning of better fortunes. It was the one chance that comes to some people, not to everybody, in a lifetime. Mrs. Astor mentioned her discovery quietly to a few people, and the milliner has a tiny parlor now on the avenue, and is going to Paris for the second time for her stock to trade this spring.

Mrs. Whitney is esteemed a good shopper and is accompanied on some of her excursions this winter by Mrs. Cleveland. Sometimes her daughter, Pauline, who is a slim, pretty girl of 17, is her companion, and sometimes, especially when she goes to buy a bonnet she is attended by ex-Secretary Whitney. Mrs. Whitney buys the best of everything, and is very pleasant in her treatment of saleswomen.

Mrs. Whitney's social successor in Washington, Mrs. Morton, imports nearly everything from Paris, but she has a wonderful eye for faces and remembers from one visit to another the saleswomen who have waited on her, often recalling to them some little incident which they had supposed absolutely forgotten. This makes her extremely popular.

Mrs. Potter is known as a purchaser at many establishments, and is neither liked nor disliked especially. I remember a couple of seasons ago being in quite a swell establishment when Mrs. Potter was trying on hats on the other side of an ample screen. She evidently supposed herself quite secluded, but it was another case of the ostrich which runs its head in the sand, the arrangement of mirrors being such that every turn of her head or movement of her long white fingers was reflected for the benefit of half a dozen more or less curious observers in the main room. Bandbox after bandbox tied with ribbons was carried behind that wall of bamboo. There was low-toned conversation, a mysterious rustle of tissue papers and then behold, in spite of the attempted privacy, a chic little toque in black lace and buttercups would be nodding and bowing, as it were for the express benefit of us outside barbarians. When her selection had been made Mrs. Potter did herself up in the ample folds of a big black mull veil and departed silent as the sphinx and wholly unconscious that she had been observed. Her shopping was conducted on a different principle from that of Mrs. Langtry, and that the methods of the Lily told better at the box office, it is necessary to believe.

Her Lilyship wanted always a great deal of attention, but her manners were so gracious that there was a sort of competition behind the counter who should do her bidding. The only time I ever personally encountered Mrs. Langtry shopping she was buying silk stockings in light evening shades, and was the only woman on a sweltering June afternoon who looked as if she had her temper or her temperature at all under control. She wore white and the flowers in her belt showed no signs of drooping. She secured the best saleswoman in the department for attendant, and before she matched the color of her evening costume she had interested the buyers on either side of her in her hunt for a peculiar shade of, I think it was, blue. To one young girl with a blush rose complexion she made a direct appeal, and when she rose from her seat—sitting is more social than standing, while shopping—the young girl and her mother and everybody within noticing distance tells somehow that the Lily was a very delightful sort of woman and that they really must go to see her play. This sort of advertising must have had an influence on the receipts in a quiet but effective way.

THERE has been so much smuggling into New York of late by vessels coming through Hell Gate and along the sound that Uncle Sam is going to patrol the sound with two revenue cutters. As in past years there has not been a single revenue cutter from Montauk Point to Hell Gate it is believed that the smuggling must have been carried on upon an extensive scale and that it will be difficult to break it up.

AN experiment in ocean time-saving has just been tried by having the steamship City of Rome discharge her passengers at Milford Haven instead of at Liverpool on her last voyage out. Milford Haven is the extreme western point of England, and it is believed that sailing direct from New York to that point will save from eighteen to twenty-four hours in the passage. It is likely to become the great point of sailing between the two countries.

FIFTY-TWO years ago, the 27th of October, 1837, the first dramatic performance was given in the city of Chicago. There were no theaters in those days, so the first play was performed in the old Sauganash Hotel, located at the corner of Lake and Market streets. Up to this time no public entertainment had ever been held in Chicago.

MRS. KENDAL, by extraction, is a Jewess. The actress' mother was a Jewess and her mother's father was a Jewish rabbi. Her mother's name was Elizabetta Merinus. The family came originally from Holland, whose their ancestry had migrated from Spain, and like Rachel, Bernhardt and other great stars, her Jewish blood has been no mean factor in making her so fine an artist.

WILSON BARRETT'S brother is considered in England a far cleverer actor than the head of the big London melodramatic company. George Barrett is a comedian and, what is rare among comedians, an actor of steadiness, force and power in heavy roles. He is also a more accomplished man socially than Wilson, but he has not the power of leadership which the elder brother possesses and he is content to follow in the latter's wake. The affection between the two men is very strong.

NAVAL EXPENDITURES.

Nothing demands closer watchfulness on the part of a free people, sovereigns in fact, than the wanton waste of public money by their representatives.

It is proposed to expend several hundred million dollars to enlarge our navy.

For certain interested parties that is no doubt a highly attractive scheme, a charming enterprise, promising to lay many golden eggs in a few years.

Food for corrupt jobbers is unhealthy diet for honest citizens.

What do we want with a great array of costly war ships?

Where is the use for them at the present time?

These are not idle questions.

When hostilities were likely to occur, and we had commercial fleets sailing under the starry flag over every ocean and dropping anchor in all accessible ports, there was manifest need for a naval power to guard and assist, but now that is entirely changed.

The danger of [illegible] between this and other countries is very remote, and as to American Commerce, that once grand feature of our national fame, and reliable source of individual wealth, American not English, we have scarcely a vestige left.

Vessels of the United States engaged in foreign commerce are fast disappearing and soon will be entirely gone.

Our glorious commerce is dead—aye, dead.

Protected to death by a revenue system nigh akin to ancient Chinese stupidity.

In the name of common sense where is the use of naval squadrons cruising over the globe, at an enormous public outlay, vainly seeking for a lost merchant marine.

It is absurdity!

Stop useless expenditure by stopping needless treasury surplus, thereby relieving the people of unjust taxation.

Reform tariffs in accordance with enlightened business intelligence, for the general public welfare, and not to advance sectionary personal interests.

Then something worthy of genuine protection might be found both at home and abroad.

"PREFERRED NEWSPAPERS."

Under Certain Circumstances, However, THE PRESS Will be used Free.

[From The Plainfield Daily Press.]

We observe that in a list of preferred newspapers issued by the well-known advertising agency, G. P. Rowell & Co., the [illegible] of Plainfield is included. But as any newspaper that will agree to take advertisements from the agency is put on the list, the fact is of no significance [illegible]

Whether THE PRESS is included in the list or not, it is "preferred" by Messrs Rowell & Co., themselves, above all other papers in the city as an advertising medium; and for two advertisements alone in these columns they are now paying sixty-eight dollars a year. Yesterday's mail contained the following:

New York, January [illegible]
Publisher THE PRESS, Plainfield, N. J.
Please insert the following advertisement * * * one year * * * in your daily edition.
GEORGE P. ROWELL & CO.

The advertisement was refused, however, with the recommendation that it be offered some other Plainfield paper whose space was less valuable. So it is with all the other large advertisers—the Royal Baking Powder Co., Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., [illegible], Kaskine, [illegible] Piano Co., [illegible] Soap and A. C. Meyer & Co., use THE PRESS exclusively, while J. Walter Thompson, J. H. Bates, N. W. Ayer & Son, S. M. Pettingill and all the other agents are steady patrons of the medium.

But it is the home advertisers that are on the spot and can judge of extent and character of circulation, who prove by their preference which is the best medium. Such successful merchants as J. F. MacDonald, C. K. Compton, Schwed Bros., A. C. Morton, A. M. Vanderbeek & Co., A. D. [illegible], Edward Love, W. L. [illegible] & Co., J. G. Miller, D. T. [illegible], and others advertise in no other daily than THE PRESS; while S. Edsall, H. P. Reynolds, H. A. Pope and such extensive advertisers, buy more space in THE PRESS and pay it more money probably than they expend in all other papers combined.

To each and every person in the city of Plainfield and the borough of North Plainfield, who conscientiously believes that THE PRESS has not a larger number of readers than any other paper in the vicinity, it will be sent free. Send your name and address—that is all that is necessary—and you will receive the paper regularly until you confess you are convinced of your mistake.

LEADING LAWYERS IN A CHICKEN CASE.

Six Cents Worth of Damages Involves Plaintiff and Defendant in an Expense of $800 for Fees and Costs of Court.

The case of Fine vs. Smith of this city, was called and a jury impanelled at Elizabeth, Monday, Mr. Craig Marsh appearing for the plaintiff and Mr. E. V. Lindabury for the defendant. The cause of this difficulty was brought about by some chickens belonging to Mr. Smith, which made a practice of going over into the yard of Fine and becoming a general nuisance by scratching up the garden, [illegible] the clothes spread out to dry, and soiling the porch, after notice and warning to Smith to keep them home.

The real damages did not amount to seven cents, but exemplary damages were demanded on the theory that to allow the fowls to continue trespassing after notice and warning justified a jury in punishing the defendant. A suit was first brought by Fine before Justice Wadsworth, in this city, for $50 damages. Craig A. Marsh brought the suit for Fine, and W. A. Coddington—who is not Judge Coddington—defended it for Smith. The first jury disagreed, but a second gave a verdict of $25 for the plaintiff.

Smith appealed, engaged E. V. Lindabury to assist Mr. Coddington, and the case was called at Elizabeth Monday. The trial took all day, the court room was crowded, and fun flowed ad libitum. Counsellors Marsh and Lindabury were at their best, and there were tilts galore between them, though good natured withal.

But Plainfield's lawyer won, and a verdict was given in favor of Fine, the plaintiff, for $50 the full amount claimed, just double the Plainfield verdict. The case is likely to have cost about $300 a side for counsel fees. The judgment, costs and expenses for Mr. Smith to pay will make about another $200.

It was all about a few chickens scratching. But the Court told the jury that the case was an important one, and the jury [illegible] Mr. Fine in bringing the suit, by giving him every dollar he asked for.

MR. RANDOLPH SPEAKS.

PLAINFIELD'S GREATEST MAYOR INDUCED TO TALK ON THE WATER WORKS QUESTION.

He Tells the Readers of THE PRESS What He Knows About the Attack on the Corporation Counsel by a Correspondent in These Columns.

THE PRESS has been since its first issue fully alive to the importance of treating live subjects in a live manner. Upon several, even numerous occasions, we have anticipated public opinion and won public approval. In the recent controversy over the desirability of the Water Works franchise, as far as the City's interests are concerned, the columns of THE PRESS have been open to all who have desired to present their opinions.

So much has been written about ex-Mayor Randolph and the editorial arguments of the PRESS disfavoring the water works contract as it now stands, that many of Mr. Randolph's friends have anticipated a letter from his pen. He remained silent, however, and was rather inclined to view with disfavor any further controversy upon the matter when a PRESS reporter called at his residence on Saturday evening. The reporter succeeded however, in eliciting the following opinions from Mr. Randolph regarding the water works question and Mr. Marsh's relation thereto:

Reporter—Mr. Randolph will you give me for publication your views of Mr. Marsh's attitude toward the water works?

Mr. Randolph—That I certainly will not do, Mr. Marsh and his actions can speak for themselves. I will say one thing, however, no evidence has yet been presented that Mr. Marsh acted in a double capacity, that is, that he was employed by the city and by the water works company at the same time. Though he does not deny that he was so employed, I do not believe that he is capable of occupying any such doubtful position, and I don't think it the duty of a public officer to be always denying rumors.

Reporter—Is it true that Mr. Marsh and yourself have had any personal controversy, or that he worked or voted against you at the time of your last Mayoralty run?

Mr. Randolph—It is not true at all. We have always been good friends. Mr. Marsh knew I did not want the Mayoralty, and I understand that he was out of town, as I also was on election day, when I was being voted for. I am sure that he did not work against me. He could hardly have supported Mr Manson, for he knew that Mr. Manson would not wish to retain him in office. Since Mr. Manson's time I think he has made himself so useful to the succeeding Mayors that they would hardly have known how to get along without him. But as to his relations to me, he shows that he entertains high sentiments of esteem and gratitude toward me by writing a whole column in THE PRESS in my praise and defense, though what on earth he wanted to defend me for or against, I don't know. I am, as he says, [illegible] able to stand alone.

Reporter—Why, he was defending you against your friends, wasn't he? Don't you know who wrote the PRESS article pitching into Mr. Marsh and into the Water company and standing up for you?

Mr. Randolph—Perhaps, technically I might say that I don't; but I ought to be frank with you, I suppose, and say that I have my surmises on that point, and in just one moment I will tell you how I came to guess or suppose about it, for my interview with the gentleman who probably furnished it lasted also about a minute. It took place by mere accident in the street, both of us being hurried. He stopped me and said he thought I ought to reply to the affront, or insult, or whatever it was that I had received from an anonymous article in the papers. I told him I did not at all propose to do so, that it was not worth my while. He replied that he thought it was, and that he intended to take the matter up if I did not; or words to that effect. Upon that day or the next someone did take a hand in the affair, and I suppose my friend did it. No, I don't propose to tell his name. He is a fearless, able man, younger than I am, and of different opinions in some ways, but he is capable of holding his own anywhere. Besides, I may be mistaken in identity. A good many people are just now very much stirred up at what they consider the unwisdom and injustice of this water works contract. I meet them in considerable numbers every day. They say that Mayor Male and various Councilmen promised them that the water works question should be submitted to the vote of the people before the city was committed. As a matter of fact, our venerable Mayor said as much to me, and I really had no expectation that the contract would be put through irretrievably during the closing hours of the last Councilmanic year. However, I am not criticising any particular Councilman. No man goes before me in appreciating the public services of Francis E. Marsh, John B. Dumont and others of the last Council. I think these men ought to have been kept in the Council if they themselves could afford the sacrifice. Now, this last has nothing to do with the water works, though some writers for the PRESS think it has. The water works question must stand or fall on its own merits or demerits. My views on this water matter I have already expressed long ago in my communication to the water committee. The information and opinions I had gathered had cost me something, but the committee could not or would not avail of them and I have never sought further to obtrude my views upon them.

Reporter—But to return a moment to Mr. Marsh. Has he said or written you anything about this recent public discussion of the water scheme?

Mr Randolph—Nothing whatever, and I want to say that it occurs to me now that there are several reasons why it is impossible that Mr. Marsh could have written the impudent personal anonymous article which he has been charged with writing, lugging me into this controversy. It is not his way or his style. If he had anything to say to me he wouldn't go about it in that [illegible] fashion. He would come to me and say it. I am impressed with the view that injustice has been done to Mr. Marsh. Why, look at that article. It ignores entirely the real points at issue, except so far as it admits the argument against the bond, and then it tries to divert public attention by abusing an individual. Besides, see the signature to the article. It is signed "Taxpayer." That is not a characteristic signature of Mr. Marsh. As an argument the article at once wholly collapsed, and so it is perfectly clear that no lawyer wrote it. And Mr. Marsh is a lawyer, as I know, for I have had occasion to send him some law business. Then another thing makes it clear to me that Mr. Marsh could not have written the article. If in any heat of temper, such as all men may be liable to, he had written anonymous article against me, he would, as a friend and respecter of mine, as he shows himself to be in his long article in the PRESS, have hastened to apologize and this he has not done. But let others think and say as they may. I don't propose to do Mr. Marsh the injustice to suspect him of writing that anonymous personal attack. I tell you sir, it is impossible that he could have been capable of it, and to use Mr. Marsh's expression "in my judgment," he did not write it.

Reporter—But is there not just such an expression as you just quoted, "in my judgment," or "in my opinion," in the anonymous article in question?

Mr. Randolph—Well, if there is such an indication it only illustrates what I say, that it must have been only a "pinchbeck" lawyer, if any, that wrote that article and not Mr. Marsh.

Reporter—What do you think of the prospect for the water works scheme being carried out?

Mr. Randolph—I really don't know much about that. I understand that the Company officials say that they cannot get water of the right kind in the Northeast portion of the city, where, as per contract, it is, as I understand, to be obtained. They say the water there is too hard. Perhaps they find it too hard to work their plans against public opinion; people don't always find a very soft thing in that direction.

Reporter—Mr. Randolph, allow me to return once more to your friend, from whom Mr. Marsh insisted on saving you. Did you know that he would send an article to THE PRESS anonymously signed.

Mr. Randolph—No, I did not. I never heard of "Looker On" till I saw it in the paper. I didn't know positively that he would send THE PRESS anything. But it seems, if my supposition is correct, that he chose to meet "Tax Payer" as a "Looker On" instead of signing his own name. I have not seen him since meeting him on the street that day. He thought that Mr. Marsh wrote the anonymous article against me, but I have told you my abundant reasons for holding that Mr. Marsh could not have been guilty of writing any such inconclusive and sneaking article. To quote a remark which has been used somewhere in this connection—"He has a soul above it." Now kindly excuse me from anything further; I don't want to bother you or myself.

HE WON'T SUBMIT.

RESISTING THE DEACONS' ATTEMPTS TO DOWN HIM.

The Pastor of the Colored Baptists Has Engaged Counselor McClure to Fight the "Conspiracy" in His Flock.

Back numbers of THE PRESS have told something of the trouble that has long brewed in Mt. Olive church, and Saturday's issue gave a condensed account of a "settlement" that had been made. The following is published as the colored pastor's own story:

"Edward Maynard and Mansfield Robinson," he says, "two of the deacons in the church, are responsible for the whole trouble. They have both conspired against me. They would make it a point to break up every meeting when they saw things were going my way. They would jump up in meeting, and shout and yell until the place was a perfect bedlam. I thought the best thing I could do under the circumstances was to resign and not allow the church to be broken up on account of these men. Monday evening of last week we had our regular monthly meeting of the church members. Everything went on smoothly until nine o'clock, and we were just going to have some resolutions brought up condemning Deacon Maynard for the way he has acted, when he suddenly rushed up and grabbed the record book from under the clerk's nose and confiscated it. This turned the meeting upside down, and there was a row right off. Maynard wouldn't give up the book, so that all official business had to be suspended. The meeting kept up, though, until 11½ o'clock, and before it was over nearly every one had done considerable talking. Toward the end some of the women who are jealous of my family because we don't mix with the lower class of colored people who live in Plainfield, got around my wife and began to call her all sorts of names. Mrs. Laura Connett came up and shook her fists right in my wife's face and said:

"'Mary Mitchell, you've got no education, no education, do you hear? We're every bit as good as you are.'

"Then my wife up with her hand accidentally, and it struck the Connett woman in the face. Everybody quieted down after a while, but after the meeting about twenty of the women went around to Maynard's house and put up a conspiracy to have my wife arrested, and promised to swear that they saw her assault Mrs. Connett. I heard of their scheme through a friend, and was prepared for the warrant which was served on my wife last Saturday. But their attempt to drag us down to their level will fail, for I am going to prove the whole thing is the result of a conspiracy when the trial comes off this week. I've got Lawyer McClure to represent me, and I am not going to submit to their attempts to down me."

There is some talk of the pastor's party bringing a suit against Maynard to recover the record book. The Rev. Mr. Mitchell hasn't decided yet whether he will accept a call to another town or start a new church in the same town, as his followers have urged him to do. He is going to wait until things quiet down a bit, he says.

The Two Sisters.

"There is no nature so weak but that it will gain strength, no character so depraved but that it will be ennobled by witnessing this play to be given at Music Hall, next Monday evening. It has been the aim of Denman Thompson and George Ryer to make their plays natural, wholesome and moral, at the same time amusing. It is full of characters and incidents which are met with in the daily walks of life, and which are familiar to almost everybody. Several musical selections are introduced.

Of Interest and Pleasure to You All.

The exhibition of the work of the Plainfield Camera Club, at the Y. M. C. A., rooms, is something everybody should see. It is open every morning, afternoon and evening for a few days longer. Those who have been once are going again, but everyone else should go too.

Besides the local interest there is in the pictures portraying faces and scenes that are familiar, there is a rich fund of instruction and entertainment in such specialties of the display as Ernest Marx's "Story of the Race," giving instantaneous views of the running horses at the start, the stretch and the finish; Mr. W. B. Post's and Mr. L. W. Serrell's, land and waterscapes; Mr. C. H. Davis' portraits; Mr. J. H. Doane's many and varied subjects; Mr. F. R. Stevens' original mountings; Mr. W. R. Lyons' charming groups and faces; Mr. James Greenleaf's micrographs, and much else that is novel and pleasing.

Oh, Move That Freight House!

[From the New York World.]

The Central New Jersey, it is rumored, will make extensive changes around Plainfield station with the approach of Spring. Commuters living in the eastern and southern parts of the city have been urging the Company for several years to remove its freight-house from its present location, opposite the passenger-station, and convert the land into a park. Wide detours now have to be made by Front street and Park avenue to reach the station from the other side of the tracks, the only short cut being dirt roads, up a hill, and over the tracks from Sixth street and Park avenue. The switch-yards are grouped around the freight-house, and make the crossing of the tracks at the station a dangerous feat at times. The Central has finished a roadway through the depot park on the station side, and is now engaged in replacing the old fence, supported by wood posts, with a new and handsome fence of iron set in stone bases.

A Great Discovery.

The fact that castor oil, as vile a medicine as was ever discovered, has so long held its own as a laxative, is because, until HAMBURG FIGS were discovered, no medicine could take its place. Now, however, ladies and children take HAMBURG FIGS, and like them. 25 cents. Dose, one fig. Mack Drug Co., N. Y. For sale by J. G. Miller.

BOTH WANT DIVORCE.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Cook Have Never Been Separated for Mutual Desire to be Separated Forever.

Rumor has long been busy with the marital relations of Mr. Frank Cook, of this city, and his wife who, when he married her over six years ago, was Miss Ida Ayers, daughter of Mr. Wm. B. Ayers of Netherwood. So many stories have been circulated about them in sensational papers—stories that have been false and calculated to do them injury—that they have absolutely refused for the past two years of their living apart to say one word for publication. But being seen by a PRESS reporter recently in relation to any proceedings they have taken to secure a legal separation, both Mr. and Mrs. Cook were glad to furnish these columns any information they desired.

Mr. Cook is now in St. Louis with the Albion Family Specialty Co. He tells the PRESS: "I have applied for, and will soon be granted a divorce from the unfortunate person known as Ida Cook. I expect to get the papers any day. I have bought some fine property in Mount Vernon, Indiana, a fast growing town of about 12,000, where in time I will settle down and call it home. I also have other attractions there which make it very pleasant for me."

Mr. Cook has been successful in his profession of a specialty artist, and is in receipt of a large salary. But Mrs. Cook says he has not contributed "one cent" to support herself or their child for two years. She told a PRESS reporter on Saturday, that she expected very soon to get a divorce herself on the ground of desertion. "I have never received notice in any way that my husband had applied for a divorce, and I know of no reason that he can use as a plea. He has left me to earn as best I may the money to dress and feed our six-year old daughter, Josie. I do not want him back, as I could not live and be abused again as he used to abuse me. But I have been a faithful wife to him, and it is a crime that he should refuse to contribute something even if only to help clothe his little girl."

A PROBLEM THAT WILL SOBER THOMAS.

He is Locked in While He Figures Out How to Pay a Dollar With Twenty Cents.

Among the prisoners arraigned before Justice Taintor in Essex Market court, New York city, one day last week, was Thomas Williams who when asked why he got drunk, said he had just come in from Plainfield, N. J.

"I'm an iron moulder there, Judge, and came here yesterday to buy some clothes. Some fellers got me to drink and then took all my money."

"Do you often get drunk?"

"No sir."

"If I let you off now will you promise to go right back to Plainfield?"

"I will." A smile appeared on the prisoner's face, and he fumbled his hat preparatory to putting it on.

"Hold on there a minute. Have you got any money to go home with?"

"No, sir. All I have is 20 cents."

"How do you propose to get home? That isn't enough to carry you back, is it?"

"No, sir, but I can walk back."

"H'm, you fell among thieves, didn't you?" The Judge is superintendent of a Sunday school.

"Yes, sir."

"Let me see the inside of your hands." If he was a working man these would show it. Williams turned his palms outward. They were hard and horny.

"Yes, you do work," commented the magistrate. "Well, you will have to pay $1 this time."

"How can I do that when I have only 20 cents?"

"You go inside for awhile and figure that out."

DR. WOTHERSPOON'S GALOP.

It is Sent From Australia to THE PRESS, and Beautifully Rendered by Miss Gussie Holmes.

All the way from Australia by mail, came to THE PRESS on Tuesday a handsomely illuminated copy of a brilliant "Galop de Concert" composed by Mr. George Wotherspoon of this city. It is dedicated to Mrs. Francis Hodgson Burnett, and copies of it were presented as a souvenir upon the occasion of the visit of His Excellency the Governor and the Countess of Hopetoun to the fiftieth performance of that charming play, "Little Lord Fauntleroy," which was produced at the Princess' Theatre, Melbourne, by special arrangement with Mr Wotherspoon, the authoress' representative.

The next day the music was played as a march at the Bryant school by Miss Gussie Holmes, and attracted deserved admiration because of its brilliancy and merit, and the effective manner in which it was rendered. Those judges of music who heard it, were sincere and enthusiastic in their praise of both Mr. Wotherspoon and Miss Holmes.

A Paint Shop Robbed.

During Monday night of last week, the building in the rear of Mr. Ferdinand G. Smith's residence at 169 West Front street, and used as a paint shop, was broken into and robbed of a quantity of paints, oils, varnishes, etc. The miscreant also upset a barrel of oil, allowing the same to run out on the floor. Mr. Smith estimates his loss at about $75.

Both Pastor and Wife in Despair.

The dispute between the pastor and the congregation of the Mt. Olive Baptist church, was finally settled on Saturday by the Deacons, Messrs E. Maynard, Mansfield, Robinson and John W. Reed together with Messrs Spencer Conway, John A Scott, Henry Pennington and Wm. Fisher, raising the sum of $198.61, it being the amount in full due the pastor for his services up to March 1, 1890. The pastor upon receiving said amount, together with letters of dismission and recommendation, agreed to surrender possession of the church and parsonage at once.

After this settlement had been effected the Parson's wife was arrested for assaulting Mrs. Laura Connett Monday last week. The trial will take place this week. Wm. A. Coddington represented the congregation and Wm. K. McClure represented the Parson.

PRAISE FOR A TALENTED PLAINFIELDER.

How a Young Woman Artist of This City is Publicly Commended in California.

The Daily Independent of Santa Barbara, California, is publishing a series of articles on the artists who have located in that land of fruits and flowers. The issue of January 14, had the following regarding a young woman of this city:

Entering Hawley building we pass to room No. 6. A knock brings quick response. We enter and find ourselves in the studio and presence of

MISS ELLA VAIL THORN.

The rooms are airy and light and while not richly furnished yet present an appearance suggesting the woman of taste and culture. Miss Thorn welcomes us graciously and makes a most pleasing impression on one's mind. Easy in conversation and with that most desirable of all traits—"tact"—she makes one immediately feel at ease. No one could visit Miss Thorn's studio and not admit her a most admirable hostess.

Miss Thorn is a lady of medium height, cheerful and sunshiny. That she loves her art is apparent almost from her first word. She is the only artist here who paints portraits exclusively. Her studio is not the picture gallery one finds belonging to artists working in other directions. Her work being entirely on orders, pictures do not accumulate. Still, one finds a goodly number of her paintings from which one readily gets an idea of what she has done and is capable of doing. A portrait of the late George Dugdale is an admirable piece of work and provokes pleasant comments from every visitor. Here is also a portrait of Bishop Vincent which no connoisseur could pass by without commendation.

Several portraits of lovely children are exhibited. One of them, a daughter of one of our best known Barbareños, is certainly a true work of art. There is a delicacy, a soft blending light and shade, a purity of the flesh tones and all the little accessories that real artists known so well how to use, that is most captivating.

To the remark that she is particularly happy in the portraiture of beautiful children, Miss Thorn said: "Yes, but do you know that I take more pleasure in painting the coarse cheeks, wrinkled brow and weather skin of the sailor or aged man?" This remark was not unexpected; other artists have said and will say the same. The greatest portraits of the world are not those of beautiful women but rather of men upon whose face we should not feel impelled to look twice, yet to whose presentment on canvas the artist has given a "hint of that which surpasses nature—the infinite beauty of truth when proclaimed by knowledge and sympathy."

Miss Thorn is still a young lady and has a whole lifetime before her. I think she will readily take rank with our first-rate artists. It would require no stretch of imagination to believe her work will be far more in demand in the future than it is now, though at no time has she had less than two orders ahead awaiting her brush.

Miss Thorn is from New Jersey. She adopted portrait painting because she loved it. She received the most of her art education at the New York Academy of Design with such teachers as Prof. Wilmarth and Mr. Reinhart. Under the latter she studied portraiture and had an easel in his studio. Later she was a professional artist in Plainfield, N. J. About one and one-half years ago she came to our city and feels that she has no cause for regret at the step. As to the merits of this artist we readily say that she is unusually painstaking, careful and studious. Her work shows a freedom and a vigor that is surprisingly good. Her portraits are all extremely fine and in all senses works of art. Miss Thorn has a brilliant future and we congratulate her on her deserved success.

The Rev. Dr. J. C. Bliss Took Part in the Debate.

The debates of the New York Presbytery over the revision of the Confession of Faith again drew a large audience to the Scotch Presbyterian church in New York on Jan. 29. The Rev. John F. Forbes started the debate. He did not believe that infants were lost because of not being elected. He favored the revision and thought the time would come when the Church would require a new creed.

Among the other distinguished clergymen who took part in the debate, was the Rev. Dr. John C. Bliss, formerly pastor of the Crescent Avenue church in this city. Dr. Bliss expressed himself in favor of the revision.

He gave some samples of substitutes for the sections of the third chapter, which the Revision Committee proposes to omit. While his substitutes breathed infinite love they were mindful of Young's dictum, "A God all mercy is a God unjust."

By Their Crops He Knew Them.

Mr. Long, of Somerville, whose coop was almost entirely stripped of prize hens and fat pullets, the other night, came to Plainfield Friday to identify if possible the "dressed" chickens that had been offered Van Syckle the butcher. Mr. Long brought samples of the corn he fed his poultry, and it proved to be the same as found in the crops of the dead ones. He testified also that he had fed his chickens pounded meat scraps the day before they were stolen, and meat scraps in irregular pieces were found in the crops examined.

To make the identification all the more positive, Mr. Long described a Wyandotte hen with a sore breast and faulty comb, that had won for him many prizes. Just such a hen minus her feathers, was among the lot of chickens offered Van Syckle by a man from Somerville who never had a coop of his own, it is said, and who Mr. Long describes as a worthless fellow.

Young People's Sociable.

The sociable given under the auspices of the Young People's Society of Trinity Reformed church, in the lecture room of the church Thursday, was one of the most successful ever given by the Society, and the ladies who constituted the committee of arrangements are to be congratulated upon the result of the affair.

Among those who contributed to the pleasure of the entertainment were Master Herbert Schutt, a member of the boy's choir of Holy Cross church, who has a sweet soprano voice, and Master Johnnie Voehl, who recited "The Music Stool" pleasingly, and the "The Dutchman and the Telephone," and "The Boy and The Pin," in response to encores. All were heartily applauded.

The balance of the programme consisted of violin solos by Mr. Andrew Carpenter; the Art Gallery shown by Mr. E. K. Anthony, and a dialogue, "The Art Critic," by "Aunt Nancy and her Sister Isabel." The characters were taken by Mrs. J. C. VanDyke and Miss Ella Dunn. There was a large attendance present.

The committee who had charge of the affair, consisted of Miss Emma Gilliam, chairman, Mrs. W. Oliver, Miss Ella Conley, Miss Ella Gardner, Miss Grace Nevius, Miss Ella Krymer. Chocolate and wafers were served in abundance.

—Sunday was the Feast of the Presentation of Christ in the Temple or of the Purification of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and was celebrated in the Roman Catholic and Episcopal churches of the city. It was also Septuagesima Sunday.

A Spring medicine is needed by every one. Winter food, largely consisting of salt meat and animal fats, causes the liver to become disordered and the blood impure, hence the necessity of a cleansing medicine. The best is Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

CITY COUNCIL MEETING.

A LONG SESSION AND MUCH BUSINESS TRANSACTED.

The Mayor Sends in His Budget of Appointments, and All But The Street Commissioner are Confirmed—The Salaries Fixed and Other Matters Considered.

The City Council met in regular session on Monday, all the members being present except Mr. Newhall. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved, and a petition from the Plainfield Street Railway company, asking for an extension of its proposed route, was referred to the Street Committee.

A communication from John Bergen, stating that his name was attached to Mr James H. Force's license application and not to Mr. Chas. Rock's, was referred to the License Committee.

Mr Chas. Sandford and others petitioned the Council to accept a part of Sandford avenue, extending from East Front street to Franklin avenue. Referred to the Street Committee.

Councilman Roberts from the Salaries Committee presented a communication fixing the salaries of the various city officers. Laid over for the time being.

The Board of Health submitted a condensed statement of the work performed by the Board during the year. Constant examination of the places liable to breed disease had been made; four hundred and seventy-seven places had been visited; 169 orders were served to remove nuisances, and 61 cases of disease were reported by the Board. Over 1200 underground receptacles have been cleaned out during the year. The Board further called attention to the dangerous condition of Green and Cedar brooks, as being deleterious to the city's health. The oil cloth works were also alluded to, and attention was called to several of the health ordinances now inoperative. Referred to the Law and Ordinance Committee.

The following claims, together with a batch of poor bills, were presented, referred and subsequently ordered paid:

Police—W. R. Mattox, $10.50; Andrew Muier, $1.50; P. Lynch, $60; T. McCue, $60; Geo. W. Grant, $60; T. J. Carry, $90; Chas. Giesse, $60; P. J. Flanagan, $60; C. Jones, $5.50.

Fire Department—M. J. McCarty, $7; Geo. Conover, $41.66; Kline & Staats, $55; W. F. Adams, $2.33; T. O. Doane, $41.66; E. A. Laine, $12.50; James A. Martin, $18.75; Joseph Cooney, $13.33; A. Freeman, $2.50; T. B. Randolph, $26; C. F. Glaentzer, $5.

Miscellaneous—Plainfield Electric Light Co, $675.17; Times Printing and Publishing Co., $76.05; Wm. Hand, $15; Estate D. J. Boice, $43.55 and $269.12; John G. Cook, $9; T. W. Morrison, $70.95; John Johnson, $125; Schwed Bros., $18.75 and $8.73.

Mayor Male sent in the following nominations, which were, upon motion of Mr. Smith called up separately and acted upon. Except where otherwise mentioned, the nominations were confirmed:

Corporation Counsel—Craig A. Marsh.

Members of the Board of Health—S. A. Ginna, L. W. Serrell, George W. Endicott.

City Physician—Andrew Manning.

Police—Regular—Tunis J. Carey, Geo. W. Grant, P. Lynch, T. McCue, P. J. Flanagan, Chas. Giesse.

Specials—S. R. Hope at Bryant school building; W. Clarkson at High School; W. V. Mundy at the Washington School; Robert Walker at the Irving School; M. Higgins at St. Mary's parochial school; W. R. Mattox, Randolph A. Miner, Jacob Kriney, Philip Giesse, W. Slifer, C. Jones, Joseph Cooney and F. Moran.

Chief of the Fire Department—T. O. Doane.

First Assistant—E. A. Laine.

Second Assistant—J. A. Martin.

Pound Masters—D. Hand and Thos. T. Barrett.

The Mayor also nominated William Hand for Street Commissioner, but his confirmation was defeated the following Councilmen voting "no:" Messrs Gallup, Hetfield, Moffett, Roberts, Smith and Spangenberg.

Before the vote was taken on the matter of confirming or rejecting the Mayor's nomination for Street Commissioner, a spirited discussion took place. Mr. Smith favored laying the matter on the table; Mr Rushmore wanted to know his reason, whereupon Mr. Smith stated that the Mayor was to have sent in another name in the place of Mr. Hand, but the man was found to be ineligible for the office. Mr. Rushmore thought the Council should stand by the Mayor and confirm his appointment.

Mr. Hetfield, from the Fire and Building Committee, asked for an extension of time to report on a certain resolution sent in at the last meeting, and Mr. Rushmore, from the Law and Ordinance Committee, reported correct the bonds of the Collector, Treasurer, and four Constables. They were filed.

Upon motion of Mr. Gallup it was decided that when the Council adjourn it be to meet again on the 17th inst. So ordered.

THE OFFICERS SALARIES:

The following salaries were fixed:

Clerk—$750.
City Treasurer—$450.
Corporation Counsel—$750.
Overseer of the Poor—$350.
City Physician—$365. (Increased from $250.)
Chief of Police—$1 000.
Regular Police—$720.
Special police—Twenty-five cents an hour when on duty.

The matter of fixing the salary of the City Judge was discussed at some length. The present compensation is $300 which amount is prescribed by the city charter. Mr Smith favored increasing the salary, but the matter was laid over. The other salaries fixed were:

Chief of the Fire Department—$600.
First Assistant—$75.
Second Assistant—$75.
Street Commissioner—$1,000.
Assessor—$800.
Janitor of Council chamber—$50 and $3 for each extra meeting.
Collector—$1,200 and $100 for office rent.

Overseer of the Poor, J. O. Nodyne, was granted an increase of $50 per year for rent.

Mr. Hetfield introduced a resolution which prevailed, requesting the appointment of a special committee of three, said committee to confer with the Street Committee relative to sewerage. Messrs Hetfield, Spangenberg and Rushmore were appointed by the chair.

A resolution was also adopted requesting the Corporation Counsel to draft an act to be presented to the Legislature, concerning the collection of taxes; also to urge its passage.

Mr. Dunham submitted "an ordinance to repeal certain ordinances," relating to the Board of Health and the City Physician. Referred to the Law and Ordinance Committee.

Mr. Dunham offered a resolution, which was opposed by some of the Councilmen, providing for the re-leasing of the city offices. The subject was discussed at length, and the resolution was finally adopted, Messrs Hetfield, Moffett and Spangenberg voting "no."

The monthly reports of the City Treasurer and Collector were received and filed. The former showed a balance of $15,000 on hand, and the latter showed that $4,204.74 had been collected during the month, $1,044.40 of which had been credited to the Board of Education.

The quarterly report of the City Physician was received and filed, and the report of the Board of Engineers of the fire department recommending the confirmation of [illegible] firemen was tabled.

Two applications for [illegible] licenses were referred.

Mr. Hetfield made a motion which prevailed, requesting the Mayor to send in at the next meeting the name of some person suitable for delinquent tax collector.

The Auditing Committee reported on the claims sent in during the evening, after which the Council adjourned at 11 o'clock.

TRUSTEES IN CONFERENCE.

THE WOMEN'S NIGHT SCHOOL CLOSED AND THE MEN'S ABOUT TO BE.

An Appeal for Manual Training Referred to the Committee on Teachers and Text Books—Mr. J. W. Jackson Sets a Good Example.

*There were present at the regular meet*ing of the Board of Education, Monday, President Kirkner, Secretary Murray, Trustees Babcock and Probasco, Principal Goodrich and Clerk Clark. The business transacted was mainly of a routine nature.

President Kirkner stated that in spite of the small attendance at the night school for women, it had been kept open a while at the request of the Relief Association; but as the attendance had not been increased by the efforts of the Association and public appeal, the school had been closed on January 20. Principal Goodrich reported that the attendance at the men's night school had also fallen off, but thought it was because the manufacturing establishments were now running at night. The Board resolved to still keep the men's school open at least until the Principal should ascertain whether the press and tool works expected to continue their night work. The question of closing the men's school would then be considered at a meeting of the Board, to be called by the President.

A communication from Mr. James W. Jackson was received by the Board with open arms. Mr. Jackson requested to be permitted the pleasure of presenting a flag to the Irving school, which was unanimously granted and the Secretary was instructed to convey the sincere thanks of the Board to Mr. Jackson for his very welcome gift and the establishment of a precedent that would probably appeal to other public spirited citizens.

Trustee Probasco, the new member of the Board, stated that he had made a tour of inspection of all the schools and was intensely gratified at what he had seen. The condition of the buildings throughout, the tidiness of the scholars and the healthy appearance of all the children, spoke well for those in charge. Dr Probasco found one child with an unpleasant sore in her ear, and Trustee Probasco sent her home and afterwards called on the parents and explained how offensive the case was and that the comfort of all the other children must be considered.

Trustee Babcock reported a case of a boy whose parents claimed he had been very ill of a cold caught from the draft of an open window on his head in the class-room. The Principal was instructed to again impress upon the minds of the teachers that they must not open the class room windows. In the case of a scholar who had been suspended by a Vice Principal, President Kirkner stated that he had reinstated the scholar. He called the attention of Principal Goodrich to the law which explicitly stated that no one had authority to suspend a scholar except the Principal, and he must report such action immediately to the President of the Board.

A communication was read by Secretary Murray, from Mrs W. L. Patton and Mrs. D. W. Pond, appealing in the name of the "Monday Afternoon Club" of Plainfield, for the introduction of a new element into the curriculum of the public schools. The suggestion was that the means and methods for a course of manual training be procured. The cost was estimated at $2,000, one-half of which the State subscribed upon the advancement of a like amount from the school funds.

Trustee Murray moved that the communication, together with the constitution and by-laws of the Monday Afternoon Club, and other accompanying documents, be referred to the Committee on Teachers and Text Books. President Kirkner stated that the Committee on Teachers and Text Books respectfully declined. Trustee Babcock suggested the reference of the matter to the Committee on Buildings and Repairs, and Trustee Probasco declined. The President called attention to the fact that when the reduction of $5,000 in the tax for this year's school purposes was proposed, he told the Board that they would not have enough to get through with, and he guessed they had found it out. Trustee Murray acknowledged that the President was right, and promised to give the Board a statement of its available funds and expenses for the year, at the next meeting. Until then any matter that involved any cost, could not be considered. About $25,000—which included $11,786 07 just received as this year's apportionment from the State—would be all the Board would have to to meet expenses up to December 1890. The communication was then referred to the Committee on Teachers and Text Books.

Principal Goodrich reported the engagement of Miss C. Louise Stoll to take Miss Arnold's place as a substitute for Miss Bullock who was still absent but expecting to be back by the first of March. The Principal's action was confirmed. President Kirkner said that T. W. Morrison of North Plainfield, wanted to know whether as he was a taxpayer in Plainfield he should be compelled to pay a tuition fee for his daughter who was attending one of the city's schools. The Board said he would, as tax-paying could not give any title of citizenship to a non-resident.

Special to Boys.

A Small Fire.

About five o'clock Monday a small fire occurred in Mr. Charles D. Wadsworth's *residence, at the corner of Cen*tral avenue and Sixth street, but fortunately it was extinguished before any serious damage was done. The fire originated under a hearth-stone in a bedroom on the second floor, and had made considerable progress when Chief Doane and his assistants arrived on the spot. The upper story was filled with smoke, but a few goblets full of water was all that was necessary to put the fire out.

One of the girls employed by the family displayed remarkable courage and worked heroically to extinguish the flames.

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

L. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—Oh, [illegible] Y. M. C. A. building.

—The next legal holiday will be Washington's Birthday, which occurs on the 22d of this month.

—St. Valentine's Day is approaching and lovers and others are looking forward to that day in happy anticipation.

—The Union County Board at Agriculture will hold an all-day meeting at the Town Hall, Westfield, on Thursday of this week.

—Constable Moffett holds a warrant for the ejectment of James Tracy from his shoe shop on Park avenue, for non-payment of rent.

—Arrangements are being made for a shooting match to be held on the Middlesex Gun Club grounds at Dunellen, on February 22.

—To [illegible] a man to life improvement without [illegible] has no terrors to the man who doesn't advertise. He is accustomed to [illegible].

—The largest single collection for [illegible] alone ever taken in Trinity Reformed church, was that of last Sunday morning for foreign missions, amounting to $[illegible].

—Physicians report a decrease in the number of persons suffering from the la Grippe. The doctors agree that a relapse is usually more serious than the first attack.

—In the Somerset County Courts [illegible] day has been changed from January 31 to February 7. The business for the term has been completed, and the jurors discharged.

—The City Board of Health met on Saturday evening to receive the bids for collecting garbage. Six bids were received in all, but no definite action was taken in the matter.

—Chas. Trotter was on Saturday held to bail to await the action of the Grand Jury, on a charge of stealing lumber from the Rock View avenue bridge in North Plainfield.

—The City National Bank has declared a dividend of three and one-half per cent on the capital stock, out of the earnings for the past six months, payable on and after February 1.

—The Star of Bethlehem, for the seventh time since the birth of Christ, will be visible this year. It appears once in every 315 years and is very brilliant for about 20 days.

—Mr. Chas. Trotter claims that the lumber which disappeared from the Rock View avenue bridge recently, was valued at about 50 or 60 cents, instead of $10, as the bridge company's agent claims.

—Our icemen are getting very anxious about filling their ice houses this winter. The houses are not empty, and most of the dealers are depending upon a supply from Pennsylvania to fill their orders.

—Mrs. Frank Lowe wishes THE PRESS to explain that the famous statement that "Chief Carey says it has ruined more young men than any saloon in Plainfield," was not applied to her husband's place.

—In the Criminal Court at Elizabeth Thursday, the only case was the arraignment of Joseph T. Sullivan of this city, on an indictment for larceny. He pleaded not guilty and the trial was set down for February 7.

—Mr. John H. Rowland has severed his connection with the Central Railroad company as assistant freight agent at the station here, and accepted a position in the warehouse of A. D. Thompson on North avenue.

—From twelve to fifteen tramps lodge every night in the Somerville jail, at the expense of the county. Tramps give this city a wide berth, since Chief Carey has undertaken the task of ridding Plainfield of the nuisance.

—Three weeks ago a man from Elizabeth bought a horse from a dealer in this city, paying cash for the animal. On Saturday the man returned the horse, and wanted his money back, claiming that the animal was balky.

—Over one thousand pictures made by members of the Plainfield Camera Club, including the wonderful instantaneous snaps of Mr. Ernest Mars, are on exhibition in the Y. M. C. A. parlors. A flash light is made of the audience each evening.

—An exchange says the present Winter is somewhat resembling that of 1828. There was hardly a snow storm until about the middle of February, when severely cold weather set in and continued for more than a month, with plenty of ice for filling ice houses.

—Mr. A. Vanderbeek, the owner of the Chautauqua building, corner of Park and North avenues, is offering the rooms lately vacated by the C. L. S. C., for rent. No finer rooms can be found in the city for offices. They are large, well lighted, heated by steam and well ventilated.

—Mr. Henry Dekker, proprietor of the American steam laundry, claims that the action brought against him by a man named Haughter, as told in yesterday's PRESS, was without just cause. He says the man never left the laundry at his place, to recover the value of which Mr. Haughter brought suit.

—Chief Doane, and Councilmen Hetfield, Gallup and Roberts, composing the Fire Committee, made a tour of the houses of the fire department, Saturday, a. m. and inspected the City's property. In the afternoon they went to Jersey City to look at a chemical engine and go through the fire houses of that city.

—A number of the ladies of Trinity Reformed church, who are enthusiastic in the matter of liquidating the church debt, are arranging for a bazaar, which is to be held in the rooms just vacated by the C. L. S. C., corner of Park and North avenues, on the afternoons and evenings of Thursday and Friday, February 13 and 14.

—A case that will interest many because they have been there themselves, will come up in a Justice's court in this city in a few days. A citizen sued a laundryman for some shirts lost in the wash. All men have had pieces disappear time and time again from their laundry list, but could get no redress. The suit spoken of above, will establish a precedent probably.

—Mr. J. H. Fosher, one of our citizens, calls the attention of our readers, today, to the announcement of his arrival on Saturday with a carload of first-class horses, for all purposes. Mr. Fosher is a reliable gentleman to deal with, and those of our readers desiring a good horse should read his advertisement, and then call and make their selection from his large stock.

—Twelve large barrels of clothing are soon to be forwarded by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Plainfield, to Southern Dakota, in response to a touching appeal through the column of The Union Signal. Any desiring to contribute any articles [illegible] and in good repair for this purpose, may leave such at the rooms, 73 West Front street, Thursday from 2 to 5 p. m.

—The Equitable Life Insurance Company of New York was obliged to [illegible] down a few days ago, when Mr. W. K. McClure of this city compelled the company to continue the [illegible] dollar life insurance policy which Mr. F. T. Schoonmaker holds on his life, and which the company had declared null and void. Mr. Schoonmaker had paid in over fifteen hundred dollars in premiums.

Miss Jennie VanWinkle of Madison avenue, is visiting at Albany, N. Y., and not at Asbury, N. J., as previously reported.

The funeral of the late Edward Burk, who died on January 30, took place from St. Mary's church, Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

Mr. P. J. MacAndrew, night operator at the Western Union office, will succeed Mr. John H. Rowland as assistant freight agent in this city.

After a long illness of consumption, the death occurred Sunday night at 9 o'clock, of Fred J. Wells at his home, No. 54 West Fifth street.

The plans are completed for a handsome house that Justice Vincent W. Nash will have erected for himself, on Prospect place. It will cost about $3,000.

An Epworth League is to be organized at Hightstown, this State on February 19, and among the speakers announced for the occasion is Rev. Dr. J. L. Hurlbut of this city.

The name of Mr. William Walters was unintentionally omitted from the list of those who took part in the entertainment at Warren Mission chapel, on Thursday evening last.

Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum, on Monday mailed to Mr. and Mrs. Seymour Marsh, a set of resolutions bewailing the death of their son, William, which occurred recently.

The Central Times says: "The New York Herald contained, on Sunday, an illustrated article on the Plainfield Bicycle Club. It was prepared by Nathan J. Loring, of the Daily Press."

The many friends of Mr. Richard Merritt in this city, will be glad to learn that he is rapidly regaining his health at Tarrytown, N. Y., where he is undergoing a course of medical treatment.

Mr. D. S. DeCamp, proprietor of the Hotel DeCamp, at Succasunny, Morris County, N. J., and Mr. Hiram H. DeCamp, Jr., are guests at Force's Hotel, North avenue, this city, for a few days.

The irresponsible newspaper report that "cards are out" announcing the approaching marriage of Mr William Sanford and Miss Weller, of St. Paul," is untrue. No date has yet been fixed for any such ceremony.

Past Master Frank O. Herring, of Anchor Lodge, this city, was elected a District Deputy Grand Master, Thursday, at the 103d Annual Grand Communication of Free and Accepted Masons of New Jersey, held in Trenton.

Mr. E. H. Graves of Dunellen, for the past three months city editor of the News of this city, severed his connection with that concern Saturday, and will accept a position in more congenial quarters. Mr. Graves' friends wish him good luck in his new venture.

Mrs. Mary Mills, mother of Mrs. Elijah Stiles, of 29 Chatham street, North Plainfield, died at the home of the latter on Saturday, in the 74th year of her age. Funeral will take place from the house on Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. Interment private.

Rev. J. W. Mitchell, pastor of Mt. Olive Baptist church, preached his farewell sermon Sunday night before a large audience, taking his text from Ephesians 3—25: 27. During his sermon, Rev. Mr. Mitchell made no allusion whatever to the recent difficulty in the church.

Mr Frank Schuck, the competent and efficient engineer for Messrs Spicer & Hubbard, was one of the first to arrive at the Linke fire a short time since. He performed valuable services by jumping through a window and aiding materially in extinguishing the flames.

The Rev. Mr. Bowers, pastor of the Warrenville church, was tendered a donation party at the residence of Mr. Israel Adams on Thursday evening. The party was attended by one hundred and seventy-five persons, and the parson's wallet was increased to the extent of $200.

At Elizabeth, Sunday afternoon, Mr. Stephen A. Davis, formerly of this city, but now proprietor of "The Elm House," East Grand street, fell from a step-ladder and sprained both ankles and an arm. Mr. Davis is today in bed, but he is slowly recovering from the injuries he received.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Mary Mills, who died on Saturday morning, took place on Tuesday at 2:30, from the home of her daughter, Mrs. Elijah Stiles, No. 29 Chatham street. The Rev. D. J. Yerkes, D. D., pastor of the First Baptist church, officiated. Interment at convenience of family.

By request of Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, her lecture at the Seminary will occur on February 14, at half-past three o'clock in the afternoon, instead of on the evening of February 6. Mrs. Hall's paper on the "Art of Conversation," will be given on the afternoon of Friday, the 7th of February, at half-past three o'clock.

The Alpine Social Club held another in the series of Winter sociables at the home of Mr. Edward Vail, at Evona, on evening Jan. 28. The party consisted of about twenty-five couples, and the evening was passed in "tripping it lightly" to Prof. France's inspiring strains. The next sociable in the series will take place on February 13.

The members of the "cooking class," a body of young ladies composed of the younger pupils of Miss Kenyon's seminary and of the Misses Scribner and Newton's private school, gave a pink [illegible] party at the residence of Miss Annie Stewart, one of the members, No. 42 West Seventh street, Friday evening. Only the members of the class, and a very few of their near friends were invited.

In the empty offices of the C. L. S. C., Saturday evening, was held a reunion of those who had been connected in its hard-won service for the past many years. Twenty-two were present and enjoyed the social entertainment of the affair in spite of the fact that it was also a severing of the ties that had bound them. Souvenirs were presented by Miss Kimball and Miss Chamberlin and a bountiful supper was served.

A little girl was born to Mr. and Mrs. G. H. VanNest, of Craig place, Tuesday.

Mr. John L. Hall of Williamsport, Pa., is a guest at Force's Hotel, for a few days.

Chief Doane of the Fire Department, Tuesday received from Mr. Chas. D. Wadsworth, of Central avenue, a check for $25 for the Firemen's Relief Association. The money was given in appreciation of the firemen's services in extinguishing the fire in Mr. Wadsworth's home on Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Terry of Richmond street, have been doubly afflicted by death of two of their children, Grace L. B., aged two years and one day, and Elva Jane, aged three years, six months and seven days. One of the children died Monday of membraneous croup, and the other, on Tuesday, succumbed to the ravages of diphtheria.

A STARTLING INQUIRY.

There Are Things That Will Even Embarrass a Newspaper Reporter.

A couple of ladies residing on Broadway, passed up North avenue the other evening on their way home. When they came to Peace street opposite the Friends' meeting house, the street being very muddy one of them raised the skirt of her dress so as to clear the mud and started across. The other lady hesitated for a moment.

Just at this time a PRESS reporter on his way from the station, stepped forward and walked right behind the lady who was wading through the mud. She—trudging along, looking for good places to step on—said to her supposed companion immediately behind: "How do you like my new stockings?" The poor reporter deigned no reply, but managed to reach the sidewalk, when it is said he fell all in a heap and was helped home by some kind neighbors. The doctor thinks that by taking good care of himself, he will recover from the shock and be out in a few days.

No One Should Miss It.

The exhibition of photograph work by the members of the Plainfield Camera Club, is now open to the public every afternoon and evening at the Y. M. C. A., rooms. The display is particularly fine and thoroughly entertaining. One must needs go more than once to enjoy all that is in it.

An Array of Philanthropic Speakers and Workers.

About thirty people representative of different sects of the city, were present at the meeting held in the Unitarian chapel on Second place, on Thursday, for the advancement of the project of a "Boys Club."

Mr. Charles W. Opdyke presided. A report of the progress made and the intent of the projectors, was read by Mrs. W. L. Patton. After this report addresses were made by the Rev. Mr. Tilden, Mr. A. M. Powell and the Hon. Nathan Harper.

Reform Hall.

The address of Captain George D. Morrison in Reform Hall Sunday night, was one of the most interesting and instructive ever uttered from that platform. His chosen subject was "The Sailor, Rum and the Saviour," and admirably did he handle it. After reviewing the peculiarities and influences of the sea, its fascinations and perils, gleaned from long personal experience, he detailed the life, habits and temptations of the sailor, scourged the devastating effects of liquor drinking and trafficking, and presented in a clear and convincing manner the blessed results of religion, and the necessity of a firm reliance upon Christ as the only anchor of safety. His illustrations were many and pointed. Captain Morrison is an entertaining and forcible speaker, and the unanimous desire of the audience was to hear him again in Reform Hall.

President Harper presided, Captain Morrison conducted the devotional services, and Mr. King led the choir, with Mr. Rogers as organist.

At the Trinity Reformed Church.

The Rev. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of the Trinity Reformed church, delivered an interesting lecture in that church Sunday night, the occasion being the ninth anniversary of the United Society of Christian Endeavor. The reverend gentleman aptly illustrated the marvelous growth of the society, and produced figures to substantiate his statements. He also showed that the society, as now pledged, is a great benefit to the church.

The Rev. Mr. Schenck's remarks should have been heard by every member of the Y. P. S. C. E. in the city.

Death of Miss Augusta Winckler.

At her home in North Plainfield between eleven and twelve o'clock of Thursday, occurred the death of Augusta, daughter of Augustus J. and Margaret A. Winckler, aged nineteen years and three months.

She was taken sick to her bed on Thanksgiving day, and her illness developed into hasty consumption which resulted in her death. She was conscious until the last, and as the end was approaching she called each member of the family to the bedside and spoke consoling words to them. Her death was peaceful and happy.

Miss Winckler was a member of the Congregational church and was a regular attendant up to the time her illness began.

The last sad rites following the death of the late Augusta Winckler daughter of Augustus J., and Margaret A. Winckler, who died on January 30, were enacted from her parent's home on Park place, Sunday afternoon at one o'clock. The house was literally packed with the mourners and sympathizing friends of the family. A trio, consisting of Messrs. E. E. Runyon, Morris Van Arsdale and B. T. Barnes, sang "Over Jourdan" and "Safe in the Arms of Jesus," and the Rev. C. L. Goodrich, pastor of the Congregational church, of which Miss Winckler was a member, read the twenty-seventh Psalm, it being her favored chapter in the Bible. Rev. Mr. Goodrich spoke beautifully and eulogistically of Miss Winckler, alluding particularly to her complete resignation and faith in the Master. He also spoke of the testimony she bore in life of God's love and the fulfillment of His promises.

The casket was laden with handsome floral designs, the gifts of near friends. Interment was made in the family plot at Hillside cemetery.

—If a severely cold snap shall overtake us later in the Winter, it will be keenly felt by the hoboes. Many of them under the influence of the mild weather, are shedding their coats, and in a few weeks will be attired in their Spring clothes.

NOT MISS SWEENEY, OF PLAINFIELD.

A Girl Found Dead, With the Same Name, and From the Same Street.

On the first page of THE PRESS, Jan. 25, appeared the following despatch:

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., January 25.—A man calling at the laundry of Yee Lee and Sing Lee found both the Chinamen and a woman named Mamie Sweeney dead on the floor. Physicians think death was caused by inhalation of chlorine gas generated in some way from washing materials. The woman was a dissipated character. It is said that Sing Lee's uncle is a merchant at 34 Pell street, New York.

It was at once rumored about the city that the unfortunate girl was Mamie Sweeney, whose parents live on East Third street. A PRESS reporter even found acquaintances of the Plainfield Sweeney girl who positively knew she was living at 34 Pell street, New York.

Advices received from Binghampton, however, prove that the girl mentioned in the despatch was from Scranton, where her parents and five sisters still live. She answers in no particular to the description of Mamie Sweeney of this city, except that the names are the same and the latter has been working in a Chinese laundry on Pell street.

CHAUTAUQUA'S BRAVE WOMEN.

One of Them Carried Home More Than She Could Bring Back.

A New York paper recently told how the Plainfield offices of the C. L. S. C., with the exception of the Society of Fine Arts, have been in the hands of women since the Circle took possession of them. The only employee resembling a man who has been tolerated within their sacred precincts is the office boy.

The zeal and faithfulness of the employees have been tried on several occasions, however, and never found wanting. Once when a fire broke out across the street, instead of rushing down the stairs in a panic, the girls quietly put on their hats and jackets and each seized one of the precious and heavy volumes comprising the records of the Circle, and stood ready to escape. Fortunately the fire was gotten under control and the books were returned to the safe.

It is related that one of the girls was so anxious for the safety of her particular volume that she took it home and to bed with her. But the astonishing part of this proceeding is that she was unable the next day to bring back the book she had carried to her home in North Plainfield. In her excitement she had carried without noticing its weight, an enormous volume that in cold blood she could not lift.

MR. CLARENCE MURPHY NOW HOLDS IT.

But the New Jersey Chess Association will Fight Again for the Championship on the 22d.

All lovers of chess will be interested in knowing that on the 22d of this month, the fifth annual tournament of the above association will take place at New Brunswick.

The New Jersey Chess Association was organized at Elizabeth, February 22, 1886, where the first tournament was held, the State championship being won by Edward C. Stokes, of Millville; second prize by R. B. Keys, of Plainfield; third prize by N. P. Howell; fourth prize by Max Puegner. Forty contestants.

The tournament of 1887 was held at Newark, February 22, where the State championship was again won by Edward C. Stokes; second prize by N. Hymes. Forty contestants.

The tournament of 1888 was held at Rutherford, February 22. The State championship was won by R. B. Keys of Plainfield; second prize by P. J. Doyle. Thirty-two contestants.

The tournament of 1889 was held at Plainfield, February 22. The State championship was won by C. L. Murphy of Plainfield; second prize by R. W. Pope of Elizabeth.

The first prize in Section A, open tournament, was awarded to E. Hymes, Newark; second prize to W. H. Rowe of Orange.

The Grand Lodge Meeting.

The Grand Lodge of New Jersey, F. and A. M., began its annual session, at Masonic Temple, Trenton, Jan. 29. There was a large attendance of the prominent members of the Order present, including Messrs. C. A. Marsh, F. O. Herring, C. M. Goddard, and W. J. Ford, of Anchor Lodge, and Messrs. W. H. Sebring, H. Woodland and B. F. Coriell of Jerusalem Lodge, this city.

Mr. Wadworth's Loss Adjusted.

Councilman M. M. Dunham, representing the Continental and Ætna Insurance Cos., Wednesday adjusted the loss on Mr Charles D. Wadworth's residence on Central avenue, caused by the fire on Monday evening. The two companies allowed Mr. Wadsworth $75, the full amount of his claim.

The Ætna company did not even send an adjuster to this city, but gave Mr. Dunham the power of attorney.

Fire at Green Brook.

About 9 o'clock Tuesday night, fire was discovered in the attic of the large dwelling house situated on what is known as the "Goad mill property," on Green Brook road, about three miles West of this city. The building was owned by Mr. A. Holeman, and when the fire was first discovered it was well under way.

The occupants of the building escaped, and succeeded in saving most of the household effects. The house was burned to the ground.

Thought to Have Come From Plainfield.

William Smith, a negro, was arrested by Officer Reuter at the Elizabethport station of the Central railroad at half-past two o'clock Friday morning says the Elizabeth Journal. He carried a bag or potato sack containing a set of harness, and from his actions the officer suspected him of theft and took him into custody.

The prisoner told different stories. He first said he came from Flagtown on a freight train, and that he had bought the harness for $15. He afterwards said he had been working for a Mr. Hill, and that he had taken the harness in part payment.

The bag was marked "George M. Morrison, Plainfield." Justice Hetfield remanded Smith, and Chief Austin is making inquiries at Plainfield and vicinity, as it is believed the harness was stolen from that locality.

Friendly Sons of St. Patrick.

A meeting of the above named Order was held in St. Mary's T. A. B. Hall, on Tuesday, for the purpose of making the preliminary arrangements for a grand banquet on St. Patrick's Day.

The various societies connected with St. Mary's church met on Friday evening last and appointed an executive committee, and at the meeting on Tuesday, which was presided over by Mr. A. E. Keeney, the minutes of the executive committee were read and approved.

The following persons were appointed as a Committee on Invitations: Messrs H. McDonald, John Traynor, Thomas Sheehan, John O'Rourke and William Brown.

The Society will hold another meeting on Tuesday evening next, when the place for holding the banquet will probably be decided upon.

—The regular monthly meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society of the German Reformed church will be held this evening at 8 o'clock in the lecture room of the church. A cordial invitation to be present is extended to all members.

DANGEROUS FEATURES OF THE WATER WORKS FRANCHISE.

We May be Flooded With Bonds, If Never With Water—A Humorous Provision That the City May go to the Expense of Completing the Work "At the Expense of the Company."

Below in full is given a second article from the Central Times on the water contract, which calls attention again and more forcibly to those features of which the sole defender of the contract had nothing to say in his communication published in THE PRESS of Friday, Jan. 24.

Our remarks last week on the water scheme seem to have opened the eyes of a good many citizens to the actual contract sanctioned by the Common Council last year, and to have produced some disturbance among the promoters of the scheme. A reply has been published by a defender of the contract. Singularly enough the writer of it admitted the truth of one of the two points we made last week, and was wholly silent on the other. The first of these points was—that the bond given by the water company was a penal bond only, forfeiting nothing absolutely to the city, and therefore constituted a very limited and inadequate protection to the city. The second, and much more important, point made was, that the water company is at liberty to create a flood of bonds, whether it should ever turn on a flood of water or not. There is nothing in the contract which limits the amount, or kind, or interest rate, of the debts, or mortgages with which it may encumber the property. There is nothing, in other words, to prevent the company from selling any amount of bonds it may choose, or from thus bankrupting itself if it should so choose, so as to make itself an entirely irresponsible party for the city to deal with, either in the adjustment of any claims which the city might have against it, or as a vendor of the property, if the city should ever desire to avail of the so-called option to purchase.

Of course, if the water company desired to act in the best of faith, and really had the means to carry out their contract, they would do it on a stock basis, and without incurring bonded or other indebtedness. On the other hand, if the party was one without means, and disposed to avail of their contract and privilege in a merely speculative way, they would naturally float as many bonds as the outside public could be induced to buy of them, and thus make all the money, "cash in hand," that they could, leaving any sort of a deluge to follow, that might. If they were not residents or citizens of Plainfield, that fact might leave them without the local sentiment or pride which sometimes deters persons from being identified with disaster to a local institution.

Either this contract for water works is a prior lien on the works themselves, or it is not. If it is, then the bonds that the water works may issue would constitute a second mortgage. If it is not such a first lien—and that is the way it looks to us—then under the terms of this contract the city is liable to find itself a responsible party on the one side, and the water works company, overloaded perhaps with debt, and thus irresponsible, on the other side. One thing seems to be carefully provided for in the contract, and that is a considerably higher taxation for every property holder in the town, whether benefited or not by the water works. The continued solvency of the water company is not so carefully provided for.

It is rather diverting to a mind susceptible to humorous influences to read certain portions of this water works contract. For example, look at article 82 in said contract.

"In case the company fails to complete the works within the stipulated time, then the city may assume the charge of the work, carry it on to completion in the manner herein contracted by said company, and at the expense of said company."

But suppose that the company has been issuing, as it went along, a construction mortgage covering its plant so far and so fast as built, how is the city ever to recover any money thus laid out by it in completing the works? Here again we see no provision for forfeiture either of the company's corporate existence, or powers, or shares, or of its incomplete works to the city. The effect of this odd article seems to be, that if, after the city has given away this water works franchise, and got into trouble about a failure of the company or its contract, it can find any investors or capitalists willing to lend it (the city) the money with which to complete the water works plant, then it may have the great boon and privilege of completing for the company its work and may then get back the sum so expended—if it can.

The stock exchange list shows plenty of wrecked water works concerns. One small town not far distant from us in New Jersey, is burdened with a debt of $1,000,000 for water works—a "reorganized" debt at that. There are many concerns who never get far enough to obtain a stock exchange quotation. We sincerely trust that no institution of ours will ever again come to grief. If we are spared such experiences, it may prove that the warning we have recently felt compelled to utter may have contributed to this immunity.

We are far from having any personal difference with any of the projectors of the water enterprise. Their object naturally is to make money and to get the best bargain out of the city that they can. If it were not for one or two circumstances and accidental points in connection with this business, which do not appear upon the surface, but which may yet affect legally the power of the company to enforce this peculiar contract against the city, we should say that the arrangement as it stands is much more in favor of the company than of the city. These points may yet serve in case of great need as a partial cover from injury in case of any attempt to take advantage of the city on technical grounds. What we fear is, that for all parties concerned we have on hand a water works agreement which is less of a contract than of a muddle.

Wants Pay for His Dog.

Special Officer James Babbitt wants THE PRESS to mention the fact that a young man who is employed in a North avenue grocery store borrowed his $25 hound dog to go hunting at Bound Brook on Thanksgiving Day, and that instead of shooting game, the young man accidentally shot the dog. Mr. Babbitt says he has repeatedly been promised pay for the dog, but as yet he has not seen the wherewith.

$125 Worth of Tools Stolen.

Some time during Thursday a thief or thieves carried away from the bridge now in course of erection over Stony brook on Rockview avenue, North Plainfield, a box of tools belonging to the Wrought Iron Bridge Company of Canton, Ohio, valued at about $125. This company has the contract for building the bridge, and was necessarily obliged to use a large number of tools, some of which cost ten dollars apiece. No clew was left whereby the identity of the perpetrators of the crime might be established.

The company has of late been missing lumber from the new bridge, and this morning Mr. John W. Reeves, the company's agent, went before Justice Hardy in North Plainfield, and swore out a complaint against Chas. Trotter, charging him with confiscating lumber valued at upwards of $10. Constable Bezeroombe apprehended the accused, and he gave bail to appear for a hearing.

WHAT WILL BE OFFERED TO ATTRACT THEM.

Saloons are More Prone to Crime than Christianity, but Some Good Women and Good Men of This City are Going to Try Save Some of the Bad Boys.

"Cure is the voice of the past; prevention, the divine whisper of today." Statistics show that out of a total of 500,000, or half a million criminals in the prisons of the United States, 333,300 are young men under twenty-two years of age; and that a vast majority of the young men of America do not attend places of worship. In a city of 19,000 inhabitants, where the facts were carefully ascertained, there were 3,500 young men. Only eighty-five of these were members of Protestant churches, and during the previous year not one had been received into a church, while 300 had been convicted of crime. If the American Republic is to stand, the one successful experiment in the history of the World, of government by the people, it will be because the men of this country are true men; it will be because they were started to be such, as boys. One word to a boy is worth a thousand to a man. If the boys of America could speak with one voice, they could with justice thunder in the ears of their elders, the men and women who love their country and their race—"LOOK OUT FOR US, WE WILL BE MEN TO-MORROW."

Is there need of a Boys Club in Plainfield? No thoughtful observer will, we believe, doubt this for a moment. Something, surely, is spoiling the youth of America, and the subject demands the careful consideration of all Christians and patriots. As to the number and class of boys reached by a Boys Club, it embraces nearly all the bad boys, or the so-called bad boys.

It will scarcely be believed that anything can be devised, that is, anything good and helpful, that a boy who is somewhat wild and unmanageable, will like better than the cheap theatre, the dime novel and the "fun" on the streets at night. In these days the brilliant lights and the fascinations of the street are almost irresistible to the average boy. The Club, if properly managed, reaches nearly every one of these wild boys, many of whom have, perhaps, been made such by not having some place in which to spend their evenings.

There is another class of boys, and, no doubt, a larger class, in this city, who are the children of parents in moderate, or it may be, in comfortable circumstances. It is almost impossible to keep them indoors, especially in the early evening. Such boys, it is needless to say, are in a good school for training in bad habits. The boys of evil tendencies have unrestricted influence over them, and sooner or later, they will be contaminated. The Club draws in many of these boys, whose evil influence is thus destroyed, or at all events, rendered no worse than it is in a public school. We will not call the Club a reform school, whose members are only bad boys, and yet it should be clearly understood that it does reform and help as perhaps no other agency can. The Boys Club gathers in the same classes of boys that are found in a public school—good, bad and indifferent—but it is an institution that deals in moral instruction, helping the boy to become a good man and a good citizen.

There is something attractive in a bad boy. It is not the badness that we like, but the boy, and he is often bad only, in spots; once eliminate these and he becomes the best of boys. A real bad boy must have life and force or he would not be one. When you tell the bad boy anything, he remembers it, and if it is true, he can understand why it is true. If a boy becomes a bad man, he is dangerous; but if he becomes a good man, and this, in most cases, depends on his knowing a few things, he will make a useful, strong member of society. If boys of this character had friends to help them to be good and to give to them what they never had an opportunity of getting, there would be fewer bad men.

What are some of the special features in the work for boys?

First—It co-operates with the home, by furnishing a bright, cheerful and attractive place for the boys during the evening. The time spent by the boys in the Club room, is by no means wasted. If games are used, they are chosen with a view to combine amusement and instruction. The boys are given tickets of admission, on which are written their names and residences, and these facts are also entered in the Club book. The workers of the Club can thus become better acquainted with the boys, not only in the Club room, but may also visit them in their homes.

They are the boys' friends. They show them how results are produced by causes, and how lying, disobedience to parents, refusal to work, truancy, etc., are causes that produce thieves, drunkards and criminals, generally. Many a father and mother with a house full of boys, even though they are average boys, will have reason to welcome the beneficent influence of this Club.

The Juvenile Penny Savings Bank is an additional feature of the Boys Club. This is a system of giving the boys practical instruction in economy and saving, and teaching them thoughtfulness in money matters. Such an enterprise is already started in this city, and is in good working order. Those who have charge of this work are desirous to co-operate with the Boys Club. Other attractions for the Club are entertainments and lectures—sometimes, refreshments. Some of our citizens have expressed a willingness to give instructive talks to the boys, and all will be given an opportunity to volunteer in this work, the good results of which cannot be overestimated.

Then, too, it is worth considering that it is not the boys alone who would be benefited by the efforts put forth for their improvement. "Give, and it shall be given unto you again, pressed down and running over," is not only a Christian precept, but a law of social life. It is doing good, one gets good. He who blesses another, receives more than he gives. We need the Boys Club as much as the Boys Club needs us. The benefit is reciprocal. Helping to make boys manly, makes men manlier and women more womanly. We rise in helping others to rise. All our efforts to save the young from the evils to which they are exposed, react upon ourselves, helping to save us from selfish devotion to our own interests. It is not, therefore, as a duty alone that we urge the claims of the Boys Club, but as a privilege—a privilege of service. Your Committee, therefore, recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That a Society, to be known as the "Boys Club of Plainfield," be organized, as soon as one hundred members can be secured, who will agree to subscribe five dollars, each annually, to the support thereof; whereupon, a meeting of all interested shall be called to perfect the organization and the plans of action.

Plainfield Lost the Main.

The main made two months ago between New York and New Jersey was fought early Thursday morning in a cockpit near Elizabeth. Long Island birds were pitted against Jersey games which came from this city. The Long Island birds won. The Plainfields for three successive years had beaten Long Island. There was considerable betting on the result by the two hundred or more who were present.

THE McGINTY TEAM LOSES AGAIN.

Captain Davis and His Crescent League Bowlers, Occupy a Proud Position in the Coast.

The final match of the Union County bowling tournament was rolled at Westfield, Tuesday evening, and the Crescent League team finished at the tail end just where it belongs. Until there is more discipline in the team—more practice and earnest endeavor to be winners—the Olympics will continue to be Plainfield's representative team of bowlers, and the Crescents will continue to be fish for even such light weights as the Pastimes of Westfield.

A detailed account of this night's finish is not necessary. The score below shows for itself. Mr. M. E. Alpers was umpire. Mr. Carey of the Crescents was struck in the face with a ball coming back in the runway, and very much bruised. The score:

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER
THE PUREST AND BEST
Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.
It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.
Sold only in cans, full weight.

Rheumatism,
BEING due to the presence of uric acid in the blood, is most effectually cured by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Be sure you get Ayer's and no other, and take it till the poisonous acid is thoroughly expelled from the system. We challenge attention to this testimony:—
"About two years ago, after suffering for nearly two years from rheumatic gout, being able to walk only with great discomfort, and having tried various remedies, including mineral waters, without relief, I saw by an advertisement in a Chicago paper that a man had been relieved of this distressing complaint, after long suffering, by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I then decided to make a trial of this medicine, and took it regularly for eight months, and am pleased to state that it has effected a complete cure. I have since had no return of the disease."—Mrs. R. Irving Dodge, 110 West 125th st., New York.
"One year ago I was taken ill with inflammatory rheumatism, being confined to my house six months. I came out of the sickness very much debilitated, with no appetite, and my system disordered in every way. I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla and began to improve at once, gaining in strength and soon recovering my usual health. I cannot say too much in praise of this well-known medicine."—Mrs. L. A. DAINTY UNDERWEAR.

Silk and Linens Affected By Fashionable Dames.

How the Mania For Matching Affects the Undergarment of Fashionable Women—Whites in [illegible] and Ribbons to Stockings.

[COPYRIGHT 1890.]

The mania for matching sometimes carries the modern woman to extreme lengths. One very charming lady presented a bit of Royal Dresden china to another a few days ago. The china was packed in a box and the box was tied up with a peculiar shade of pale lavender ribbon. "Why lavender?" queried the spirit of idle curiosity. "It isn't a thing to speak about," replied the giver, "but I picked out the ribbon because it's the exact shade of her underwear."

After this, one can be prepared for anything, even for the extreme refinements of the color sense—as obtained in its delivery almost as the sensibilities of the princess who detected a pea under the mountain of mattresses on her bed—which feels ill at ease if the chemise does not correspond to the outer casing of a shade with the hue of the outside gown. We have been told for many seasons in wearisome iteration that such and such a society leader always the latest person whom the society correspondent bowed down before and honored made a hobby of, say, gloves, and thought the most exquisite toilet from Worth a failure if these accessories departed in the smallest particular from her notion of the perfect and becoming. But dress does not begin and end with gloves this winter; we have taken up the French catchword "sincerity" in gowning, and when we assume a pink ball toilet it must be pink forward from the skin. This is a new phase of feminine "culture." We tolerate no color discords covered up under the gown. If the debutante wears, for example, a dancing frock of green gauze she must have begun her dressing by putting on a chemise of green India silk drawn up about the shoulders and with the soft fullness shirred at the top into a frill of real lace which appears above the low cut bodice, and is interpreted as body waist or chemisette by her dancing partner.

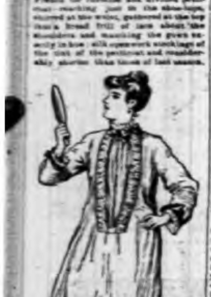
Or if the elegant matron chooses to air her silver and brocade by giving a dinner party it is an indispensable preliminary to the adjustment of her black velvet robe that the garment which comes next her person be dusky-hued as night and trimmed with black lace which serves as the visible corsage garniture.

The inevitable has happened. Certain things which were relegated to the strictest privacy while they were more useful than ornamental have now become so pretty that the propriety of concealment, doubted in some quarters, is in others is utterly denied. Hence it comes that a lady receives her friends in her own room in her night-gown or wears the same garment to breakfast if the cut of it be sufficiently novel and the decoration provocative of applause. Hence also the necessity for an exact match between chemise and evening gown. The former if it be Eiffel [illegible] edged with fine black lace is the best possible bodice finish to black net cut [illegible] and garnished with red ribbons.

A pale blue crepe de Chine [illegible] was received from Paris recently. There were its accessories: A little silk undervest of a paler blue, so pale as to be almost pearl; a corset of a shade two tones deeper, covered with lace and embroidery; combination garment—the French for chemise and divided petticoat—reaching just to the shoe-tops, shirred at the waist, gathered at the top into a broad frill of lace about the shoulders and matching the gown exactly in hue; silk openwork stockings of the tint of the petticoat and considerably shorter than those of last season.



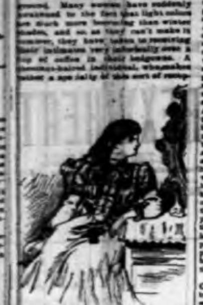
THE ROBE DE NUIT.

to allow for fastening by silk elastic garters instead of side bands, these garters matching in color the pale underwear and clasping by a silver arrow which hooks through a silver bow; slippers of blue silk corresponding with stockings and gown, coming to a long and very saucy [illegible] point at the toes, and having no heels; gloves, lace handkerchief, a [illegible] half wreath of forget-me-nots for the hair and a feather fan. Such is a fashionable evening outfit and the bill is correspondingly interesting.

The chemise, [illegible] of [illegible]—has by no means disappeared. It has, however, bowed to the storm. In one or two important particulars it has reformed. It is cut to fit the figure, with breast pleats and hollowed outside seams. The tuck and clumsiness of the old fashioned article were too uncomely. It comes nowadays with ribbons or buttoned straps on the shoulders, and when worn with a low bodice, to which the frill of lace or embroidery is not wanted as ornament, the ribbons are untied and turned down below the corsage, thus doing away with any need of drawing the straps out of sleeves.

But the chemise is unnecessary, and a set of underclothes for a woman who keeps abreast of the fashions is more likely to begin with a combination suit in some delicate shade of silk, a silk which you would be very likely to designate as tights if placed on exhibition. Blue, pink, green and pale lavender are fashionable tints this winter, though black has always a staunch following and the newest things are in [illegible] red and sulphur or mustard color. After the tights comes the corset, which, if meant for wear with an Empire gown, is very short, a mere [illegible] band for a waist, and which, to keep pace with the season, should be bronze-colored, black, blue, scarlet, pale green or yellow matching the tights or prettily harmonizing or contrasting with them. Above the corset is worn a corset-waist, if the lady is slender, not otherwise. The petticoats [illegible] this winter are of colored silks, with puffed elbow sleeves, which go very easily under the full, picturesque sleeves of the fashionable gown; they have wide bands or bells of embroidery at the waist or else the fullness is disposed of by shirring; they are puffed over the bust and garnished here as embroidered band or a frill of lace above the shoulders.

It is to be hoped that women students are interested in [illegible] [illegible] of [illegible] are [illegible]. I don't feel myself in a gushing mood over their [illegible], [illegible] plain matter of chemises, there is worn over the [illegible], or [illegible] one of those frilled silk or of China silk, which may be of any color, though the majority are white or cream or delicately figured on a white or cream ground. Many women have suddenly awakened to the fact that light colors are much more becoming than winter shades, and so, as they can't make it summer, they have taken to receiving their intimates very informally over a cup of coffee in their bedgowns. A [illegible]-haired individual, who makes rather a specialty of this sort of reception,



ELABORATE ENOUGH FOR A TEA GOWN.

[illegible], wears a rose-colored silk with a broad Byron collar, from the edges of which an airy fall of lace reaches clear to the waist. The sleeves are very [illegible] and are gathered at the waist over wide frills of lace which almost cover the hand. At throat, sleeves and collar are flowing knots of ribbon. Sometimes the night-gown is made like a Judge's flowing robe, sometimes it is girdled with a sash, and sometimes it has a full Josephine waist with baby-like neck and all the fullness shirred to the figure just below the bust with ribbons which tie at the waist in a multitude of butterfly bows.

More and more money is spent on underclothing every year, and while not everybody has yielded to the craze for color, it is seldom that a full or elaborate outfit is supplied which does not contain some colored pieces. There are still women who prefer linen to silk, women rich enough to indulge in every whim, and for them the most exquisite webs are put on the market of fine sheer grass linen which is made up simply and daintily, without the sacrilegious touch of the sewing machine. Such garments are nearly always imported, for few American needlewomen have patience or skill for the invisible stitching. The trimming is always hand-wrought embroidery and real lace, narrow but valuable. So the women who buy such underwear have no liking for the showy, but demand rather fine materials and a garniture which is unobtrusive, delicate and refined. The days of lavish machine-wrought embroidery have gone by.

There is usually a shocking fad of one [illegible] to make [illegible]. Just now cotton stockings are worn with tartan gowns.

When a monogram is used on the underwear the long slender, intertwined letters are embroidered on the left breast of chemise or nightgown.

The number of women who wear the Jenness Miller [illegible] increases every week.

What does a trousseau cost this winter? I heard of one yesterday which will come to $5,000. In [illegible] these do not everything with negligee sacques, gowns and matinees in considerable numbers. I don't expect many women to agree with me, but unless the husband's purse is full to running over, I should call such an outfit a white elephant when one considers the expenditure it involved in the laundrying and [illegible] bills.

THEATRICAL TOPICS.

MRS. LANGTRY has made $900,000 during her short career on the stage.

It was Garrick who first introduced foot-lights on the English stage in 1765. He borrowed the practice from Italy.

At the Paris Exhibition of 1867 the theatres took in $3,150,000, at the exhibition of 1878 $5,000,000, and in 1889 [illegible].

ONE THOUSAND newsboys were invited to see a play at the New Park Theater, New York, October 21, it being the birthday of Manager Donnelly, who was once a newsboy and began selling papers the day after Lincoln's death.

An Englishman has discovered that incandescent light has an injurious effect on paintings. After its use for three years in his house he noticed that some of the most delicate pigments in his collection of water colors began to fade.

There is a good story told of a contemporary novelist who became so ill that his wife was obliged to engage a nurse to attend him. At one a. m. the wife went into the bedroom and found the nurse reading. "Who gave that woman a book?" she asked in a whisper. "I, my dear." "What book is it?" "My last work." "Good gracious!" cried madam, with alarm. "How imprudent! Don't you know it is necessary for her to keep awake?"

DR. TALMAGE'S TRIP.

HE SUMS UP WHAT HE HAS SEEN IN THE HOLY LAND.

The Journey in Palestine and Syria and on Waters Surrounded with Biblical Associations—Discomforts of the Trip—Beauty of the Life of Christ.

CONSTANTINOPLE, January, 1890.—On leaving Jerusalem I addressed some words of farewell to my sermonic readers, and now, on my way home, I write this letter of salutation, which will probably reach you about the time that [illegible] the Atlantic [illegible] from which I [illegible] you with the [illegible] sermon. I have completed the journey of inspection for which I came. Others may write a life of Christ without seeing the Holy Land. I did not feel competent for such a work until I had seen with my own eyes the sacred places, and so I left home and church and native country for a [illegible] undertaking. I have visited all the scenery connected with our Lord's history. The whole journey has been to me a surprise, an amazement, a grand rapture or [illegible] ecstasy. I have already sent to America my Holy Land observations for my Life of Christ, and they were written on horseback, on muleback, on camelback, on ship's deck, by the roadside, in tent, in mud hovel of Arab village, amid the ruins of old cities, on Mount of Beatitudes, on beach of Gennesaret, but it will take twenty years of sermons to tell what I have seen and felt on this journey through Palestine and Syria.

All things have combined to make our tour instructive and advantageous. The Atlantic, and Mediterranean, and Adriatic, and Ægean, and Dardanelles, and Bosporus seas have [illegible] well. Since we left New York we have had but a half day and one night of storm, [illegible]. Mount Hermon, [illegible] only [illegible] to [illegible] health [illegible] to go the length of Palestine and Syria on horseback. I do not think it is [illegible] of the [illegible] of the climate in the Holy Land that so many have sickened and died [illegible] or afterward as a result of visiting [illegible], but because of the fatigues of travel. The number of [illegible] miles of the [illegible] of the way. A hundred and fifty miles in Palestine and Syria [illegible] four hundred miles on horseback [illegible] of any journey.

[illegible] of the [illegible] of bright sunlight by day and bright moonlight or starlight by night, the last day of storm [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] used. My room is covered with a roof of [illegible] hair. A feeble fire mid-floor, but no chimney. It is the best house of the village. Arabs, young and old, stand around in wonderment as to why we came. There is no window in the room, but two little openings, one over the door, the other in the wall, through which latter opening I occasionally find an Arab face thrust in to see how I am progressing. But the door is open, so I have some light. This is an afternoon and night never to be forgotten for its exposures and acquaintance with the hardships of what an Arab considers luxurious apartment. I sat that night by a fire the smoke of which finding no appropriate place of exit took lodgment in my nostrils and eyes. For the first time in my life I realized that chimneys were a luxury, but not a necessity. The only adornments in this room were representations of two tree branches in the mud of the wall, a circle supposed to mean a star, a bottle hung from the ceiling, and about twelve indentations in the wall to be used as closets for anything that may be placed there. This storm was not a surprise. Through pessimistic prophets we had expected that at this season we should have rain and snow and hail throughout our journey. For the most part it has been sunshine and tonic atmosphere, and not a [illegible] has our journey been hindered. Gratitude to God is with us the dominant emotion.

Having visited the scenery connected with Christ's life, I was glad to close my journey by passing through the apostolic lands and seas. You can hardly imagine our feelings as we came in sight of Damascus, and on the very road where Saul was unhorsed at the flash of the supernal light. We did not want, like him, to be flung to the earth, but we did hope for some great spiritual blessing, brighter than any noonday sun, and a new preparation for usefulness. Our long horseback ride was ended, for a carriage met us some miles out and took us to the city. The impressions one receives as he rides along the walled gardens of the place are different from those produced by any other city. But we cannot describe our feelings as we entered the city about which we have heard and read so much, the oldest city under the sun, and founded by the grandson of Noah; nor our emotions as we pass through the street called Straight, along which good Ananias went to meet Saul; and by the site of the palace of Naaman, the leper, and saw the river Abana, as yesterday we saw Pharpar, the rivers of Damascus that Naaman preferred to wash in rather than the Jordan. Strange and unique Damascus! It is worth while to cross the Atlantic and Europe to see it. Though it has been the place of battle and massacre, and of ancient affluence and splendor as well as it is of present prosperity, to me its chief attraction arises from the fact that here the scales fell from Paul's eyes, and that chief of apostles here began that mission which will not end until heaven is peopled with ransomed spirits. So also I saw day before yesterday Patmos, where John heard the trumpets and the waves of the sea dashed to his feet, reminding him of the songs of heaven, "like the voice of many waters."

But this letter can only give a hint of the things we mean to tell you about when we get home, where we expect to be before this reaches [illegible]. I baptized by immersion in the Jordan an American whom we met, and who desired the solemn ordinance administered to him in the sacred waters. I rolled down from Mount Calvary or "place of a skull" a stone for the corner stone of our new Brooklyn Tabernacle. We bathed in the "Dead Sea" and in "Gideon's Fountain," where his three hundred men lapped the water from their hands as they passed through; and we sailed on Lake Galilee and stood on Mount Zion, and Mount Moriah, and Mount Hermon, and I saw the place where the shepherds heard the Christmas anthem the night Christ was born; and have been at Nazareth, and Capernaum, and sat by "Jacob's Well," and saw Tel-el-Kebir of modern battle, and Megiddo of ancient battle, and where the Israelites crossed the desert, and slept at Bethel where one ladder was let down into Jacob's dream, but the night I slept there the heavens were full of ladders, first a ladder of clouds, then a ladder of stars, and all up and down the heavens were the angels of beauty, angels of consolation, angels of God ascending and descending; and I was on nearly all the fields of Herodic, and Solomonic and Davidic, and Mosaic, and Abrahamic history. I took Greece and Naples and Athens, and Alexandria and Cairo on the way out, and take the Greek Archipelago, and Constantinople, and Vienna on the way back. What more can God in his goodness grant me in the way of natural scenery, and classic association, and spiritual opportunity? Ah yes! I can think of something gladder than that he can grant me. Safe return to the people of my beloved flock, the field of my work, and the land where my fathers died, and in the dust of whose valleys I pray God I may be buried.

The Sportsman's Florida.

In Florida the material changes of the past ten or fifteen years have been on a scale possible only in what was practically a frontier state. The past twenty years have virtually witnessed the settlement of Florida anew by a population drawn thither from other states. The growth of new centers, the building of new towns and cities, the multiplying and extension of railroads, the conversion of vast wilderness tracts from pine and hammock lands into orange groves and farms—all this has greatly changed the face of the country; and the state has ceased to be in many respects the great shooting resort it once was. Nowhere is this more readily observed than on some of the lines of river travel. The great abundance and accessibility of feathered game encountered on the waterways once made it possible for the rude and [illegible] in any [illegible] sportsmen—who shot from the moving craft, to slaughter foolishly, wantonly and wastefully thousands of birds of plumes.

As time went by and the fusillade was kept up, the birds were destroyed or scared away until the river banks became practically barren of game. Then as the new railroads fortunately diverted the tide of travel away from the rivers, and the haunts of the birds were left unmolested, they multiplied, and now in many districts became abundant. The time has gone by when a majority of Florida tourists are equipped with firearms; but those who are seeking legitimate sport with game birds are still to be found in hosts; and the tangible rewards of one's outing are generous. Florida is today more than ever the winter home of the sportsman.—Forest and Stream.

Like His Grandfather.

Many persons who never heard the word heredity have a very just and vivid idea of the truth which that word was invented to convey. They know perfectly well that physical and intellectual traits are handed down from father to son, and from son to grandson.

Congressman Allen, of Mississippi, was lately telling stories at a Washington hotel, according to a reporter for The New York Star.

"I had just returned from making a political speech," he said, "when I was met at the door by an old 'Aunty' Allison, an aged negro woman who nursed me in childhood. With her big black, good natured face all wreathed in smiles, she said, 'Bless ma soul, Massa John, but how yo' don' remin' me o' yo' daddy's gran'fa'r! Yo' walk like him, talk like him, an' am jes' like him in politics, too.'

"'Why, aunty, I never knew that my grandfather had been active in politics,' said I.

"'Oh, 'deed an' 'deed he was, Massa John. He wuz jes' like yo'self in dat pa'ticlah.'

"'In what way, aunty?'

"'Oh, he wuh all de time a-holdin' office.'

"'What office did grandfather hold, aunty?'

"'Jes' de same as yo'—candidate.'"

Religious Liberty in Russia.

The arbitrary measures now being adopted by the Russian government for the complete Russianization of the German element in the Baltic provinces are arousing a very strong feeling among the Russo-Germans. The most unsparing of these measures is perhaps the attempt at wholesale proselytism now being made by making the Lutherans by the missionary agents of the holy synod. The Baltic Lutherans resent these proselytizing missions as more [illegible] and coercive than any similar measures ever adopted against the Catholics in Poland.

The government has made the discovery that a very unusual number of meetings of the Roman Catholic clergy have lately taken place in the Polish provinces on the pretext of celebrating parish [illegible] days, which [illegible] a year. A close watch is kept on the Roman Catholic clergy, whose influence beyond the pale of their church it is sought to restrict in every possible way, and, therefore, the ministry of the interior has issued orders that no religious ceremonies in Poland, accompanied by meetings of the Roman Catholic clergy, shall take place without the express authorization of the local authorities, and the presence at such meetings of a Russian official.—Odessa Cor. London Standard.

The Germ of Yellow Fever.

Dr. George M. Sternberg, surgeon in the United States army, recently returned from an [illegible] stay in Cuba, where he has been investigating the bacterial organisms relating to yellow fever. He brought with him specimens of microbes, with which he will continue his investigations during the winter at the Johns Hopkins university. At the end of that time he hopes to present a general report of his investigations to President Harrison. "My researches," says Dr. Sternberg, "have not led to a positive demonstration of the specific germ of the disease, but I have isolated a considerable number of pathogenic bacilli, disease producing germs, from the intestines of yellow fever cases, and have strong hope that one or more of these may prove to be the specific germ. I have confirmed my previous conclusions as to the absence of a [illegible] micro-organism in the blood and tissues of the patients, and have failed to find in any of my cases the germ which Dr. Freire, of Brazil, has claimed to be the cause of the disease. For this reason I have given my attention to the bacilli of the alimentary canal."—Exchange.

Fish Charms.

Fish charms have been met with among many nations. The fish called the bullhead is used by some of the Russian peasants as a charm against fever. Many kinds of fish have two hard bones just within the sides of the head, and one species, the maigre, has these bones larger in proportion than most others. These two bones, called colic stones, are regarded to possess [illegible] virtues. They were mounted in gold and hung round the neck.—Troy Times.

A family in Henry county, Ga., consists of three mothers, three sons, two grandmothers, three grandsons, one great-grandmother, one daughter-in-law, one husband, one granddaughter-in-law, two brothers, one daughter, two great-grandsons, one wife, two widows, one grandmother-in-law and there are only six in the family.

Awestruck Travelers.

A curious phenomenon of nature was witnessed near here last night by the passengers on the north bound passenger train on the Houston and Texas Central, which passes this point at 2:20 a. m. It was in the form of a luminous arch of a phosphoric or electrical character. Such phenomena are of frequent occurrence at sea, but are almost unheard of on land. The luminous mist was first observed by the engineer, when it was still several hundred yards ahead of the train, and thinking it a prairie fire he slowed up, thus arousing the passengers, who, with the crew, crowded to the windows and on to the platform to look at the vast, luminous rainbow spanning the heavens. As the arch was more closely approached its disc, white radiance was seen to be clearly defined against the sky as though painted there by the sweep of a brush dipped in white fire. The stars could be seen shining close against the rim of it, and all around and under the arch. The shape, as near as could be guessed at, was half a mile in diameter, though it seemed gradually widening and was in form the half of a perfect circle, one leg resting on the earth, while the other appeared to have been broken off near the base.

The arch rose directly over the track, and as the train approached it seemed to gather a quicker tincture of luster, as of the diamond or some clear, glittering star, though it threw no gleam upon the air beyond its own irradiation, as could be seen by the stars shining in close proximity to it. When the train passed directly under the bridge of light, the surrounding country spanned by it became plainly visible, appearing to be bathed in pale moonlight.

A curious feature of the luminosity was that while it gave all objects a weird, unreal aspect, the shadows which it caused them to throw were black and as clearly defined as silhouettes. In a few minutes after the train passed under the arch it seemed to fade away, melting gradually into the starlit sky. The night, as will be remembered, was fair and fogless. There was no moon, so the arch must have been self luminous.—Spearer (Tex.) Dispatch in Atlanta Constitution.

Three Parallel Stories.

Julius Cæsar, when landing on the coast of Africa, stumbled as he leaped from his boat and fell. To disabuse the minds of his soldiers of the superstitious impression the accident might otherwise have produced, he immediately exclaimed: "Thus, land of Africa, I take possession of thee!" Words almost exactly similar have been put by the chroniclers into the mouths of two of our mediæval heroes.

When William the Conqueror, disembarking in the Bay of Pevensey, descended from his great galley, the Mora, he missed his footing, and fell forward with both hands on the ground. Immediately his soldiers set up a despairing cry of "God help us! God preserve us! This is a fatal sign." But William, with his usual presence of mind, exclaimed as he sprang to his feet: "Par la resplendor Dé! By the splendor of God, what ails you? I have taken seisin of this land with my two hands, and as much as there is of it shall be yours." The ready reply greatly cheered his soldiers, one of whom, rushing forward, plucked some thatch from a cottage roof and placed it in the duke's hands as seisin of England and all within its borders. "I accept it," said William, "and may God be with us!"

In 1346 Edward III landed at Saint Vaast, on the coast of Normandy, to undertake the campaign which culminated in the great victory of Crecy, and drew from a similar accident an equally prosperous augury. "When the fleet of the king of England," said Froissart, "took ground in the Bay of La Hogue, and was all anchored on the sands, the king sprang from his ship, and as he put his foot to earth fell so rudely that the blood flowed from his nose. Then his knights, who were close at hand, surrounded him and said: 'Dear sir, return to your ship and do not land yet a while, for this is a bad sign for you.' Whereupon the king replied: 'Nay, but it is a very good sign, for the earth desires me.' At this answer all were rejoiced."—Montreal Star.

He Hit Too Hard.

I was taking my usual afternoon plunge in the salt water baths at the Produce Exchange the other day, said a broker friend yesterday, and was amusing myself watching the antics of a couple of small boys who were indulging in a sparring exhibition, of which their father was the instigator and referee. They were sturdy little fellows, aged about 8 and 10 respectively, and were typical representatives of the New York boy of today. Among the other onlookers was a magnificent specimen of physical development, who, after applauding a particularly clever "counter" on the part of one of the lads, asked if he could not come into the game. His challenge being promptly accepted by the smaller of the laughing pugilists, he plumped down on his knees and the combat began.

The giant seemed to enjoy the fun, as he entered into the sport with the enthusiasm of a schoolboy. "Oh!" he cried, "you hit too hard," as the little fellow landed on his jaw. Encouraged by the plaudits of the few onlookers, and gaining additional confidence from the evidently craven character of his antagonist, the young athlete went in for a knockout. A moment later, and all was over. The big fellow lay on his back crying for mercy, and the victor was rewarded with cheers.

After a final plunge everybody dressed, and as the rivals again met at the cashier's desk one of the attaches came over to the father of the boys and said, in an awed whisper, "Do you know who that big man is, sir?" "No," answered the gentleman, with a broad smile. "Who is he?"

"Why, that's John L. Sullivan."—New York Star.

Buying Women's Shoes.

The most tedious customer for a salesman to come in contact with is a husband buying shoes for his wife. He comes into the store boldly and makes known his wants, but when it comes to picking out a pair of shoes that would suit he is unable to make a decision. He asks numerous foolish questions about the style, fit, price, etc., and in many ways shows his ignorance of what his wife wears and his incapacity for the task of buying women's shoes. In nearly every instance after the stock is pulled down and thoroughly examined, and a tired, sorry tale about sizes, the husband-buying-his-wife's-shoes will draw back with a sigh, saying: "Oh! well, you know better than I, and suppose you pick me out a nice pair." This is easily done, and the shoes are sent out, but the salesman is certain to see them again. Women are often hard to please, and one of many days will elapse before the wife is back to exchange the shoes, and the first trouble is almost gone over again.—Shoe Dealer in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Catholic population in this country is estimated at 8,301,367, and the number of priests is placed at 8,482—2,125 regulars and 6,357 seculars. They attend 7,468 churches, 3,718 stations and 1,589 chapels. There are 238 orphan asylums, caring for, it is estimated, 22,702 orphans. There are 30 theological seminaries, with 1,681 students, 139 colleges and 652 academies, and 3,209 parochial schools, with 634,089 pupils.

THE next Legislature of Wyoming, it is said, will pass a law making the killing of a buffalo a misdemeanor. An act to this effect is not required to protect the buffaloes as game, for the hunter would hunt the mountains and plains for wild buffaloes in vain. It is intended to apply to the men who lie in wait and shoot down the buffaloes that happen to stray off the reservation in the Yellowstone Park, where a few relics of the bygone race are preserved. A dead buffalo brings its slayer $200, and the temptation to kill them is a strong one for the hunter.

EXPLORER STANLEY, it is said, was paid at the rate of $50,000 a year while he was hunting for Emin Pasha. He was not docked for sickness or for time lost in shooting elephants, and he was allowed to kill as many "niggers" as he pleased without even being reprimanded.

THE Czar of Russia receives from his gold mines in Eastern Siberia about 3,600 pounds of pure gold every year. As he has recently developed a great fondness for the American game of draw-poker, it is about time for him to "grub-stake" some prospectors for new placers.

A EUROPEAN savant says that life may be indefinitely prolonged by regularly drinking the juice of the lemon. And another European savant, who knows just as much—or as little—says that the surest way to shorten life is to drink lemon juice. "Do you ever receive contributions written on both sides of the paper?" asked a gentleman, entering a newspaper office. "No, sir; never," emphatically replied the editor. "All right, I was going to indorse this check to your order, but I don't want to break your rules." Then he went out, leaving the editor in a deep-green study.

THE Hangtown (Cal.) Observer gushes as follows: "El Dorado County is the wonder and the worship of earth and sky. The sun loves to gaze upon her cultivated landscapes, to flutter on her mountain tops, to mirror himself in her lakes and rivers, to linger over fields and forests and to light them up with supernal splendor. The old night watchman in the moon, with his dark-lantern focused upon the sleeping beauty of the foothills, sits up at night to look at her."

FRESH FROM FOREIGN LANDS.

RECENT excavations in Rome show that the ancient plumbers of the Eternal City were obliged to be very particular with their work. There have been unearthed great quantities of lead water-pipe, each plainly stamped with the name of the owner of the house, the year of the plumbing, the name of the Consuls for that year, and that of the reigning Emperor.

A BUTCHER-SHOP question has arisen between France and Germany. The butchers employed in slaughtering sheep at the great shambles of La Villette have held an indignation meeting to protest against the importation of slaughtered sheep from Germany, to their detriment. They favor the importation of live animals, but are against imported dressed beef.

ABOUT 150,000 trees have been systematically planted in Victoria during the last season, including pines, poplars, larches, oaks, birch, planes, elms, ash and eucalyptus of various kinds. Nurseries, under both private and colonial auspices, have been started all over the colony to provide trees for planting, and the work will be continued next year on a much larger scale.

THE electric light has found a curious use in Russia, viz., for illuminating saintly images in cathedrals. Thus a magnificent figure of the Madonna, just placed in the Alexander Nevsky Monastery, loaded with precious metals and gems of immense value, stands glittering in the focus of an electric beam, which is also the case with the "Kasan" Madonna in St. Petersburg. From near and after thousands make pilgrimages to these shrines. It has been decided to so illuminate the ancient monastery of St. Ursula at Olmutz, the first instance on record of its use exclusively in a monastery.

THERE are in France 877 associations of employers, 891 of working-men and 337 of farmers. The working-men's associations, which were formerly political organizations, have become for the most part purely mutual benefit societies of late years. The agricultural associations do not agitate politically like our grangers. They are to a large extent co-operative and technical. The Farmers' Association near Fontainebleau, for instance, owns a slaughter house at which every member has his cattle killed at very low prices. This and other similar co-operative devices of the French farmers' associations show that the French peasant is not so stupid and helpless as he is generally supposed to be.

THE women of the Russian telegraph service are raising a great outcry in the press against the hardship of the law in force in Russia that they may only marry telegraphists, and that, too, only those who are engaged at the same station, the official idea being that they thereby, in cases of need, would be able to take the place of their husbands. A young Russian woman writes to a Novgorod paper: "I have, therefore, if I do not choose to forfeit my situation, first to fall in love with an electrical swain, then to manage that he falls in love with me; next to arrange that he is transferred to my station. This is a hard task for a girl who is riveted fourteen hours every day to her apparatus and does not wish to lose her pittance of seven hundred and twenty rubles a year."

FREEHOLDERS' PROCEEDINGS.

[OFFICIAL.]

ELIZABETH, N. J., Jan. 2, 1890.

Regular meeting of the board of chosen freeholders of Union county held on Thursday, Jan. 2, 1890, at 2:30 o'clock p. m.

Present—Director Hubbard, and Freeholders Briant, Doty, Donahue, Howard, Houston, Jones, Kyte, Kleinhans, Pierson, Roll, Thompson, Vanderbeek, Van Saun, Wright, West, Whaley—17.

Absent—None.

The minutes of last meeting (omitting list of bills ordered paid) were read and on motion approved.

COMMITTEE REPORTS

To the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union:

GENTLEMEN:—The law committee, to whom was referred the notice served on the county collector by the state military board, relative to the building of an armory in the city of Elizabeth, would respectfully report that they went to Trenton before said military board and had an interview with the members concerning the same. After discussing the matter for awhile, no definite action was arrived at, and this committee left with the understanding that the military board were to consult with the attorney general in regard to the law, and notify this board of what action was intended to be taken and whether they would expect us to proceed under the notice served.

We would therefore recommend that no further action be taken, until further notice is received.

Dated January 2, 1890.

A. VANDERBEEK,
J. MARTIN ROLL,
JOHN J. DONAHUE,
Committee.

On motion of Freeholder Howard, received and recommendation adopted unanimously.

To the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union:

GENTLEMEN:—The law committee to whom was referred the bill of D. M. Smythe for publication of minutes of board in Summit Record, from August 1 to November 1, 1889, would respectfully report in favor of the payment of the same in full. Both Mr. Smythe, the late publisher, and Mr. Lane, the present publisher of the Record, appeared before the committee and after hearing what each had to say and after a examination of the facts and decision of the court in the case, concluded that so far as this bill is concerned Mr. Smythe is entitled to have it paid.

Dated January 2, 1890.

HOW CAN THE LONG
BE THE SHORT

A line may be very long line and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home seeker, the gold-seeker, the settler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. Write to F. I. Whitney, G. P. & T. A., St. Paul, Minn., for maps, books and guides. If you want a free farm in a lovely land, write for the "Great Reservation" read it and [illegible]

Association.

A waft of perfume—a refrain of song—
A glance—a color—yes! some lovely flower—
Oft brings to mind a half-forgotten hour
And calls up thoughts that have been buried long;
And memory wakens, and about us drift
Fair faces that perchance have long been dust,
Eyes smile again in eyes—we must—we must
Live o'er those scenes so madly sweet, so swift.
And so, whene'er I hear a certain strain,
My heart is stirred where its old sorrow lies;
And calling back a joy mingled with pain,
The scent of violets brings tears into my eyes.
—Edith Sessions Tupper, in Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

The Incidence of Greatness.

It was a jovial banquet board,
Great men were [illegible],
Great Generals, great Senators,
Great counsellors-at-law;
And in the special honor seat,
To see the great well fed,
There sat a great—what shall I say?—
That's it! Great head—great head.

Great toasts were drunk, great mots were turned,
And so were viands rare,
Great tanks of Cham—but let that pass;
That's neither here nor there.

And when a great one spouted some,
And sat him down flushed red,
The servants slapped him great applause,
And cried: "Great head! Great head!"

They tell us beauty's but skin deep;
Well, so is greatness, too,
The cuticle of greatness holds
No more than I or you.
And so next day each great one lay
Within his own great bed,
And ran his fingers through his locks,
And groaned: "Great head! Great head!"
—Lippincott's Magazine.

God's Way Is Best.

Past the portals of to-day;
Something waits us down the way,
Joys, perhaps, for you and me,
Some fond dreams to realize,
Waits for us, a glad surprise;
We may guess but can not see.

Just beyond the misty screen
Of the veil Time drops between,
Something waits us, joy or woe,
Throbs of heartache, thrills of bliss,
Echoes of a parting kiss,
Life or death. We do not know.

Wait, thou shrouded mystery!
It is well we can not see.
It is well we do not know,
Life and love are ours to-day,
God, in mercy, hides to-day,
We must tread in joy or woe.
—Rose Hartwick Thorpe.

"What Fools These Mortals Be."

The poet racks his weary brain
And burns the midnight oil,
That he may worldly notice gain
For all his grinding toil,
Quite satisfied if he his name
In public print may see,
He clutches at the bubble fame—
"What fools these mortals be."

The miser adds to the amount
He'll lose when death shall call.
The heiress weds a foreign count
Who's no account at all,
And all the world is crazy quite—
At least to some degree,
We're chasing phantoms day and night—
"What fools these mortals be."

The soldier in the raining lead
His bravery employs
To die for that which when he's dead
He nevermore enjoys.
Men would be kings, kings would be gods,
None are from folly free;
Fuss discontented with their pods—
"What fools these mortals be."

We fancy all the world looks on
And marvels at our deeds;
Yet it, when we from [illegible] are gone,
Our going seldom heeds,
And he must be a [illegible]
Who does not smile to see
How cross-eyed is all human sight—
"What fools these mortals be."
—Chicago Herald.

Like a Rose.

I can see her standing yet,
Dewy-eyed,
As she stood that summer morn
At my side;
It is not so long ago
That I parted from her so;
Yet the gulf is fixed, I know,
Deep and wide.

Down the garden path we walked
To the gate,
And I begged her: "Ah, my own,
Name the date."
But she answered: "No, my dear,
'Tis your fickleness I fear—
I will try you for a year—
You must wait."

Grief was on my features then
Written plain,
For she said: "I'm sorry, dear,
For your pain.
Take this little rose, I pray;
It shall wither in a day,
But my love for you for aye
Shall remain."

Love is sometimes sweet and sure,
I suppose;
Who would not have faith in such
Vows as those?
But, alas! I'm forced to rue
That they were not semi-true,
For her love was withered, too,
Like the rose.

See, I let it flutter thus
To my feet.
Ah! 'twas summer when its charms
Were complete;
Save it not, my heart is set,
For 'tis wise I should forget,
And its perfume lingers yet,
Faint and sweet.
—George Horton, in Texas Siftings.

Her Charms.

Oh! the light that lies in a maiden's eyes
As she meets the fond glance of her lover
Is brighter by far than the gleam of the star
That shines in the darkness above her.

And the fleeting flush of a maiden's blush,
The bloom of the rose defying,
O'er her countenance flies as the maiden sighs,
Like the dream of a zephyr dying.

And the power to beguile in a maiden's smile,
And the sound of her voice so thrilling,
Make a lover crave to become her slave,
Her slightest behest fulfilling.

But the tuneful clink of a maiden's chink,
And the gleam of her gold so yellow,
Sooner than Cupid's dart will touch the heart
Of the most unsusceptible fellow.
—Yale Record.

The Anglers.

We went a-fishing—she and I—
The fish were wary.
They circled round the tempting fly
In mood contrary.

We changed the bait. I cast sheep's eyes—
She played a simple,
(Ah me! tho' some are over wise, Pronounce the simple.)

She bit—alas the misery,
'Twas even barter,
She caught a ninny—woe is me,
I caught a Tartar.
—R. T. Holland, in Time.

TERMS AND TITLES.

"VARLET" is the same word as "valet," and each is an offshoot of the feudal "vassal."

MADAME is "my lady," and sir has been extracted from the Latin "senior," through the French.

"DANDELION" is dent de leon (the lion's tooth), and "vinegar" was once vin aigre (sour wine).

"BISCUIT" keeps alive the Latin bis coctus (twice cooked), and a verdict is simply a vere dictum (true saying).

A "VILLAIN," before the stigma of disgrace was attached to him, was a laborer on the villa of a Roman country gentleman.

AN Earl was an "elder" in the primitive society, while Pope is the same as "papa," and Czar and Kaiser are both "Cæsars."

QUEEN at first meant "wife" or "mother," and a survival of its early signification exists in "quean," used now only in a bad sense.

"JIMINY" is a reminiscence of the classical adjuration, O gemini, used by the Romans when they called upon the twins Castor and Pollux to help them.

REDINGOTE is "riding coat," borrowed by the French from our own language, and returned to us in a new guise with the dressmaker's stamp of approval.

"SLOP" shop has nothing to do with slops, as some amateur etymologists have asserted, but means clothing shops, the word coming from the Icelandic slopr, a gown.

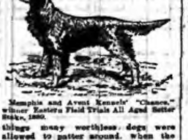
REVIEW OF FIELD TRIALS.

Some Setters and Pointers that Have Come Into Prominence.

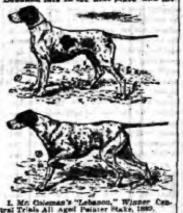
Mr. Lacy Explains the Different Methods of Judging Dogs—Pictures of the Most Conspicuous Prize Winning Dogs of 1889.

COPYRIGHT 1890

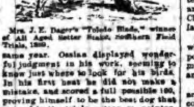
For the past few weeks those of us who love the sport to be had with dog and gun, have been more or less deeply interested in the performances of our blue-blooded field dogs at the Indiana, Eastern, Central and Southern trials. The meetings this year have been looked forward to with more than usual interest. In the first place the trial of the Indiana and Central clubs mark a new era in the system of judging. Heretofore the heats have been decided by the work done in forty-five minutes, and then if the judges were still undecided the heat could be continued one half hour longer. Under this order of things many worthless dogs were allowed to patter around, when the judges knew that they had no earthly chance to win their heat, only serving to exhaust the patience and wasting the time of every one concerned. This was the order of things at the Eastern Field Trial Club, and the Central, a new organization, sought to do away with all this by what is termed the spotting system. That this, given competent judges who would free themselves from the traditions of the past and show a progressive spirit, would serve to bring out the best dogs, is patent to all, but I cannot say, as the Central trials have been managed this year, that they have made any progress or shown a proper conception of the rules. Under the spotting system the dogs in the stake are drawn against each other as before, and each race put down in the field for a certain time. When the judges have come to the conclusion that sufficient work has been done, the dogs are called up and the next brace put down, no decision being rendered as in the case of other trials. When the preliminary series are run through, the judges consult and pick out those dogs which have shown sufficient merit to run for the prizes. This system on paper seems simplicity itself, but through the leinency or incompetency of judges, many dogs were left in which showed slight merit in comparison to others, and in the second series when the heats would decide which should be entitled to the money, those very dogs, being favored by circumstances in finding birds, scored points which placed them finally ahead of their more skillful adversaries, and it has been conclusively proved that the best dogs did not win. I do not think the rules as now applied will be generally adopted, although the object sought is all right, it gives the judges too much personal power, and unless owners of dogs have implicit reliance on the ability of the judge or judges, a falling off of entries in the future will be the result. The trials also gained much interest from the fact that Mr. F. R. Hitchcock, of New York, visited England for the special purpose of procuring the best field dogs in the land, and imported several of the winners in the National Field trials in England, one of them, Trip of Kippen, being also a winner in the Belgian trials. These were so well spoken of that it was thought that this year, if at all, the English dogs would be able to hold their own with our natives. Though they have done better than in any previous year, still the American-bred ones have kept to the front and captured the principal prizes. In the Indiana trials the All Aged Setter Stake brought out several good ones, the winner, Dashing Dixie, is a beautiful blue belton, weighing about forty pounds, is a wide and fast ranger, works her ground systematically, is under perfect control and in her walk shows herself to be fully equal to last year's sensational winner, Bohemian Girl. She is owned by Mr. W. G. Peter, and is by Dashing Dale out of Dashing Dale, showing blood of the bluest of the blue. The next important stake was the All Aged Pointer Stake. Ossian, the winner, is a handsome liver and white, by Croxteth out of Annie, and the fortunate owner is Mr. P. T. Madison, of Indianapolis. This is a well known pointer, having been placed third in the Easter Derby in 1887, third in the same club's All Aged Stake in 1888, and second in the Southern Trials in the same year. Ossian displayed wonderful judgment in his work, seeming to know just where to look for his birds. In his first heat he did not make a mistake, and scored a full possible 100, proving himself to be the best dog that started in the trials, setter or pointer. I have not space to describe other winners; suffice to say that Lord Graphic, winner of second, is a worthy son of old Champion Graphic, owned by the Graphic Kennels, New York. When it is remembered that these dogs have beaten such noted animals as Maud, King Mark, Blue Mark and Dan Gladstone in setters, and Bannerman, Tamarack and Rod's Gal in pointers, their merit is apparent to those familiar with field trials. The Eastern Field trials were the next to command attention, and these are always looked forward to as the most interesting, being the oldest, to sportsmen in the Eastern cities. Many business men in New York and neighboring cities take their only vacation to attend them. These trials opened on Nov. 10th, with the Derby stakes for setters and pointers together. The winner turned out to be the young setter, Rowdy Rod, a worthy son of the champion field trial winner, Roderigo, out of Juno A, owned by the Memphis and Avent Kennels, Tennessee. In this stake he conquered the pointer, Rip Rap, which subsequently at their trials and those of the Central Club proved himself a phenomenon and the best seen for many a year, though Rowdy Rod here showed a superiority in bird sense, beating out the likely places like an old dog, though he has not the style and speed of Rip Rap. The All Aged Setter Stake brought out the best setters in the country, as usual the English setter predominating, only one Irish setter, Desmond II., putting in an appearance, and he was beaten in his first heat, though he is a noted winner on the show bench. After much meritorious work, the winners proved to be Chance, Toledo Blade, Cassio, Cincinnatus and Nora. Chance is a black, white and tan dog by Roderigo out of Bo Peep, owned by Memphis and Avent Kennels. He is a well known field dog and his ranging, speed and style, combined with good bird sense, landed him a winner, though closely pressed by Toledo Blade also a son of the noted Roderigo out of Lillian. He is owned by Mr. J. E. Dager, of Toledo, O., and is the subject of one of our illustrations. His great points are speed, fine ranging and sensitive nose. He occupied second place in the same stake last year. Cassio, Nora and Cincinatus showed almost equal good work, doing great credit to their common sire—the noted Count Noble. In this series of heats the inadaptability of the present rules of this club was fully proved, as, under the system of points, two of the best dogs, Rowdy Rod and Bettye S., were, perforce, left out in the earlier series. This was so palpable that at the annual meeting of the club it was decided to change the rules and adopt the spotting system in the future.



Memphis and Avent Kennels' "Chance," winner Eastern Field Trials All Aged Setter Stake, 1889.



1. Mr. Coleman's "Lebanon," Winner Central Trials All Aged Pointer Stake, 1889.
2. Mr. E. Dexter's "Rip Rap," winner Eastern Field Trials All Aged Pointer Stake, 1889.



Mrs. J. E. Dager's "Toledo Blade," winner of All Aged Setter Stake, Southern Field Trials, 1889.

The All-Aged Pointer Stake which now followed was looked forward to with great interest, as many noted dogs, both on the bench and in the field, were included in the entry. Mr. Hitchcock's Woolton Game, one of his English purchases, took part in the stake and won golden opinions from those present by her performance. The result of the different series saw Rip Rap and Lebanon left in for first place and the result was never in doubt, as the high character of the work done by Rip Rap, together with his better pace, style and ranging abilities placed him far ahead his of rival., proving himself, though only eighteen months old, to be the best pointer that has ever run at American trials, and with age there is every prospect of his holding his own with his cousins, the setters. Lebanon ran another heat with Count Faustor to decide the second prize, and fairly outclassed his opponent in style and the amount of work he did. The judges selected Count Faustor for third place without further running—this they are entitled to do under the rules—and Woolton James for fourth. Rip Rap, the winner, is a black and white dog by King of Kent out of Hops, and owned by Mr. E. Dexter, Boston, Mass. Lebanon is a lemon and white dog by Grim out of Peg, his fortunate owner being young Mr. Coleman, of Lebanon, Pa. Count Faustor, winner of third, is a liver and white dog by Mainspring (a noted field dog) out of Dolly Faustor, Dr. J. G. J. Holston, Zanesville, O., being his owner. Count is a conscientious worker, but when compared to such a dashing and brilliant performer as Rip Rap, for instance, his want of confidence is apparent. Woolton Game ought really to have had third place, her work showing at times great merit, especially when one considers that she was in a strange country and on strange game. This is a heavy handicap for any dog and doubtless when she has become better acclimatized, as it were, she will be seen at the front.

To arrive at proper estimates of a dog's abilities the judges would not allow too much handling. The dog ought to be made to show his natural hunting instincts alone, as often the handlers continual interference renders the dog a mere automaton, afraid to do anything of his own free will.

In speaking of the methods of conducting field trials in Europe and at home, the differences in the farming and other interests must be taken into consideration. In England, for instance, the trials are held in the spring, though they are fast awakening to the fact that this does not allow of the bringing out of the dogs' best qualities, and a move was made this year by having the trials of the Irish setters in the fall. Spring being the close season it is not therefore allowable to shoot the birds as they rise, and consequently there is no test in dropping to shot or retrieving.

ODD AND INTERESTING.

THE "West End Big Bugs" is the title of a ladies' social club in Allentown, Pa.

A YOUNG woman in Atlanta, Ga., recently disguised herself as a man and became engaged to six girls in less than four weeks.

A MICHIGAN man has distributed one hundred tickets to as many women and now will draw a number and will marry the woman holding it.

A WEST VIRGINIA girl has saved money enough to buy herself a gold watch by trapping muskrats, skunks and other animals and selling their hides.

WITH a record of having buried thirteen hundred persons, George L. Moore, an aged undertaker of Guthrieville, Chester County, Pa., has at last been laid under the sod himself.

THE description of a missing man which was sent to the Columbus (O.) police headquarters contained the statement that he was sixty-five years old and small for his age.

THE trial of a colored deacon who was arrested at Wichita, Kan., for stealing coal was advanced on the justice's docket at his request in order that he might fill an engagement to preach on the day originally set for hearing.

ONE of the good customs established in the little hamlet of Georgetown, Me., is an annual reunion of all the aged people in town. Those of sixty years or more go to the parsonage and spend the day talking over old times, singing old hymns and eating an old-fashioned dinner. The house is always filled with veterans who enjoy their celebration exceedingly.

DR. LEWIS MEYERHOFF, of Buffalo, a successful physician, died in that city recently, and in his will left $500 for a funeral feast for his friends, which took place two days after his death. Champagne and oysters were the leading features of the entertainment, and over 200 people took part in the banquet. A free concert was also provided in the programme.

ONE of the principal merchants of Juneau, Alaska, was in Portland, Ore., the other day. Among other goods he ordered a score or so of coffins, assorted sizes and of the most expensive description. He says the Indians in that section can have nothing too rich and elegant in the coffin line. The finest plush for covering and silver handles and studs thickly bespangled over the coffin are what they want and will have if they put up their last dollar.

A MAN with a new scheme was encountered at a Buffalo church. "The man who invented the drop-a-nickle-in-the-slot machine was a dandy," he said, "and I think it could be utilized in our churches. Such a machine in each aisle would do away with the tedious task of passing the hat—the contribution box, I mean—and by dropping a dime in the slot the church-goer might be given a ticket entitling the giver to a seat and the loan of a prayer-book."

FOR a long time "No Man's Land" has been a refuge for ruffians who were afforded security there from the popular idea that it was outside the jurisdiction of any of the adjoining States. The fallacy of this opinion was recently exposed by a Texan judge, who pointed out that "No Man's Land" was clearly within the jurisdiction of the Paris, Texas, court. Since then there has been an exodus of disgusted desperadoes into Oklahoma, and their track to the latter place is marked by crime of every description.

PERSONAL PARTICULARS.

CARL SCHURZ is said to live in daily terror of being some day knocked out by a robber with a sandbag.

THE Prince of Wales, though many times a Colonel, is obliged to pay more attention to his regimen than his regiments.

BISMARCK'S secretary prepares an epitome of the day's news on pads, which he reads to his autocratic employer at night.

REPRESENTATIVE CANNON said recently that in his fourteen years of service in Congress he had seen more than a thousand men come and go.

MRS. MARY A. LIVERMORE, the woman suffragist, claims Boston as her home, but spends nine months in the year lecturing in various parts of the country.

THE Marquise de Galliffet, one of the most beautiful women in Paris, is suffering from a strange form of insanity. She goes into convulsions whenever she sees her face in a mirror.

EVERY Christmas Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt sends one hundred dolls to the mission schools patronized by the church of St. Bartholomew. She has them dressed at her own home by a number of poor needlewomen hired by the day.

QUEEN VICTORIA is breaking down rapidly. She is lame from rheumatism, and her mind is not as bright as it was. Since she learned that the Prince of Wales has an incurable disease she has failed rapidly.

THE ex-Emperor of Brazil has always been noted as a keen sportsman. He was an ardent fox hunter in his younger days, and is devoted to racing. He introduced and fostered in Brazil the extraordinary mania for the turf which the population has lately developed. He is a dead shot.

WHEN Mr. Andrew Clark entered London Hospital as an assistant he was in poor health. "Poor Scotch beggar," said one of the faculty, "let him have a place; he can not possibly live more than six months." He is now, after these many years of eminent service, Sir Andrew Clark, perhaps the most famous physician in England.

THE Duke of Westminster, who is one of the veterans of the English turf, is with one exception the oldest English turfman still actively in the lists, being now in his sixty-fourth year. He has owned some of the most famous English horses of this century, and for three successive years, 1884, 1885 and 1886, held the first place in the list of English winners. Perhaps no other man has won so much money in stakes, his aggregate winnings for the last five years having reached to within a fraction of $400,000.

CHRONICLE OF EVENTS.

WITHIN the last twenty years the courts in Kansas have granted 7,191 divorces.

OVER five thousand Russians have settled in and around Eureka, Cal., within a year.

A PITTSFORD (Mich.) man has just abstained from swallowing food for fifty-three consecutive days and still lives.

THE gain in population at the South in the last ten years is estimated at about 3,300,000 whites and 1,600,000 blacks.

TWENTY-ONE deceased persons have been cremated at Rosedale, near Los Angeles, Cal., the last one only a few days ago.

THE tax collector at Fort Arthur, Ont., seized a locomotive and seventeen cars on the Canadian Pacific road for non-payment of taxes.

A SOCIETY has just been incorporated in New York for "furthering the preservation and elevation of German literature and art in America."

A WEALTHY merchant of Erie County, O., was married the other day to his sister's granddaughter. The groom is sixty-five and the bride twenty-four.

THE letter-carriers have raised twenty thousand dollars for a monument to the late Congressman S. S. Cox, but the site for it has not been selected.

A PARTY is to start from San Francisco for an island in the Pacific Ocean, below the equator, to search for treasure, which, according to tradition, is buried there.

A MAN came into Bradford, Pa., the other day and paid a bill of $18 in old-fashioned paper currency—5, 10, 25 and 50-cent shinplasters, which he had kept since 1864.

A LARGE number of valuable Oriental manuscripts have been discovered in Philadelphia. They were brought there by returned American missionaries and consist of rare Arabic, Persian and Indian documents.

IT is stated that a gentleman of Boston, who suffered injuries of a grave character recently in a railroad accident, was waited upon by twenty-seven lawyers immediately, who offered to bring a suit against the railroad company for damages—their fees to be contingent.

THE first statue erected in this country to a working-man will soon be unveiled in Sacramento. It is in honor of E. J. Stevens, late master mechanic of the Southern Pacific, who had for years been in charge of immense railroad shops in Sacramento. The funds for the monument were contributed entirely by working-men.

A POLAR bear in the Cincinnati Zoo gave birth to two cubs the other night. The cubs are believed to be the first of their species ever born in captivity in this country. It will require great patience and care to raise them, as their diet, after the weaning process is over, must be mainly fish, in pursuit of which they usually show great power of swimming and diving. They also feed on birds and their eggs.

THE theater hat has subsided, but there is a theater fan of gauze, spangled with inch fringe of beads, jet and shell, that will tax the amiability of first-nighters and worry the critics and habitues to the verge of madness. At the slightest wave of the fan these tendrils of metal and shell go tink-a-link-a-link, and while the music is low and merry it is mischievous and quite sufficient to pervert every other intonation.

NATURE'S WONDERS.

A BLACK loon was shot in Washoe lake, California, recently. Such a bird had never been seen there before, and it is supposed to have been driven out of its course by a storm while migrating South from the Arctic regions. The bird measured eight feet six inches from tip to tip of its expanded wings and six feet and three inches from the point of its bill to the end of its tail. The bill was nearly a foot in length.

A REMARKABLE poised rock, famous throughout South America as "the moving stone," may be seen on Tandil mountain, in Buenos Ayres. It is 24 feet high, 80 feet long and 18 feet wide, containing over 5,000 cubic feet and weighing twenty-five tons. It is irregularly conical in shape, and rests upon a conical support with a bearing surface some ten inches in diameter. The power of a single man is sufficient to oscillate the enormous mass, which, indeed, is often swayed by the wind.

IT is sometimes said that the branches of very old trees are, properly speaking, roots, and that if planted upside down the trees would flourish. Herr Kny, a German botanist, has recently investigated the matter by planting vines and ivy with both ends in the ground, and consequently cutting them at the arch. The experiments were fairly successful, though not in every instance, and Herr Kny intends to continue them with other plants and trees, such as willows, poplars and roses.

ACCORDING to Nature a plant has lately been discovered in India which is possessed of a high degree of electrical power. By breaking a leaf off the hand is said to receive a shock about equal to that produced by the conductor of an induction coil. A magnetic needle is affected by it at six inches. The electrical power of the plant is stated to reach its maximum in the afternoon and to disappear at night. It is much increased during a storm. The soil on which the plant grows contains none of the magnetic metals, iron, cobalt or nickel.

AT the Academy of Sciences in San Francisco two horned rattlesnakes from the Mojave desert were exhibited recently. The venomous creatures are yellow, like the sand they live in, and have over each eye a scaly horn. They never move straight forward, but with a sinuous side motion, so that it is impossible to tell in which direction they intend to strike. In Palestine and in the Sahara Desert there is a horned viper which in many characteristics resembles the horned rattlesnake of the Mojave. The use of the horns is not known. They are not to shield the eyes from the glare of the sun, because other snakes in the desert have no horns.

ELECTRICAL EXTRACTS.

A VIGOROUS crusade has been begun in England to put a stop to the system of foisting sham electrical appliances upon an ignorant public. A vender of "electropathic belts," which were said to cure sciatica and innumerable other ailments, has been brought into court and punished for obtaining money under false pretenses.

A NOVEL application of electricity is a triturator for grinding drugs, which is ingeniously fitted up to work by electric motor, to save labor in chemists' shops or for drug grinders. The mortar or mortars to the number required are made to revolve by the electric motor and a very heavy porcelain pestle hangs inside, the necessary grinding being assured by the revolving of the heavy pestle by friction against the side of the mortar.

THE big guns turned out by the English arsenals are now fitted with a device to facilitate firing at night. The ordinary sights are illuminated by a small incandescent lamp, the rays from which, passing through a lens, are converged, so that only a minute point or line of sight, just sufficient to distinguish the sight, is obtained. By means of an adjustable resistance the light can be modulated to suit the degree of darkness of the night or the eye of the observer.

AN electric indicator of the names of railway stations is coming into use in England. A magnetic apparatus turning a roller on which are printed the names of stations in good visible letters is fitted over the window of every carriage with an electric bell to call the attention of passengers to the change. The instruments are connected in series, and are under the control of the guard, who changes the names by a simple touch of a button before the train stops.

A NEW system of hanging electric wires over the streets is proposed by a Milwaukee electrician. A wrought-iron arch will span the street between every pair of poles to keep them from curving or breaking and to prevent the wire from sagging. The cross wires will be supported by two properly insulated wires suspended from the arch. Guard wires will be hung from the arches parallel with and above the traction wires, so that if a telegraph or telephone wire happens to break it will not fall on the heavily-charged wire.

AN official of a well-known telephone company says that there is no work that has such a fascination for women as operating in the central office of a telephone company. Very few of them ever leave because they are dissatisfied with the work. They go in, go through all the grades and the several increases of salary which fall to them under the length-of-service rules of the company, get married and resign. That is about the history of a telephone girl. The pay is good and some of them get sixty dollars a month, but the work is very exacting. It requires constant attention, and the strain on the nerves is very great while it lasts.

A SINGULAR illustration of the adaptability of the electric light in an emergency was recently afforded. In consequence of a serious strike among the gas employes in Manchester and the total failure of the gas supply the Lancashire & Yorkshire Railway Company, decided to light their Victoria station, which is the largest in Manchester, with the electric light, and within six hours of the time the order was given the most important platforms were lighted, and the whole station was brilliantly illuminated with about 200 incandescent and a few arc lamps within thirty-six hours, and yet the current had to be conveyed for a quarter of a mile, and all the necessary circuits had to be run. The company is so well pleased that steps are being taken to have the electric light fixed permanently.

PECULIARITIES OF PEOPLE.

EDISON, the wizard of electricity, now declines to see visitors at his Menlo Park laboratory. He is a very busy man, and he can not understand why his valuable, golden time should be sacrificed to people who simply call to "pay their respects."

MANY people will sympathise with Mr. Gladstone in his fondness for liking to lie a-bed in the morning. He says: "I hate getting up in the morning, and I hate it every morning." He will not permit himself to think of current matters in politics after he goes to bed.

FEW people know that the poet Whittier is color-blind, and has been so for years. He has just passed his eighty-second birthday and seems to be in fairly good health. The weaknesses of age are upon him, however, and he rarely writes for more than half an hour at a time.

A NEW ORLEANS letter-writer says that old Jubal Early, now an annex of the Louisiana lottery, goes slouching about the corridors of the St. Charles Hotel like a ghost of the past. One of his fads is that he will never accept a National bank note with a portrait of General Grant on it.

BEN BUTLER'S eccentric attire is the subject of considerable gossip in Washington. When he envelops his short, chunky figure in a thick fur overcoat, with the fur outside, and pulls a fur cap over his ears, he is said to look like an Esquimau. He varies this costume occasionally by wearing a sombrero in place of the fur cap.

MARK TWAIN has drawn the line at "authors' readings" in his personal aid to the international copyright scheme. He writes that never more will he take part in one of these readings. They are always so irrationally conducted. His objection lies to the tedious extension of the readings beyond the limits of time originally set.

JUDGE MARK BLANDFORD, of the Georgia Supreme bench, is a firm believer in the zodiac signs. He lost an arm at the battle of McDowell, Va., in May, 1862, and he declares that he and every other soldier who got wounded in the arm in that combat recovered, while all the leg wounds proved mortal. He says he had occasion to take particular notice of that fact.

The Constitutionalist.

QUININE.

In 1879 Congress repealed the duty on quinine.

There were then, we believe, five manufacturers of the article in the United States, bounty recipients, and great was the cheering they raised in view of the proposition to make free for the people an essential medicine.

Terrible were their predictions.

It would totally ruin an important domestic industry, stop a lucrative business, and throw many workmen out of employment to suffer and starve.

Congress instead of giving heed to such mercenary talk, acted according to the dictates of good sense and abolished the duty.

What is the result?

Where is the promised havoc?

Have any of those manufacturers failed and ceased operations?

Not one!

Have they reduced wages and dispensed with labor?

No!

But on the contrary, here, after the lapse of ten years, with quinine free, the number engaged in its preparation figures double, including the original manufacturers, it prosper [illegible] business, and paying as high if not higher wages than before.

And yet, notwithstanding such resulting facts, some of the [illegible] sordid bounty-ites, under the hypocritical cry of protection, would have the present Congress reimpose a duty on quinine.

For whose benefit?

Certainly not for labor to the extent of a single cent.

But for the purpose of swelling their own [illegible] at the expense of the sufferers [illegible].

What is true of quinine is equally true of many other manufacturing interests in this age of [illegible] protection.

Speaking on this particular topic, the Philadelphia Telegraph, a Republican protectionist journal, openly declares—"It is plain that the repeal of the blood-tax quinine duty has not hurt the workingmen, and its reimposition would not be for their benefit. It would accrue solely to the benefit of the manufacturers."

That is hitting the nail squarely on the head, and there are many others that need driving in a similar manner.

Labor is fast finding out the difference between chalk and cheese.

"There is a time and place for all things," but unfortunately modern politicians seem to persist in following the opposite course. If the World's Fair is lost to New York, the truthful verdict will be—killed in consequence of politicians' politics.

Congress has been in session two months foolishly endeavoring to steer a ship without compass or rudder, that is trying to conduct a legislative body regardless of rules of order. Two other questions might with equal propriety engage the attention of those august Solons now engrossed at the National Capitol, one being—"How to make water run up hill," and the other—"The best way to suspend the law of gravitation."

The demand for free raw materials is spreading rapidly throughout the New England States, and even in Philadelphia, that loyal abode of high tariff-taxation, prominent citizens of both political parties publicly urge the nomination of a certain gentleman for Congress, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Kelley, on the score of his known advocacy of tariff reform. "Truth crushed to earth will rise again." Aye, she's rising higher and higher.

"Better late than never" is an old-fashioned and wisdom-founded saying. The President of the United States has at last recognized the Republic of Brazil by officially receiving its accredited ambassadors. That was proper, but, how much more in unison with the spirit of our own form of government, and national history, would have been the sending of a cablegram to Rio Janeiro weeks ago, couched in substance as follows—"Hail Republican Brazil, in the name and on behalf of the countrymen of Washington with joy we greet your national advent."

But in This City the Scholars Get the Worth of the Money.

The advance sheets of the State Board of Education's report show that in the office of the State the per capita expense on the total school census for last year was $5.82; the per capita expense on the enrolled attendance was $11.90; and the cost of each scholar on the average attendance was $17.75. This is an increase of 24 cents a scholar on the enrolled attendance, and of 25 cents on the average attendance of the previous year.

Long Branch is paying the largest amount per capita of any other city in the State, $19.60. Montclair comes next, paying $19.64; Plainfield, $18.90; Orange, $16.08; Morristown, $15.67; Bloomfield, $14.75; Hoboken, $14.26; Princeton, $12.96. Then comes Trenton, $12.25, New Brunswick, Bayonne and Atlantic City, almost the same.

So "Civil Service" Is [illegible] For This Republican Editor.

(From the Union County Standard.)

In the retirement of Postmaster Addison S. Clark, Westfield loses a painstaking, faithful and efficient official. His appointment four years ago was an affair of party. His retirement now is an affair of party. We condemned the policy that retired Frederick Decker, the former Postmaster, and placed Mr Clark in his stead; and which now, at the behest of Party, makes another change with no better reason than then existed.

The pre-election talk about civil service was clap-trap and sham and pretense. What business firm would keep displacing tried and experienced men? Fortunately for Westfield, Mr. Clark's successor, Mr. Egbert M. Whitaker, is a man of exceptional executive ability, known to every citizen. Without being advised as to his plans, we will undertake to say that the post office service will be a progressive one and that Mr. Whitaker will institute every possible improvement that the increasing business of the place will justify.

THE CRESCENT LEAGUE'S NINE FOR THE COMING SEASON.

The Pick of Rahway's Celebrated Team, Combined With the Brooklyn L's Pitcher and Last Year's Famous Out Field.

Messrs Charles Leggett, Charles Bonnet, and J. Waldron have engaged to represent Plainfield and the Crescent League in the ball field during the coming season, one of the strongest semi-professional nines ever combined in the State, and probably the best balanced in all its positions of any team that will play from anywhere in New Jersey during the year 1890. Here are the players:

LIVINGSTON, Pitcher.
JONES, Catcher.
WIELAND, First Base.
LAFFERY, Second Base.
MARTIN, Short Stop.
LEE, Third Base.
MCLAUGHLIN, Left Field.
DEMAREST, Centre Field.
MCMURRAY, Right Field.

There's the Crescent League's aggregation of base ballists for the coming season. That they are all right, is shown by a glance at their records. Livingston was the star pitcher on the Brooklyn L's great team of last year. He won more games against the strongest semi-professional teams of New York and elsewhere, than any other man in the box. He came high but the Crescent League had to have him. Up to a week ago, the managers ahead of above had an option on Harkins of the Somerville, and would have closed with him had they not been able to sign Livingston.

The next four on the list, Jones, Wieland, Laffery and Martin, are the pick of last year's Rahway team the State champions. They beat every team that stood up against them, including the Metropolitans of New York. Martin out of 245 chances in the season, made only five errors; and Laffery only missed seven chances out of 248. These with reliable Billy Lee, are rated by the records of last year, the very strongest infield ever made up in the State. They will form a stone wall that nothing will go through, and everything over their heads will be pulled down out of the air by that outfield which Plainfield has so much right and reason to be proud of.

In their admiration for the playing of Demarest, McMurray and McLaughlin, the grand stand and bleaching boards are actuated not only by patriotism but by appreciation. McMurray's record in the field, last season, was unexcelled; and McLaughlin proved he was just built for a ball player. Demarest is unequaled in judging a fly, covering the ground and throwing in. The people will be glad to learn that although more renowned fielders offered themselves, the Crescent team's managers have resolved on retaining the home outfield.

Games are being arranged for the coming season with the best semi-professional clubs of New York, Brooklyn and this State. These games will be played in Plainfield every Saturday. Base ball being liberally patronized in this city, that it is fixed the nine should always play at home.

On Saturday evening of this week, the members of the team named above will be given a sort of reception at the Crescent League club house. Everyone belonging to the League is requested to be present and be introduced to the nine who will win glory for the blue pennant of the Crescents, next Summer.

BUT WHAT CAN THEY DO ABOUT IT?

The Councilmen Are Anxious Concerning the Office of Street Commissioner, but are Without Hope.

His Honor, Mayor Male, at present is very much in the humor of permitting Street Commissioner Angleman to remain in office. The Mayor nominated a successor who a majority of the Council refused to confirm. So Mr. Angleman will hold over.

The Mayor wants to choose his own appointees, while some of the councilmen want to choose them for him. As the latter will not confirm any but their own choice, consequently it is possible that the Mayor will name no one else for rejection.

But, say the councilmen, Section 2 of an ordinance approved as amended in 1884, provides:

If any nomination by the Mayor shall be not confirmed, it shall be the duty of the Mayor to nominate at each succeeding regular or adjourned meeting a different person for such office, and before nominated, for such office during the then current year, until a nomination for such office shall be confirmed.

Well, what does that amount to? There is no penalty attached. If the Mayor does not choose to nominate others for the office of Street Commissioner, what are you going to do about it?

Still there is this sprig of hope sprouting in the breasts of the Big Six. The Mayor has been known to change his mind. It is said that he promised he would not sign the contract employing Constructing Engineer Hering; and he didn't—for a while.

She Went Out Just the Same.

A colored servant girl employed by an East Fifth street family became obstreperous early on Tuesday, and it was found necessary to forcibly eject her from the premises. The woman refused to leave the house, and her employer set her baggage out on the back stoop.

Vacancies in the Kitchen Garden.

The graduation of some of the girls into the "Cooking Class," has left a few vacancies in the Kitchen Garden classes, which are held at 4 o'clock on Monday and Thursday afternoons at the W. C. T. U. rooms 72 West Front street, where applications may be made to Miss Alice Smith, the Superintendent.

The High School Glee Club.

The singing of the school "Glee Club" promises to be an interesting part of the High School concert, on the evening of February 18. The Club, composed of a small number of the best singers, was organized early in the year and has been rehearsing regularly. So much interest has been manifested that it is hoped the club will become a permanent feature of the school life.

To Extend the Telephone Service.

The work of extending the telephone line from this city to Bound Brook and beyond has already met with some opposition in the shape of a farmer who lives just beyond Bound Brook. In order to reach Bound Brook by a short route it will become necessary to plant six poles on the farmer's land, and for this privilege he wants the Telephone company to pay him $300. The matter will likely be settled in the Courts.

Union County Courts.

Court of Special Sessions convened at Elizabeth at 10 o'clock Monday morning, Judges VanSyckel, McCormick, Hyer and Wiley on the bench.

The case of the State vs. Philip Beyer of Westfield, was at once called and a jury impanelled. Beyer, who was represented by General Fay, stood charged with having on October last committed an assault and battery on one Ferdinand Dietzel, a farmer residing at Rahway. The trouble is said to have resulted on account of chickens belonging to Dietzel going on to Beyer's property. Witnesses were called to testify in Dietzel's behalf. All of them said that his face had been battered up, but none saw the alleged assault. The case was closed very soon and the jury returned shortly afterwards with a verdict of guilty.

There being no further business to be transacted, Court adjourned.

THE REV. MR. RICHARDS ON LICENSE.

He Regards, However, as Unfortunate Rather The Way the Ballots Were Cast at the Last Municipal Election.

A very interesting passage from a recent sermon by the Rev. Mr. Richards of the Crescent Avenue church of this city, was selected by Aaron M. Powell for insertion in the National Temperance Advocate, of which he is the editor. The quotation embraces a very emphatic denunciation of the course pursued by the builders of the new aqueduct of New York in debauching the workmen by erecting saloons along the line of the aqueduct, "compelling their laborers to lodge in apartments over these saloons and making their board-bill the first charge against their month's pay and their drink-bill a second charge, which often left only a dollar a month to be paid in cash." Mr. Richards drew a lesson for Plainfield in the following words:

"But, my friends, before we try to throw stones across the Hudson River at other transgressors, we should be sure that we are without sin here at home. I suppose there are people in New Jersey who are willing to make gain by the temptation and ruin of their fellow-men. I have been told that certain men would gladly double their license fees if they could keep their establishments open from eleven o'clock at night to twelve. For this reason, I suppose—can any one suggest any other reason?—that men are more susceptible to temptation, and more easily ruined after eleven than before.

"It may be,—God forbid that I should impute motives to other people because of their vote on a question of city administration so perplexing as this—I am not arguing now for or against any particular method of abating this nuisance of the saloon; but the very decided surprise in the results of the election a few weeks ago has compelled some of us to do a good deal of thinking about the matter, and it may be that citizens of Plainfield who would not stain their own hands, or imperil their own homes by touching liquor with a ten-foot pole, have yet been willing, for the sake of lightening their own taxes, to encourage others to touch that same deadly thing, and if need be ruin themselves with it. If men work for this or that legal measure, some license law, e. g., because they honestly think it the most effectual way of limiting an existing evil, I have nothing to say now against that; but if they work for that same measure really because they wish to fill the city treasury without increasing their own taxes, valuing a few dollars in their own pocket above the souls of men, God forbid that such motives as that should be allowed to determine the policy of our city government."

Some of You Are Not Doing It.

The Board of Health of North Plainfield would call the attention of the physicians to the fact that they are required to report at once, all cases of scarlet fever or other contagious diseases.

Before the City Judge.

Jeremiah Rowe was arraigned before City Judge Codington Saturday, P. M., charged with obstructing the sidewalk and disorderly conduct. The complainants were Miss Annie Seidling and Miss Camilla Worts. He was adjudged guilty and fined $5 on each charge. The defendant gave notice of appeal.

Struck by a Falling Board.

While passing the new Hand building, on West Second street, on his return from supper, Friday night, William Demens, a butcher's clerk employed by Mr. William Van Syckle, was struck on the head by a board blown from the building, knocking him down. The derby hat he wore was wrecked, and he was also slightly injured about the head and body.

Bound Brook to Have a Telephone.

The public will be glad to learn that the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company has about completed its arrangements for introducing a long-distance telephone station at Bound Brook. The right of way has been secured, with a very few exceptions, for the extension of the wires from the Pond Machine Tool Company's Works at Plainfield to Bound Brook, Finderne and Somerville.

They'll Be Built Right Now.

Mr. C. K. Moore, who is building Plainfield's water works, has also taken in hand the completion of the county roads and will finish them in short order. Mr. Moore owns a number of crackers on the road at the foot of the mountain back of Scotch Plains that are running night and day to supply the large demands upon them. The road contractors, it is said, got behind on their payments for the stone used, so Mr. Moore stepped in and assumed the contract.

The Methodist Revival.

Special services have been held in Vincent chapel for two weeks The pastor, the Rev. Chas. E. Mitchell, has preached each evening. The chapel has been crowded and much interest has been awakened. The church membership has loyally supported the pastor in his work. Friday night there were ten at the altar for prayers, all of whom professed conversion. Fourteen united with the church last night. The meetings are increasing in interest and will continue this week.

To Beat Nellie Bly's Record.

It should not be inferred that because Mr. Howard Giles, the courteous clerk in Messrs J. P Laire & Co's hardware store, started out in a wagon on Thursday to "do" New Jersey with a choice selection of garden seeds, that he is trying to imitate Nellie Bly, only on a smaller scale. Some of his friends, however, say that his intention is to beat Miss Bly's record. They also claim that his vehicle collided with an undertaker's wagon before the trip was fairly begun, and in consequence he is already a day behind the record.

John French Resigns.

At a business meeting of the Reform Club, held on Thursday, a communication was received from John H. French declining to serve as a member of the Executive Committee, which was accepted, and the president announced that he would nominate a person to fill the vacancy at the next regular meeting. On motion, the Rev. W. E. Honeyman was appointed chaplain to the club. After the transaction of routine business, interesting remarks were made by Messrs Burnett and Angleman, and during the singing of the closing hymn three persons came forward and donned the red ribbon badge of total abstinence.

A Spirited Discussion Between the Chief and the Council.

At the close of the Borough Council meeting, on Friday, a long a spirited discussion took place on the subject of procuring additional supplies for the fire department; also on the matter of establishing a fire alarm system. Chief Martin of the department thought that all of his efforts to increase the efficiency of the department were defeated by the Council.

The Chief further stated that he had undertaken the task of collecting subscriptions for the purpose of establishing a fire alarm system, but his action in so doing did not seem to be approved by the Council.

Mayor Cooley, Clerk Arnold and Councilmen Buckle and Emmons took part in the discussion, which was quite interesting while it lasted.

IT LOOKS LIKE MURDER.

Henry Cole in Jail and His Wife, Who it is Alleged He Treated With Extreme Cruelty, in Her Grave.

On Friday evening, Jan. 31, Henry Cole, who lives at Mendham a small village a few miles Northwest of this city, with one of his friends is alleged to have gone off on a periodical spree.

When Cole returned late at night and had gone in the house, it is said he commenced beating his wife unmercifully. Awakening only to a fear of the law when he had almost killed the woman, he stripped her of her clothing, threw it down the cellar, and running to a neighbor's house begged for assistance as his wife was dying.

The unfortunate victim was found stretched on the floor naked and bleeding. Cole explained the condition of things by saying she had fallen down stairs. He said they would find her clothes at the bottom of the cellar stairs and could see for themselves that he was telling the truth.

Cole was subsequently arrested, and everything possible was done to save Mrs. Cole's life, without avail. She was buried Wednesday, Feb. 5. Her husband is now in the Morristown jail, and it may happen that he will hang.

It is said that the last is not the first trouble that has occurred between Cole and his wife. The rumor is that last Summer Cole had a negro working for him, who it was thought at that time had beaten Cole's wife. But after the poor negro was punished for so doing, it was said that Cole himself had done the beating and compelled his wife through fear to swear the deed on the poor black.

The Wind Taken Out of Their Sails.

The case of Laura Connett vs. Mrs. J. W. Mitchell, for an alleged assault, came before Justice Nodyne Friday. Mr. W. K. McClure appeared for the defendant. He said: "This being an ex parte examination, in which the defendant has no right to be heard, and in order to avoid church scandal, I waive examination here." The Justice thereupon held the accused in the sum of $100 bail to await the action of the Grand Jury. Mrs. Mary Kline of West Third street, went on the bail bond.

Mr. W. A. Coddington appeared for the complainant.

The matter will doubtless end here. Mrs. Mitchell and her friends are delighted with the proceedings, while the plaintiff and her followers are correspondingly chagrined at the sudden turn of affairs.

Borough Council Meeting.

The Borough Council met in regular session, on Friday, with Mayor Cooley in the chair. The other members present were: Messrs. Buckle, Emmons, Needham and Smalley.

The minutes of the preceding meeting were read and approved, after which the regular order of business was taken up.

Collector H. M. Spencer submitted his statement of the taxes collected since his last report, showing the total amount to be $7,254.62. The report was filed.

Warren Engine Company No. 1 communicated with the Council recommending the confirmation of Peter Seader as a member of said company. Referred.

A number of applications for pedler's licenses were received, referred and granted.

The following claims were presented: Thos. McDonald, $37 50; Plainfield Gas Co., $23.18; T. R. Crossley, $2 96; D. A. Woodhouse Manufacturing Co., $12.72 and $7; A. M. Griffin, $9 16; N. Y. & N. J. Globe Gas Light Co., $264 37; Carney Bros., $2; P. Kelleher, $6.25; J. K. Arnold, $2.50; I. Taynor, $9.75. These bills were subsequently ordered paid.

A communication was received from Carney Bros., offering to sell to the Borough 58 feet of red jacket hose at 60 cents a foot. Referred.

Chief Martin of the Fire Department reported two fires since his last report; one on Emily street and one on Somerset street: the engine has been used to pump out water from Mr. J. T. Johnston's green house, also from Mr. Geo. Liestgnolo's cellar and cistern, for which $45 in all was charged. The expenses connected with the work was $17 50. The Chief urged the need of active measures to put the fire department in better condition. One of the needs of the department, the Chief reported, was to have horses in the engine house so as to be ready in case of an emergency; an extra supply of hose was also asked for. The company now has only 450 feet of good hose. Attention was also called to the necessity of a fire alarm system. The Chief asked for permission to string wires from the engine house through the streets of the borough so as to secure an electrical circuit, with headquarters in the engine house. The report was referred to the Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps.

Mr. Emmons, from the Fire, Water and Lamps Committee, made a report on the finances of the fire department. He said there was an endowment of about $600 on hand, and that $500 more could reasonably be expected in anticipation of taxes. One bond of $500 falls due this year, and this with other outstanding indebtedness aggregates $610. The committee recommended no change in the running of the department at the present time. It recommended, however, the purchase of 200 feet of hose, not to exceed 70 cents per foot. Six lanterns have been purchased for the firemen. The report was accepted.

Some discussion followed on the subject of what portion of the license money was due the borough, but no action was taken on the matter.

Mr. Smalley spoke in favor of placing horses in the engine house, but nothing further was done that will lead to that end.

It was agreed, upon resolution adopted, that the Council meet again in special session on Wednesday evening, February 19.

Mr. Emmons offered a resolution, which prevailed, requesting the Auditing Committee to audit the accounts of the Clerk and Collector, and report at the next meeting.

The Clerk was requested to make arrangements for a room wherein to hold the borough election.

Mr. Smalley read section 16 of the fire department ordinance relating to the duties of the Chief and others in the matter of allowing the steamer to go outside of the borough limits.

A long discussion followed on the subject, in which most of the members and the Mayor took part. Chief Martin explained his reasons for taking the steamer outside of the borough and pumping out Mr. Liestgnolo's cellar, by stating that the borough would receive a revenue; furthermore, the apparatus needed testing and the family was in distress, and besides the Chief of the Plainfield Department had refused, to perform the work.

A resolution, by Mr. Needham, to the effect that the Clerk notify the members of the special meeting, together with its object, was adopted, and the Council adjourned.

The Death of James Lawson—The Burning of Howard Bird's Barn—And Other Doings in Dunellen.

Mrs. Dr. Tomlinson, the President of the Union County and Plainfield W. C. T. U., delivered an address in the W. C. T. U. room at Dunellen on Monday, on her experiences at the last National W. C. T. U. Convention at Chicago. Mrs. Tomlinson spoke for about one hour, greatly to the edification of a small but appreciative audience. Mrs. Robert Humpston, President of the Dunellen Union, presided, and Rev. L. E. Livermore, pastor of the Seventh-day Baptist church, closed the exercises with an appropriate prayer.

James Lawson, aged about 70 years, died yesterday afternoon at the home of Mr. Robert Lowrie. Mr. Lawson had long been a sufferer from physical ailments contracted in the late war, and six years ago applied to the Government for a pension. He had just received his pension certificate and died with it in his hand. Notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Lawson was a Scotchman by birth, he was firmly attached to the country of his adoption, and was one of the first to respond to the call for arms, having enlisted as early as April, 1861, in the 79th New York Regiment of Highlanders. He served three years in the Federal army and was one of the heroes of the first battle of Bull Run. Several years ago Mr. Lowrie took Mr. Lawson into his home and cared for him up to the time of his death. He leaves a daughter now in London.

Howard Bird's barn and outbuildings near the Central Railroad tanks, were burned Monday night. It was a favorite shelter for tramps. It contained no horses. All its contents were consumed.

PLAINFIELD'S WORKS THE BEST.

The Pond Machine Tool Company Secure a Large Government Contract.

Six months ago in these columns, the secret was told that an inspector from the War Department's Bureau of Ordnance, had been sent to look over the Pond Tool Co's plant in this city and judge of its capabilities. That his report was satisfactory is proven by the recent acceptance by the Government of the above Company's bid for the building of a large lot of tools required for the construction of eight and twelve inch guns.

The contract was signed on Monday. The tools specified will take many months to complete, and will give employment to a large number of men. The cost to the Government will be about $400,000. There were but a few bids for the work. There are not more than four shops in the whole country that could undertake the contract, and the Pond Tool Works seems to be considered by the Nation's experts, as the best.

A New Society at Hope Chapel.

The "band of gospel workers" is the name of a new society recently organized mention of which has already appeared in the columns of THE DAILY PRESS. All communications relating to the new society should be addressed to Mr. Geo. H. Fountain, Plainfield avenue. Meetings are held every Tuesday evening.

A New Church Calls a Pastor.

At the meeting of the Presbytery held on Wednesday afternoon, a committee of the newly organized Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church, in Roseville, presented a call which they desired to send to the Rev. Hugh B. McCauley, of Bound Brook. After one or two questions concerning Mr. McCauley, the committee were authorized to prosecute the call. Mr. McCauley is a young clergyman, thirty-three years of age, and he is highly recommended to the Fifth Avenue church. He has on several occasions preached in this city.

Elizabeth's New Hospital.

The new hospital at Elizabeth, to be erected by the Catholic church, will cost about $60,000, and will cover a large area of ground. The land for its site has been purchased from the Coudert Brothers of New York, who are also owners of some valuable real estate in this city, notably, Force's Hotel on North avenue. The price paid was $9,000.

The erection of the hospital is to be begun in April, and the five Catholic churches will contribute $1,400 as a fund with which to begin the work. The remainder will be advanced by the Bishop of the diocese.

New Market Notes.

The Y. P. S. C. E., of the New Market Baptist church, held a sociable at Mr. Lloyd Nelson's home on Wednesday last week, and the Ladies' Aid Society, connected with the same church, held one at the home of Mr. Ludlow Squier, next evening. There was a good attendance.

The Rev. L. E. Livermore, pastor of the Seventh Day Baptist church, was pleasantly surprised by his congregation, a large number of whom called upon him on Wednesday last week. The surprise was admirably managed by the ladies of the church.

The Y. P. C. E., societies of New Market and Dunellen have arranged to publish a monthly paper under the joint management of a committee from each association, for the dissemination of church and Christian Endeavor news and the promulgation of Christian Endeavor principles. The first issue will appear in March and will be called the Christian Endeavor Union.

Mr. E. E. Seymour of Peekskill, is the new night telegraph operator at Dunellen. Train Dispatcher Carpenter still has charge of the ticket office, pending the consummation of the plan to relieve him of that responsibility.

Public Library Proceedings.

The regular meeting of the Board of Directors was held at the library building, Wednesday last week. There were present Messrs Male, Baldwin, Babcock, Dumont and Stillman.

The following bills for books were ordered paid out of the special fund: G. P. Putnam's Sons, $30; McHall & Rohde, $10.73; Scribner & Welford, $118.49, and $109.43; Chas. Scribner's Sons, $176.43, and $345 24. The treasurer reported the sum of $897.37 to the credit of the special fund.

The following bills were ordered paid out of the general fund: Miss Adams, salary for January, $50; Miss Adams, sundries, $14; W. E. Lowe, insurance, $30; W. H. Williams, magazines, etc., $21 19; Estate D. J Boice, coal, $109.31; Mudie's select library, magazines, etc., £3.6.1, and £3.9.9; Neumann, binding papers, $36.45; S. H. Allen, salary, $40; S. H. Allen, sundries, $6.45.

REVERIES OF ONE OF THE PRESS' CRANKS.

The Cute and Caustic Things Evolved From His Think-Works.

One of our city hairdressers was heard to remark the other day, that he would either succeed in business or deliberately dye in the attempt.

It's a wise fool who knows he is one and will acknowledge the fact when reminded of it, but a woman possessing a well-formed figure, who persists in violating the rules of common sense and the laws of nature by compressing her waist so as to resemble a miniature isthmus, and jamming her No. 5 feet into No. 3 shoes, is a consummate fool whether she knows it or not

Who is there that can "do justice" to an average Sunday newspaper, and attend church or keep up an acquaintance with his family if he has one?

It is a positive fact that many poor children of our beautiful city are squeezed out of—or prevented from attending—some of our Sunday schools, by the persistant demands made upon them for money.

As successful a church as there is in this State—financially as well as in other respects—is one in which no collections are ever taken in the public congregation, except the "usual" basket collection.

A young man who has been "waiting" on a young lady on East Third street, for several years, took a bottle of soda water with him the other night so that they could have a social drink together. When he shoved the wire off of the top of the cork and hit the bottom of the bottle a whack, the stopper flew across the room. "Oh! Jim," said she—"I love that, 'cause it pops." In just 3 minutes and 4 seconds the business was all settled satisfactory to both parties.

A Hack-neyed phrase: "Ride up?"

The man who "ran away with the idea" that THE PRESS was not the best advertising medium in this city, was arrested just the other side of Scotch Plains, yesterday morning, brought back and is now in safe custody. It is proposed to commit him to an insane asylum.

There isn't much difference between a Colorado beetle and a lager beer glass. One is a mere bug, and the other is a beer mug.

An electrical engineer was heard singing the other day, a song entitled—"I'm going home to dy-na-mo."

It is a case of deliberate suicide when a man hangs himself of his own free will and a cord.

It is in order now to howl because of the utter and irretrievable ruin of this year's peach crop.

STATE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The Plans for the New Normal Building Approved.

The State Board of Education held their first meeting for the year 1890 at Trenton Thursday. The report of the State Superintendent in reference to the complaints made of unfair school census in Hudson and Monmouth were read and accepted, and a resolution adopted directing the Secretary to inform the editors of the papers giving currency to such complaints that the Board had made an investigation and found nothing definite upon which to act. They would be glad to pursue the matters further if more information could be furnished them.

The plans for the new building between the Model and Normal buildings, were submitted to the Board from the Normal Board, and were approved unanimously. A committee was appointed to urge the matter before the Legislature and ask for an appropriation of $50,000 for the purpose. A bill has been drafted and will be presented on Monday night.

An Impostor.

It is said that a young girl is going about the city soliciting subscriptions for the Children's Home. The president of the Home informs THE PRESS that she is unauthorized to do so, and persons would do well to be on the lookout for her.

A Small Fire.

A fire was discovered in one of the chimneys on the City Hotel about 9:30 o'clock on Thursday, and for a time it was thought that the building was doomed. The fire was extinguished, however, with but little difficulty.

In Correction Again of Others' Blunders.

The men's night school is to be continued during the rest of this month in order to give all a chance who desire to avail themselves of possibly the only opportunity of their lives to secure an education. The statement in a demised contemporary that the men's school had closed, is not true. And should the attendance increase, the school will not be closed at all.

Junior Past Councilor Dunavan Gets a Badge.

At the regular meeting of Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., held in S. of T. hall, on Thursday, after the usual routine business was transacted Councilor James D. Anderson with a very few appropriate remarks presented to J. P. C., D. S. Dunavan with a handsome past councilor's badge which was accepted by Mr. Dunavan with a very neat speech.

The Five Per Cent. Bill.

Now that there is a bill in the Legislature to have five per cent. established as the legal rate of interest in this State, the question has been brought up as to whether it will also apply to the many building associations. If it does not affect these it will greatly mar their usefulness; but some of those interested in the associations thinks the law will not affect them, as they are working under a very liberal special law and the courts have shown considerable liberality towards these bodies in cases involving them.

The State Encampment.

The annual meeting of the State Encampment, G. A. R. will be held in Trenton on Thursday and Friday of this week. The meeting will be presided over by Commander W. B. Miller, of Camden. The Committee of Arrangements are making great preparations for the event. Budd S. Bodine, W. B. Titus and James W. Royle comprise the committee. It is expected that at least 500 Grand Army men will be present, including delegates from this city.

On Thursday evening from six to eight o'clock, a grand public reception will be given to General Alger, the National Commander, who will be present on that day. The Executive reception rooms have been tendered the Encampment for the reception. It is expected that a large number of prominent men will be present, including Governor Abbett and members of the Legislature. After the reception there will be a grand camp fire in Taylor's Hall Assembly Rooms where the old veterans will mess together and will listen to speeches.

On Friday the officers will be elected and installed.

—Walter Smalley, who is charged by Chief Carey with fast driving on Sunday of last week, will be tried before Judge Nodyne on Monday.

They Back it Up.

The superior merits, as a blood-purifier and invigorating tonic, possessed by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, warrant its manufacturers in selling it (as they are doing) through druggists, under a positive guarantee that, if given a fair trial, it will cure all diseases arising from a deranged or torpid liver, as indigestion, or dyspepsia, and all [illegible] blood [illegible] skin, scalp or scrofulous affections. The terms are, a benefit or cure, or money returned.

CONCERNING PLAINFIELD ROADS.

A Disgruntled Netherwood Man Who Thinks it Advisable to Frame a Bill for the Legislature With Reference to Road-making.

A resident of Netherwood, who signs himself "Taxpayer," thus expresses himself in Monday's World, with reference to the condition of the roads at Netherwood:

"In your New Jersey issue of February 5, you have a communication in regard to the Street Commissioner, George Angleman and William Hand. What you say of Mr. Angleman's work is all misleading. This piece of road, say five hundred feet or more on each side of my house, has not had one dollar's worth of benefit. I think it is fifteen years since it was macadamized, and much to a disadvantage. There appears to be no fixed purpose in road-making to work upon, and now the Leisiature is in session, it might be advisable to frame a bill to that effect, that the rising generation would reap the benefit. The roads are no better than they were twenty-five years back. Keep politics more out of local matters. I would like to say that Mr. Hand is a good, practical business man. I have seen some things myself the last sixty years.

TAXPAYER."

Netherwood, Feb. 8."

THE KNIGHTS OF HONOR FLOURISH.

Wetumpka's Growing Lodge Arranging for an Anniversary Celebration.

Wetumpka lodge, Knights of Honor, of this city, continues to flourish most successfully. Besides the admissions at Thursday's meeting, other new members were proposed and there will be six candidates for initiation on the evening of Thursday, the 21st inst. That will swell the total membership to 79.

A committee has been appointed to arrange appropriate ceremonies and entertainment by which to celebrate and enjoy the anniversary of the Lodge, in April. D. D. G. M., Neefus, of Onward Lodge, of Elizabeth, installed the balance of Wetumpka's officers, above evening.

North Plainfield Township Committee Meeting.

The above committee held a meeting in Spencer's Hall, on Monday, with President Coddington in the chair. All the members were present. The main business which came up for consideration was the auditing of about $1,700 in claims, many of which were sent in by the Overseer of the Poor.

Evening Sociable.

Another of the series of sociables which the members of "Our Own Social Society" inaugurated early in the season, took place in Prof. Segadlo's academy, in the new Clarkson building on East Front street, on Thursday. About twenty-five couples were present. Local musicians furnished the music for dancing, which continued until early this morning. Refreshments were served during the evening.

A Perfectly Proper Visit.

The officers of Engine Co. No. 1, and Hook & Ladder Co. No. 1, met Thursday, with the Board of Engineers, to consider matters of importance to the Department.

Charges to the effect that a member of one of the companies had brought women to the house, were investigated, and the fact brought out that they had merely visited the place out of curiosity to see the Department's apparatus.

League of American Wheelmen.

Wheelmen from all parts of New Jersey will assemble at Plainfield in May, when the State Division of the League of American Wheelmen will hold its annual meeting. The gathering will be on May 30 and 31. In connection with the business sessions there will probably be a lantern parade, races for the several championships of the State, a dinner and a theatre party. It is intended to make this the largest gathering of wheelmen ever held in New Jersey.

Inspecting the Electric Light Plant.

The members of the City Council and others interested in the formation of an Electric Street Lighting Company at Catawissa, Pa., came to this city on Thursday, and inspected the Plainfield Electric Light Company's plant here. The delegation, numbering about twenty-five, were courteously received by Manager Moore, who took them around and allowed the visitors to thoroughly inspect the plant and its workings.

The visitors returned home well pleased with their tour of inspection.

Associated Teachers' Meeting.

A meeting of the Somerset County Teachers' Association will be held in the Raritan Public School building, on Saturday, February 15, at 10.15 A. M., when the following programme will be carried out. Some of the participants are teachers in the North Plainfield Public school:

Roll Call—Members will respond by naming favorite author and giving quotation from the same.
Language—What to Teach........Miss Compton
A Plea for the Agassiz Society.......Miss Purdue
Progress in Educational Power.........Mr. Boss
Form Study Illustrated with Prang's Objects..............Miss Lydall
"The Art of Questioning" applied to Reading...............Mr. S. S. Bigvins
"Sparks"...............Mr. Haynes

A Beautiful Home.

Notwithstanding the fact that the demand for houses in this city seems to be less than the supply, it is simply surprising to see the number of houses going up in the suburban part of the town. Among the handsome dwelling places now in course of erection is that of Mr. Clarence E Bond, at the corner of Frost and Richmond streets. The building, when completed, will be a model, both in design and workmanship

The building is designed after the Queen Anne pattern, and contains 13 rooms. It will be ready for occupancy on April 1. The first story is of brick, and the second story is built of California red shingles finished in spar varnish. Part of the interior is to be fitted up with hard wood, and the reception hall, parlor and library are so arranged that they can all be thrown into one room. The total cost of the building will be about $5,000.

An Entertainment and Panic.

An entertainment was given by the infant class of the Union Mission Sunday school of Evona on Tuesday evening, Feb. 4, under the direction of Miss Haft. Noticeable features of the entertainment were recitations by Master Russell Day, Miss Maggie Williams and Miss Hattie Randall. Particular mention should be made of Miss Anna Randall who sang "Jesus Loves Me," and of Master Willie Williams who recited "The Books of the Bible." The ages of these two are three and four years respectively. The members of the class also sang some songs, and gave some fine tableaux

Several of the best tableaux had to be omitted for what at one time threatened to be a serious accident. In using the colored fire in some way the flames ignited with the costumes to be worn in the next tableau, creating quite a panic among the scholars.

The presence of mind of Mr. Haft and others arrested what might have proved a serious affair.

Obstinate Indigestion.

Obstinate cases of indigestion or liver complaint, are easily cured by a few HAMBURG FIGS, as may be proved at small cost. 25 cents. Dose, one fig. Mack Drug Co., N. Y. For sale by J. G. Miller.

A BRANCH OVERLOOKED.

Education For Hand and Eye Proposed for Plainfield's Public Schools.

However much we may differ about the causes or the remedies, it is manifest that this branch of education has been entirely overlooked until quite recently. Intellectual studies, as they are called, have alone been thought worthy of being introduced into our systems of instruction, while eye and hand culture have not only been disregarded, but absolutely looked down upon with a lofty scorn. No just conception can be had of their immense value to our structure without its co-education with the brain; their joint sphere of action embraces all employments, the sciences, the arts, agriculture, manufactures and inventions, together with the application of all these to the necessities and enjoyments of society. The American boy is only half educated, or educated in one direction—that is, mentally. It is the mission of a practical education not only to impart the elements of knowledge, but to draw forth the faculties, and train them to act intelligently and successfully in all the circumstances of life.

Our obligations to the public school are numerous and important, and yet there are drawbacks and defects that defy disproof; for, while the useful arts of life have exercised the most marked influence upon our position in the scale of civilization, and furnish employments for a very large portion of those who have to earn a living, the necessity of an education commensurate with these wants and relations has not been sufficiently recognized in the programmes and routines of public instruction.

How many out of the numbers of young men who leave school, and who are gifted with every mental and physical requisite for success, and who are also splendidly disciplined by all the teachings of the public school, can gain assistance from their education in any practical pursuit they intend to follow? To be sure, they get along somehow, and many of them anyhow. The desire of reaching an honorable and useful condition is a stimulus, and in this country the field is broad and open to all, and those who are brave and ambitious come out with success, while others in the stern and aimless struggle have become dispirited and broken-hearted. The difficulty is being seriously considered, and many persons, well qualified to speak on the subject, do not hesitate to recommend the adoption of a course of manual training as a necessary and indispensable part of public education.

A DIFFERENCE WITH A DISTINCTION.

The Pastor Says That Counselor McClure Represents Mount Olive Church and Counselor Codington but Two Deacons and Twelve "Followers."

TO THE EDITOR OF PRESS:—I wish to make one or two corrections of what I saw in your paper of the 1st inst., under the heading of "Both Pastor and His Wife in Dispute."

First—There has been no dispute between myself and the congregation of the Mount Olive church, but between myself and two deacons, namely Edward Maynard, now Sexton of First Baptist church of this city, and Mansfield Robinson, with about fourteen of their followers in all.

My second correction is, that Mr. Codington did not represent the Mt. Olive church and congregation, but the above mentioned minority represented and led by the said Edward Maynard. Upon the other hand Mr. McClure represented the Pastor and the majority members of said church and congregation.

My third objection is, the Pastor did not agree to give up the church and parsonage at once, but to vacate the pulpit and to give up the parsonage before the first of March.

In fact the terms of settlement were dictated and settled on the terms proposed by my lawyer Mr. McClure. They were compelled to submit to my having my letters.

J. M. MITCHELL

NO ONE RESPONDS.

Silence Evidences the Justice of the Claim.

It is almost a week since an offer was prominently made in these columns, to send THE PRESS free to anyone in the city of Plainfield, or borough of North Plainfield, who does not conscientiously believe that that paper has a larger number of readers than any paper published in this vicinity.

There is no fence around such offer No inconvenient nor impossible provisions, to be fulfilled. The non-believer of the fact that THE PRESS is the most widely read paper published in Plainfield, has merely to send his or her name to this office and the paper will be sent free.

But not a single response has been received. If there are any men, women or children who believe any other paper hereabouts has more readers than THE PRESS they have not made themselves known. The offer is still, and will be always, open.

The popular rough diagonal cheviot coats and vests, flat braided, for $13, and all the new and handsome weaves of "all the year round" dress worsteds in alberts, cutaways and sacks, $8, $10, $12 and $15, with fine and heavy velour pantaloons in light shades to make the suits complete. Ask any of their thirty salesmen to show you the handsome garments finished this week by their idle custom tailors that Watson & Co. must keep busy during the dull season.—Newark Press.

Broke Her Leg, Throwing Out the Dish Water.

It is said that Mrs. John Day, of Cottage place near Richmond street, broke her leg the other day in a peculiar way. She had just finished washing the dishes and threw the water out of her kitchen window. In doing so she slipped and broke her leg by falling on it.

Is He an Impostor?

A man who claims the name of Foster and says that he came from Newark, applied at the residence of Mrs. Perrin in North Plainfield a day or two since for a suit of clothes, which he understood had been left there for him by a Mrs. Holmes. The man is thought to be an impostor, and he was refused possession of the suit.

To Consider Their Reinstatement.

A special meeting of Plainfield Engine Company No. 2 is called for Wednesday evening of this week, at 8 o'clock. At the meeting held last week, some of the company's Relief Association members were suspended for non-payment of dues, and it is said that the special meeting is called to consider their reinstatement.

The New Time Table.

A new schedule in the running of passenger trains went into effect on the Central R. R. of New Jersey Monday. About the only important change so far as Plainfield is concerned is the addition of a train to New York, which will leave here at 10.12 o'clock, P. M., Sundays excepted. Heretofore there has been no train leaving this city for New York between the 9.28 and 11.28 o'clock trains at night.

—The Supreme Court has rendered a decision that "A mortgage, held by a church as security for a sum of money bequeathed to said church with a direction that the interest therefrom is to be used in the payment of the minister's salary, is exempt from taxation on the ground that the sum secured is an endowment of a religious society."

Perhaps no local disease has puzzled and baffled the medical profession more than nasal catarrh. While not immediately fatal it is among the most distressing and disgusting ills the flesh is heir to, and the records show very few or no cases of radical cure of chronic catarrh by any of the multitude of modes of treatment until the introduction of Ely's Cream Balm a few years ago. The success of this preparation has been most gratifying and surprising.

—Borough Clerk James K. Arnold has leased of Mr. Alex. Titsworth the large and airy new store corner of Somerset street and Craig place, and will remove his grocery business thereto the latter part of March.

—The first of a series of three lectures by Prof. John Fisk at [illegible] Hall, will take place on Saturday evening, March 15. Subject: "Samuel Hutchinson." The two other lectures will take place on March 22 and 29, respectively.

—A horse belonging to a gentleman named Manning of North Plainfield fell down in the harness on Park avenue, near Sixth street, on Thursday afternoon, and in doing so wrecked the shafts on the vehicle to which he was attached.

—Three boys were brought before the City Judge, Saturday, for interfering with Special Officer Babbitt in the discharge of his duty. One of them was fined two dollars, another paid a one dollar fine and the third was let off with a reprimand.

—Andrew Patterson pleaded guilty before Judge William [illegible] Codington on Monday, on charges of disorderly conduct and disturbing the peace. He was fined ten dollars, in default of the payment of which he will spend twenty days in the County Jail.

—Mr. John Vetterlein, the West Front street builder, has purchased the property adjoining Trinity Reformed church on Exchange alley. Mr. Vetterlein will erect thereon a handsome three-story brick building, which will be devoted to manufacturing purposes.

—The prayer meetings of the Young People's League of the First Baptist church held every Sunday evening at 6:30 are becoming very attractive and are largely attended by the members of the Sunday school. The subject last evening was, "Our Many Opportunities."

—Patrick Nevell, who has a wife and six children dependent upon the town for support, was before the City Judge on Monday, charged with disorderly conduct. Judge Codington adjourned the case over until the next morning, so as to investigate matters.

—An exchange very cleverly remarks: "All burglars are hereby notified not to pay us any nocturnal visits with the expectation of getting money. If they want our money they have to call on our delinquent subscribers, a list of whom will be furnished on application at this office."

—Mr. Chas. K. Moore, who took the county road contract of H. G. Wood, for Fanwood township, expects to have the work completed in a week or ten days. This will give a perfect road from Westfield to Plainfield, and will, doubtless, be the best piece of road under the county road system.

—This is the time of the year says an exchange when the farmer who does not take a newspaper because he cannot afford it, meets with two or three traveling confidence men, and gets cheated out of enough money to pay for a subscription to a weekly paper from nearly every State in the Union.

—Friday afternoon dense smoke was noticed issuing from the side of the house occupied by Dr. E. W. Borg, at the corner of Ninth and Sycamore streets, and it was thought the house was on fire. It was discovered, however, that the chimney leading from the fireplace in the back parlor, leaked between the bricks.

—Miss Hellwig, the talented young painter of [illegible], has removed with her family to 29 East Front street. Although very busy with orders from New York artists, she finds time to execute the commissions of the many Plainfield people who think of her art and want their photographs colored in oil.

—By securing additional room for the storage of the large stock of goods carried by E. W. [illegible] & Co., the grocers, at the corner of Emily and Duer streets, they have been able to fit up one of the most convenient offices. It is in the centre of their large store so that it may be approached from all sides, and is fitted up with telephone, cash register and all other necessary appurtenances.

—At the annual Teachers' Institute meeting, held at New Brunswick last December it was resolved to organize the teachers of Middlesex into three circles to pursue the course of reading laid out by the State Teachers' reading circle. The first meeting will be held in Franklin School building, Dunellen, on Saturday next, and among those who were expected to take part is Prof. Riley of Dunellen.

At Port Jervis, N. Y., on Tuesday evening, February 4, 1890, occurred the wedding of Mr. George H. Philpitt, formerly of this city and Miss Agnes Peck, of Port Jervis, N. Y. The bride, a very handsome young lady, looked most charming, attired in stone-colored faille silk, ornamented with Marechal roses. The Rev W. S. Galloway, pastor of the M. E. Church of that city, tied the nuptial knot.

The proceedings of the recent convention of the American Bankers' Association at Kansas City, just published in a volume of 100 pages, contains a most complete paper on "Possibilities of a National Clearing House," written by Mr. S. R. Struthers, of this city. Though not occupying much room the article is an exhaustive one; and the subject is not, strange to say, treated of as a theory only. It will undoubtedly attract the attention of every bank officer in the country.

Mr. Thomas Hale, Jr., of this city, who entered Trinity College at Hartford, last September, was called home by his father on account of ill health by the advice of his physician the latter part of November, and most of the time since he has been home under the doctor's care. He is now much better and has entered the University of the City of New York, carrying with him a certificate from the President of Trinity College, testifying to his good and honorable standing in that institution. By this arrangement he is enabled to board at home, going into the city in the morning and returning in the afternoon.

Mr. Edward Vail and family of No. 24 Washington street, removed to Newark on Tuesday.

Mr. John Harkins, the mainstay of the West End base ball club of Somerville, was in the city last evening. Harkins promises some fine work for next season.

Vice President Burnet, Captain Davis and Mr. Howard Emerson will represent the Crescent League of Plainfield, at the big tournament of the Union Athletic Club, in Boston, Saturday evening. They will, however, take no active part in any of the contests.

A HIGH SCHOOL CONCERT.

Something Enjoyable and With a Good Purpose.

On Tuesday evening, February 18, the scholars of the high school will give a concert consisting of solo and chorus singing, for the purpose of raising money for new singing books. The present books having been in use for more than ten years, friends and scholars are equally desirous of a change. As the board of education do not feel able to furnish the books, the pupils are trying to earn them for themselves. The concert of last year did not net a sufficient sum to obtain the number of copies desired, and so the scholars determined to try again and are working hard to make the coming concert a success.

Under the instruction of Mr. Hazell, the scholars have acquired a taste for a higher state of music, and are learning to read and render difficult selections. They have taken up with great interest and keen appreciation such music as "The Vesper Bells," Eichberg; "Sweet May," Barnby; "The Heavens are Telling." In addition, Mr. Elmer Runyon and Miss Alice Holmes, both former members of the school, have kindly consented to assist with solos and duetts, thus insuring a delightful evening.

The concert will be given in the High School Hall. Tickets, fifty cents. It is earnestly hoped that all the friends of the school will be present and encourage the pupils in the cultivation of a musical taste that renders such an organization as the Choral Society possible and successful in our midst.

The Probable Location of Plainfield's Water Supply.

The Water Works company's test wells driven just North of the railroad track, near the Netherwood station, have reached a supply of water that Mr. Moore claims is the very best that can be desired. A sample has been sent to New York for analysis.

One of the Best in the State.

The Committee of Trustees of the Crescent League, who have in charge the selection of next season's ball nine, state that they have already signed some remarkably fine and well-known players, and that Plainfield will have during the coming Summer the strongest team it ever had and one of the very best in the State.

A Chance for Plainfield to Get a Prize.

The Central Bowling League that has just been formed for a series of match games between teams of five men each, will include the Crescents and Olympics of this city, the Somersets of Somerville, and the Westfield and Fanwood clubs. Vice President Burnet of the Crescent League, is President. A schedule of games will be prepared in a few days.

That Chicken Case.

A warrant has been issued for the arrest of one Geo. Suydam on the charge of having stolen about 30 Wyandotte and Cochin chickens from John Long of Washington Valley, on Jan. 28. Two other men were concerned in the theft, but their names could not be ascertained. Suydam is the same man who was once tried at Somerville for having stolen Luther Martin's horse. The chickens are the ones alleged to have been sold to a butcher in this city.

Coal Thieving.

Complaint has frequently been made against certain persons who have been in the habit of stealing coal from the Central Railroad Company in this city, and Special Officer Hope was recently detailed to watch the coal cars standing on the siding near Richmond street. Tuesday, officer Hope discovered two women and three boys in the act of stealing coal, and he took their names. The names will be given to Detective Large of the Central Railroad, and some arrests are likely to follow.

A Remarkable Array of Talent.

Probably nothing of its kind in this city has equalled in combined talent the concert for the benefit of the building fund to be given in the new Chapel of the Crescent Avenue church, on Saturday, March 1, at 8 P. M. The artists who have volunteered for the occasion are:

Miss Jessamine Hallenbeck, Soprano; Miss Marion Simms, Contralto; Mr. Wm E. Courtney, Tenor; Signor Ricardo Ricci, Basso; the Misses Myers, Vocal Quartette; and Mr. A. Venino, Pianist.

Tickets may be obtained from Mrs. H. B. Newhall, Mrs. F. C. Foster, Mrs. E. L. Wals, Mrs. C. D. Wadsworth, Mrs. C. A. Hunter, and any member of the choir.

A Social Gathering.

About forty persons, young and old, enjoyed an evening of uninterrupted pleasure at the home of Mr. Samuel Smalley on Randolph Road, on Thursday evening last, the occasion being a sociable given by Mr. and Mrs. Randolph to their friends.

During the evening the guests were favored with some fine vocal and instrumental music by Mrs. Nathan Randolph, Mrs. Boston and Miss Minnie Smalley. The latter as an amateur pianist is certainly adept in her manipulations of the ivories. There were also vocal selections rendered by other members of the party, to the evident delight of all present. A bountiful collation was served during the evening.

Shakespearian Recitals Under Remarkable Patronage.

A private series of evening Shakespearian recitals are to be given at Reform Hall, by Mr. Hannibal A. Williams, of New York. They are said to be under the patronage of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Arens, Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Babcock, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Chapman, Mr. and Mrs. Rowland Cox, the Rev. and Mrs. Asa Reed Dilts, Mr. and Mrs. George P. Dupee, Mr. and Mrs. P. W. Field, Mr. and Mrs. George L. Goddard, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Lowe, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Matthews, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. W. McCutchen, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. McGee, the Rev and Mrs. Chas. B. Mitchell, the Rev. and Mrs. T. Logan Murphy, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Murray, Mr and Mrs. J. Kirt Myers, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Potter, Mr. and Mrs. L. V. F. Randolph, the Rev. and Mrs. Wm R. Richards, the Rev and Mrs. Erskine M. Rodman, Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Runkle, Mr and Mrs. I. W. Rushmore, Miss Emilie Schipper, Mr and Mrs. James T. Scott, the Rev. and Mrs J. P. Taylor, the Rev. and Mrs. W. P. Tilden, Dr. and Mrs T. H. Tomlinson, Col. and Mrs. Mason W. Tyler, Mr and Mrs. Aug. Van Deventer, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Wadsworth, the Rev. and Mrs. D. J. Yerkes, and a hundred others of the leading people of the city and borough.

—Milkman William Steel of Fanwood, was seriously injured by an upset at Scotch Plains, on Saturday. His horse became frightened at a stone crusher, and turning suddenly in the roadway, threw Mr. Steel out.

Struck by a Central Engine.

On Sunday night a team of mules belonging to a farmer who resides at White House station on the New Jersey Central Railroad, was struck by a locomotive at that place and both of the animals were killed. The driver was also badly injured.

W. C. T. U. Semi-Annual Convention.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Union county, Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson, President, will hold its semi-annual convention at Elizabeth on March 12. Mrs. Mary T. Lathrop of Michigan, is expected to address the mass meeting in the evening.

Bound Brook's New Enterprise.

For several days past Surveyor Garretson of Bound Brook has been making extensive surveys near the Central Railroad station, and it is given out that the work is done with a view to the building of an immense sugar refinery by Karl Spreckels. It is expected to employ 500 hands.

There's Nothing in It.

For some days past a story has been wandering around in the neighborhood papers to the effect that a company of Hollanders who are raising celery on a large scale in Michigan are thinking of buying up the swamp lands along the Passaic and Raritan for celery culture. There is nothing whatever in the story.

Broke His Neck.

It is reported that a man named John Doodleoocks, employed by a milkman at Metuchen, fell from the hay mow, early Sunday morning, and broke his neck. The man got up about four o'clock and went out to attend to the stock. He went into the mow, and was throwing down hay, when he slipped and fell through the shute to the floor below, breaking his neck.

Young People's Sociable.

The Young People's League of the First Baptist church will hold a sociable in the lecture room next Thursday evening, February 13. Among the attractions there will be on exhibition is a large number of amateur photographs, and a flash light will be taken of the audience sometime during the evening. All the young people of the church and Sunday school are cordially invited to be present.

The Street Railway Problem.

The Committee of the Council on street railway matters, was to have held a meeting on Saturday evening, but owing to the inclemency of the weather the meeting was adjourned indefinitely.

Members of the committee state that in their opinion, this city will be equipped with efficient street railway service during the present year, but whether or not electric or animal power will be employed, they are not at liberty to state.

He Had a Narrow Escape.

Mr. William M. Springmann, the North Plainfield barber, had a narrow escape from serious injury Sunday night. He was passing along Park avenue, on his way home from the railroad station, and when in front of the Chautauqua building, he stumbled over a stepping stone, falling heavily on the sidewalk. Officer Giesse assisted the injured man to his feet, and the latter complained of severe pains in his back and limbs. He was, however, able to walk home.

A Different Kind of Veteran.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—In Sunday's edition of the New York Tribune, I saw an article calling attention to the fight for the Street Commissionership, in which it says that the two aspirants are old veterans. We all know that Captain Hand is a veteran who served with distinction in the late war, but I fail to find that his opponent served during the war. The Tribune says: "Two old veterans, Hand and Angleman." I guess they mean that Angleman is a veteran office-holder. G. A. R.

Westfield Men Engage in a Shoot.

A shooting match took place at Westfield Saturday for a purse of $50. The contestants were Charles F. Courtney and C. P. Wilcox, both of Westfield. The referee was John Dwyer. Each man fired at 25 glass balls, the conditions being 18 yards rise. Wilcox broke 18 balls straight and won the match, smashing 22 out of 25. Courtney broke 21 out of 25, and immediately challenged the winner to shoot for double the amount, each man to have the privilege of using his own gun. The challenge is to be kept open a week.

Expect to Occupy the Church Next Sunday.

The congregation of the First Baptist church expect to occupy the auditorium of the same next Sunday after its being closed about four or five months. The interior of the church has been entirely remodeled, and presents an attractive appearance. Among the attractions will be the singing of the chorus choir composed of the members of the church under the leadership of Mr. Chas. W. McCutchen. They have also placed in the church a new organ which cost about $5,000, which will be another feature of the opening services.

The Rev. Mr. Goodrich at Reform Hall.

In Reform Hall Sunday the Rev. C. L. Goodrich delivered a sermon replete with interest and instruction, and which was listened to with wrapped attention by a good sized audience. His remarks had special reference to the bad effects of evil thoughts, habits and associations, to conquer which required determined action. After espousing the blessings resulting from an opposite course, right living and doing, with great eloquence and power he pointed out the pathway to final victory. As an appreciation of the excellence of Mr. Goodrich's discourse, on motion of Doctor Burnett, a rising vote of thanks was tendered him.

President Harper presided, the Rev. Mr Goodrich read the scripture lesson and offered prayer, and the Reform club choir, under the leadership of Mr. King, with Miss Alice Smith as organist, conducted the musical programme in their usual acceptable manner. With the benediction the interesting meeting closed.

A Remarkably Fine Selection.

The committee having in charge the arrangements of the programme for the concert to be held in the Crescent Avenue chapel on Saturday evening, March 1, have been remarkably fortunate in being able to secure a date on which all the artists who have so kindly volunteered their services would be disengaged. The Misses Myers of Poughkeepsie, will require no introduction to many who have had the pleasure of listening to their beautifully blended voices. Mr. A. Venino is even more widely known by reputation, though many have not had the opportunity of hearing his artistic rendition upon the piano of the works of great composers. Miss Jessamine Hallenbeck is well-known on the New York concert stage, and is also the Soprano of the Church of the Holy Spirit, Madison avenue, New York. Miss Marion Simms is not so often heard in concert, but she has occupied for several years the position of Contralto in the Madison Avenue Methodist church New York city. Mr. Wm. E. Courtney, tenor, is the well-known teacher of that name, and he has both pupils and friends in this city; Signor Ricardo Ricci, Basso, occupied a prominent position in the American Opera company.

Tickets for this concert are one dollar each, and they may be obtained from Mrs. H. B. Newhall, Mrs. C. D. Wadsworth, Mrs. J. G. Foster, Mrs. Jos. M. Myers, Mrs. C. A. Hunter, or from any member of the choir of the church, and at Reynolds' pharmacy.

ON WHAT IS JOHN'S EYE FIXED?

A Well Known Plainfielder Turns Up On His Old Tramping Grounds, With a Mission Enveloped in Mystery.

THE PRESS learns that Mr. John J. Enright, so long a resident of this city, and to whom for a considerable time the "Man About Town" paragraphs in the New York Star have been credited, has been covering his old-time tramping grounds in Detroit for several weeks past, and the purpose of his presence has been a popular conundrum.

His mission has been enveloped in mystery at least a foot thick and impenetrable. The lack of information as to his intentions has given rise to all sorts of conjectures. The fact that he possesses a hand of the sleekest Italian type, when it is turned to political manipulation, first provoked the explanation that he had come at the behest of ex-Postmaster General Dickinson, to promote a proposed organization of the local Democracy a la Tammany.

Dame Rumor has also named him as one of a syndicate of gentlemen of the Democratic faith who propose to buy or establish an afternoon daily paper, which should be aggressive in its championship of St. Jackson's political code. The latest conjecture is that Mr. Enright has his eye fixed on the shrievalty, an election for which is but a little distance in the future. Of one thing, those who know him are certain, and it is that at the right time he will prove he has not been away from the metropolis for nothing.

ABSENT CITIZENS HEARD FROM.

Dr. Field and Frank Searles Dined and Feted by the King of the Sandwich Islands.

(From the Herald of Florence, Kansas.)

Frank R. Searles, son of Mrs. E. M. Butler, accompanied by Dr. C. M. Field, arrived in our city last Saturday morning. These gentlemen have just completed a six months tour through New Zealand, Australia, Samoa, Tasmania, Sandwich Islands and other foreign countries.

While in Australia they received the highest honors and attention by the magnates of that country. On the Sandwich Islands they were dined and feted by the King. Mr. Searles will visit his mother for several months, and prepare for his graduation from the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York, this Spring.

Dr. Field is a noted M. D. in the East, and has performed some of the most difficult operations on record. While in Australia he performed one extremely difficult and delicate operation successfully, which called forth the highest praise and commendation from the medical fraternity.

Dr Field, finding this climate rather cold for him, left for Florida last Monday.

SEVEN TEAMS IN THE CENTRAL LEAGUE.

Elizabeth Enters and Lessens Westfield's Chances, but Plainfield is Sure of a Prize.

The Elizabeth Athletic Club has reconsidered its previous decision, and at the urgent solicitation of President Burnet will enter a team in the Central Bowling League tournament.

This won't suit the Westfield and Somerville teams who are afraid of the Elizabeths; but Mr. Burnet has so much faith in the ability of the Plainfield Crescent League team to take first place, he doesn't care who are in the fight for the second and third prizes.

The League now consists of seven clubs—the Crescents of Plainfield, the Olympics of Plainfield, Mondays and Nameless of Westfield, Somersets of Somerville, and the Fanwood and Elizabeth clubs. The tournament will consist of 36 games, and the schedule will be given in THE PRESS as soon as arranged.

VANSYCKEL AND SCUDDER.

Both Reappointed to the Supreme Court Bench, and Unanimously Confirmed.

Governor Abbett sent to the Senate Tuesday afternoon his first sealed communication this session. It contained the names of Bennet VanSyckle and Edward W Scudder, whom the Governor nominated for new terms on the Supreme Court bench. They were first appointed in 1869.

The Senate went into executive session soon afterwards and gave the two judges the honor of unanimous confirmation. Thus ends the speculation as to the disposition of two important offices, which has for months occupied the attention of politicians. Judge Scudder's reappointment was assured, but there was doubt as to whether Judge VanSyckel would succeed himself, as ex-Governor Green had the refusal of the office for himself. The unanimous desire of the press and the people, however, has been acceded to by Governor Abbett in the reappointment of Judge VanSyckel.

END OF THE PLAINFIELD CHESS CLUB.

New Brunswick Players Will Follow This City's Players' Example.

The annual tournament of the New Jersey State Chess Association held on the 22d inst., (Washington's Birthday), will take place this year at New Brunswick. The citizens of that place, in imitation of the good example set by Plainfield last year, offer a special prize, on terms to be announced at time of meeting.

Plainfield players who wish to go, are informed that the business meeting is at 9 o'clock. Playing in the tournament will commence about an hour later. Those who can are requested to bring their own boards and men. The club of this city is going to dispose of its property on the evening of the 18th, and cease to exist.

That Government Contract.

The Elizabeth Journal Monday, in speaking of the big contract which the Pond Machine Tool company of this city has entered into with the Government, says editorially:

"Plainfield is to have a big contract too. The Pond Tool Works are to build a lot of tools for the war department. Between Elizabeth and Plainfield; S. L. Moore & Sons Co. in the former and the Pond Tool Co. in the latter; Uncle Sam can have the best kind of work done at the most reasonable prices. It is a great pity he didn't look this way before. New Jersey isn't large, but sometimes the biggest trout are caught in the smallest streams."

Becoming an Every Day Occurrence.

A cock-fight which terminated in a row took place in a barn at the Flats, near Westfield, between Scotch Plains and Westfield birds, at an early hour Sunday morning. The sports from both places were out with plenty of money. The main was to consist of five battles. The first fight was between a dark red, weight 4 pounds 5 ounces, which the Scotch Plains contingent pitted against a blue pyle from Westfield, weight 4 pounds 6 ounces. The Westfield bird had his opponent whipped, when the Scotch Plains men claimed a foul, alleging that the handler, who was from Westfield, had squeezed the bird so that he was crippled before the fight. The betting had been 5 to 1 on the dark red. A general melee ensued. A boss carpenter from Westfield was slugged by Scotch Plains men. The other four battles were not fought, the crowd scattering to avoid arrest.

A beautiful young lady became so sadly disfigured with pimples and blotches that it was feared she would die of grief. A friend recommended Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which she took, and was completely cured. She is now one of the fairest of the fair.

DOCKWATCH HOLLOW.

A Tale of Olden Times in Plainfield's Vicinity—A Glen in Washington Valley Where the Sun Seldom Shines—It is the Grave of a Good Man.

Sometime ago a correspondent inquired through THE PRESS, why a point in Washington Valley, about seven miles back of Plainfield, was called "Dockwatch Hollow." A reporter assigned for the purpose has gleaned the following story:

About the middle of the last century, a sturdy Hollander by the name of Dockwatch, came to this country. Being a man in the prime of life, he hoped to found a home in this, then sparsely settled part of New Jersey, which was then only a colony. Having considerable money, he bought a large tract of land in which was included a portion of the Wachung mountains, between two spurs of which is situated the famous hollow or glen.

So high and abrupt are the sides of this canon, that it is only on the long Summer days that the sun shines into the narrow gorge, and then only for a short time about midday. Ice is often found therein in Summer.

Here Dockwatch built a house on what was once the site of the old Indian village of Mohegian—broken peices of pottery and numbers of arrow heads being frequently discovered every year since. Sheltered on the North by the mountains, Dockwatch was well protected from the rigors of Winter winds. Along the stream that flows through the hollow and empties in the Raritan river, he built a grist mill as well as a distillery—traces of which can be seen from the main road. Everything then was known as Dockwatch's. It was his mill that ground the yeoman's wheat for their families, and his still that turned the surplus corn into whiskey. Politicians did not then pretend to worry about "protection" for the farmer and his sons. Being all settled and prosperous, Dockwatch sent to Holland for his wife and child, but the ship on which they took passage was never heard from.

On that spot, so few miles from this thriving city, the honest sons of toil exchanged their views in the troublous days of the colonies, untrammelled by fear. There a spirit of independence was promulgated, and a well-known Tory, who was caught listning to their sentiments, was given a "ride on a rail." Here a company was raised to the support of the young Republic, with its noble leader after whom the valley is named. There the patriot soldiers and their officers ever found a welcome when they came to recruit; but their number grew smaller, until but a dozen of them returned to their homes at the close of hostilities. Thus did this section supply her quota to the cause of liberty.

Dockwatch, ever a friend and sympathizer in the struggle for freedom, willingly gave of his means and influence to the cause of which he was not to be a partaker. Just before the close of the struggle, he was taken ill of a fever and died. Back in the shade of the hollow under some giant oaks, they laid all that was mortal of the old miller. After the sad and simple rites were over, his affects were taken charge of by the county and no heirs have presented any claim.

Merely by his name is the memory of this man forever honored, while marble crumbles to decay. His goodness of heart is daily told of to the children around the open fire-place, and to his grave—which is known far and wide as Dockwatch Hollow—scores of tourists make a Summer pilgrimage.

Committed to the County Jail.

Andrew Batterson, the man who pleaded guilty to a charge of disorderly conduct on Monday, was Tuesday committed to the County Jail for twenty days by Judge Codington, in default of payment of a ten dollar fine imposed.

Friendly Sons of St. Patrick.

A meeting of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick was held in St. Mary's T. A. B. Hall, on Tuesday, with Mr. Andrew E. Kenney in the chair. The matter of holding a banquet on St. Patrick's Day was talked over, and a number of new applications for membership were received.

Wrecked at the Central Station.

A State Prison Offence.

During Tuesday some miscreant threw a lighted match and a wad of paper into the letter box at the corner of Broadway and Ninth street, thereby nearly destroying two letters. The act is a State Prison offence, and if the offender is caught he will doubtless spend a long term there. The authorities have been notified and an effort will be made to capture the criminal.

Patronize the Bazaar.

Commuters and others on their way home from New York, to-morrow evening, and all those persons who want to patronize a charitable undertaking, would do well to stop in at the Bazaar in the Chautauqua building and obtain an appetizing meal at reasonable rates. The bill of fare will include cold turkey, chicken and ham, salads, pickled oysters, home-made pies, cakes and candies, iced cream, tea, coffee, lemonade, etc.

Death of a Leading Rahway Physician.

Dr. Israel Lukens, a widely known homoeopathic physician, died at Rahway, N. J., Sunday morning, of ulcer of the stomach, from which he had suffered for three months. Dr. Lukens, although in his eightieth year, attended regularly to his large practice until his last illness began. His treatment of cancers gave him a wide reputation. The funeral services were held at his late home, Main street, Rahway, this afternoon, and to-morrow the body will be taken to Upper Dublin, Montgomery county, Pa., for interment.

Ice In Any Event.

Should the weather fail to produce ice there are several men in this city ready to organize themselves into a company and procure an ice freezing machine, that will produce from 20 to 30 tons of ice per day, at a cost of about $8 per ton or 40 cents per hundred retail. The enterprise will cost about $25,000.

Some of the hotel proprietors in this city are also talking of putting in ice freezing machines, but the enterprise is costly, and it is more than likely that if such a thing is undertaken, it will be by a stock concern.

LAWS THAT CONCERN YOU.

The Important Bills That Have Been Introduced in the Legislature This Week.

By Senator Martin. Provides that where freeholders receive an annual salary it shall be for all services rendered.

By Senator McDonald. Amends the Mechanics' lien act, so that in all cases workmen or laborers, working for daily wages, shall have preference over employers of labor, sub-contractors, etc., without reference to date when such laborers shall have filed their lien.

By Assemblyman Mullone. Makes it unlawful to levy any impost, tax or assessment for sewers in cities, but such moneys must be appropriated from the general fund.

By Assemblyman Mullone. Provides that honorably discharged soldiers and sailors shall not be removed from any office in any city or county, unless for cause shown upon a hearing.

By Assemblyman Campbell. Authorizes borough governments to pave and improve streets, and provides for the payment thereof.

By Assemblyman Marsh (for the Judiciary Committee.) Provides for the creation of a board of registration and examination in dentistry. The board is to be composed of five resident and practicing dentists of the State. The present members of the board of examiners to hold until the first Tuesday in October next, when members of the new board will come in power. The State Dental Society shall recommend the five members of the board and the Governor shall appoint them. The term shall be five years, and shall be so provided that of the new members a term shall expire every year so that a vacancy will occur every year for five years. The appointee thereto to fill such vacancy being for a full term of five years. This board shall have full power to examine and license those who wish to practice dentistry, and no one can practice such profession without a license from the board. Power is given to force its provisions by penalty.

By Senator Cranmer. An act regulating peddlers, requiring them to be licensed, licenses to be issued to only citizens of the United States and who have been at least one year resident of the country; $500 bonds required; annual fee for foot peddling, $50; with one horse, $100; with two or more horses, $150. The penalty for violation is $500 fine, one year's imprisonment, or both.

WALT WHITMAN is the most picturesque character in American literature to-day. His splendid wealth of white hair is a fitting frame for a face of majestic beauty. His magnificent figure is not yet bowed down with the weight of seventy winters. In his youth he described himself as a "rough," and he was in the habit of associating with stage-drivers, and he sometimes handled the reins and drove down Broadway, dressed in outrageous style. But of late years he has settled down into a decorous and most respectable character as the "good gray poet."

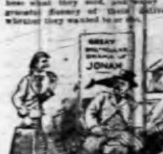
JONAH IN A TANK.

How the Biblical Story Was Adapted to the Uses of the Drama.

[illegible] Water and a [illegible] Tank—How the Whale-Carried [illegible] Part of the Programme [illegible]

I sat in an up-town chop-house after the theatre, last Wednesday night, rubbing my modest lunch of [illegible] and [illegible] simple fare, and wondering whether, as a poor [illegible], I could afford pie, when two gentlemen took the table next me, and at once began to talk in so entertaining a manner that the problem of pastry went [illegible] out of my mind. I perceived at once that the gentlemen were actors. This was apparent from a certain generosity in the style of their talk—an openhanded willingness that other people should hear what they said, and enjoy the greatest fluency of their delivery, whether they wanted to or not.



GREAT [illegible] DRAMA OF JONAH

JONAH'S ENGAGEMENT.

"Have you heard the latest from old Monty?" said one.

"Monty?"

"Yes, Montmorency, the old, perennially busted 'heavy' who has played up and down the free lunch circuit for the last ten years, and nowhere else that I ever heard of. I used to meet him regularly whenever I was in New York, and lend him a five dollar note or some trifle of that kind just to help the old fellow along. Well, I was simply thunderstruck, the other day, when I heard that the old fellow had caught on."

"Got an engagement?"

"Yes, it happened this way. Billings—you know him, the original tank drama manager in this country—well Billings was running his new realistic spectacular scriptural show, called 'Jonah,' founded on the Bible story, of course. He had a big tank of real water, and a ship, and a stuffed whale with machinery inside of him so that he could swim, and wag his tail around, and swallow things, just as in life. He had written up the part of 'Jonah' as a good, melodramatic character, in hard luck for four tough acts, but coming up smiling in the fifth. Jonah in the play is the persecuted hero, who is thrown overboard at the instigation of the villain; but he finds the missing will and other valuable documents inside the whale and turns up with them in time to marry the girl and live happily on her income."

"Good plot, by Jove. Ought to be a go. Sunday-school theatre parties, moral lessons, and all that sort of thing."

"Looks all right, don't it? But the trouble was that Billings kept losing his Jonahs. There was a good deal of swimming in the part and the whale was damp inside, so that, what with pneumonia, influenza and the use of quinine, most of Billings' Jonahs wound up by playing an engagement of one [illegible] before a coroner and a jury of twelve. So Billings came to town to hunt up a man with a cast-iron constitution. He dropped into Biggs' agency. Old Monty happened to be there.

"'Biggs,' said Billings, 'I'm looking for a good Jonah.'

"'Why don't you take old Montmorency?' said Biggs. 'He's been made up in the part for the last twenty years.'

"'Old man Biggs,' said Monty, brushing up, 'you've told the truth for the first time in your professional career.'

"Then he sailed up on Billings. 'Sir,' said he, 'I understand that your aim is realism; and the hour has come when you can secure it. Jonah himself was not more truly the victim of fate than I am. I have struggled against it all my life and it has left a stamp upon my brow which an audience would be quick to appreciate. Ah, who can struggle against fate? Energy and ability are all very well in their way, but they do not beat fate [illegible]. When fate starts in with the determination to buy out the [illegible] of a man's pantaloons, that settles it. They are fagged. I have walked home from nearly every part of this country and Australia. But, sir, I am an artist above everything, and I have learned the lessons which hard luck can teach. There will be more realism in my portrayal of this famous old Testament [illegible] than in any amount of real water in a tank. I have [illegible] everything in my time, sir, from a church fair to a [illegible] band.'

JONAH'S GREAT PERIL.

"Billings looked at him, and thought of what he had been through, and he said to himself [illegible]

"Billings was all the time trying to think it up, and he would come to Monty with suggestions.

"'Jonah,' he said one day, 'what do you think of engaging a real whale? I've got an offer of one, and the man who owns him says that he can be trained to do the part to perfection. Now that's realism for you. Don't [illegible] it, eh? Well, now, that's funny. I thought it would please you. Naturally, of course, we'll let him swallow a dummy for a day or two till he gets used to it.'

"But Jonah wouldn't have it and he and Billings were in trouble from that day forth. Jonah kept kicking about the water in the tank. [illegible]

"But Billings wouldn't see it. He was down on Jonah, and used to make him rehearse with the sailors every morning. He said that they must learn to make more splash with him, so he threw Jonah [illegible] a day; they tried him feet first, head first, and every other way. Then he experimented with the whale.

"'I want to improve his internal machinery,' said Billings, [illegible] Jonah,' he said. 'The audiences [illegible] haven't paid much attention to the play, and out here in the West they're a little weak on scripture; so that when the whale [illegible] up they are naturally curious to know what he's been eating that should make him feel that way.'

Then when they see Jonah they say, 'this ain't realism: that whale ought to have been a darned sight slicker.' We want try to bring this thing up to an artistic standard.'

"One day out in Cheyenne, when the receipts weren't big enough to pay the whale's board, Billings got desperate. He told Jonah that the play was too sombre in tone—needed something to liven it up—and he suggested that they should introduce a dead mule after the storm scene and let Jonah come out upon the roof of the whale and do a song and dance. They tried this trick for one night, but it didn't work, and at the next town the sheriff levied on the company's effects. He put on his attachment right in the middle of the storm, just after the whale had closed his little arrangement with Jonah.

THE ESCAPE OF JONAH.

"Old Monty heard what was going on, and he just lay still and said nothing. He knew that Billings would skip out, and leave the company to find its way back to New York along the track. The ghost hadn't walked for two or three weeks and Jonah was broke, so it occurred to him that he would wait till he found out which way they were going to ship that whale before he made his presence known. It turned out just right for Monty. The whale was sold at auction next day to the representative of a New York museum, and Monty and the whale were put aboard a freight car, tagged for the Bowery.

"'The prophecy of the Scripture is fulfilled,' said Monty, 'and the whale takes Jonah back to the dry land again.'

"Well, the whale was finally landed in New York, hauled to the dime museum and dumped into the tank, and by and by Jonah heard them letting the water in. Then the dime museum lecturer began to tell the audience how the whale had been captured near the place where the latest investigations indicated that the Jonah incident had occurred. He said that the marks on the whale's teeth showed that his age was about right to fit the story.

"'How wonderful it would be,' he continued, 'if this should be the same whale, and if within his interior he should still contain relics of the illustrious dead—things out of his pocket or his hat, perhaps, or a pint flask!'

"Then he pried the whale's mouth open and out walked Jonah. It was the hit of his life, and, sir, by Jove, to make a long story short, he was engaged at a good salary to do the act every hour at the museum, and he's making a great success. Take it for all in all, I think this is as remarkable an illustration of the vicissitudes of our honorable profession as ever came to my notice."

I turned and looked at the actor when he finished his story, and the truthful gleam in his eye justified me in giving his narrative to the public. It is doubtless as near the truth as any story I could tell myself.

TALMAGE HOME AGAIN.

HE RESUMES PREACHING IN BROOKLYN AFTER HIS FOREIGN TRIP.

A Powerful Sermon Drawn from the Great Bible Drama of the House on the Wall—We Must Go to God for Salvation.

BROOKLYN, Feb. 9.—The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., resumed preaching in Brooklyn this morning, after his visit to the Holy Land, and the Academy of Music was crowded. Thousands of people were not able to get into the building. The subject of his discourse was "The House on the Wall." Dr. Talmage took for his text Joshua vi, 23: "And the young men that were spies went in and brought out Rahab, and her father, and her mother, and her brethren, and all that she had." He said:

When, only a few weeks ago, I visited Jericho, I said, can it be possible that this dilapidated place is the Jericho that Mark Antony gave as a wedding present to Cleopatra? Where are the groves of palm trees? Where are Herod's palaces which once stood here? Where is the great theatre from the stage of which Salome told the people that Herod was dead? Where is the sycamore tree on the limb of which Zaccheus sat when Jesus passed this place? Where is the wreck of the walls that fell at the blowing of the rams' horns? But the fact that all these have disappeared did not hinder me from seeing in imagination the scenes of everything on the fated day, and one house on the wall. That scene of ages ago comes back to me as though it were yesterday.

A SAD SCENE.

There is a very sick and sad house in the city of Jericho. What is the matter? Is it poverty? No. Worse than that. Is it leprosy? No. Worse than that. Is it death? No. Worse than that. A daughter has forsaken her home. By what infernal plot she was induced to leave I know not; but they look in vain for her return. Sometimes they hear a footstep very much like hers, and they start up and say: "She comes!" but only to sink back again into discouragement. Alas! Alas! The father sits by the hour, with his face in his hands, saying not one word. The mother's hair is becoming gray too fast, and she begins to stoop as those who only a little while ago [illegible] of those two spies. First, Rahab—for that was the name of the lost child—first, Rahab secretes the two spies and gets their pursuers off the track; but after awhile she says to them: "I will make a bargain with you. I will save your life if you will save my life, and the life of my father and my mother, and my brothers, and my sisters, when the victorious army comes upon the city." O, she had not forgotten her home yet, you see. The wanderer never forgets home. Her heart breaks now as she thinks of how she has maltreated her parents, and she wishes she were back with them again, and she wishes she could get away from her sinful enthrallment; and sometimes she looks up in the face of the midnight, bursting into agonizing tears. No sooner have these two spies promised to save her life, and the life of her father, and mother, and brothers, and sisters, than Rahab takes a scarlet cord and ties it around the body of one of the spies, brings him to the window, and as he clambers out—nervous lest she have not strength to hold him—with muscular arms such as woman seldom has, she lets him down, hand over hand, in safety to the ground. Not being exhausted, she ties the cord around the other spy, brings him to the window, and just as successfully lets him down to the ground. No sooner have these men untied the scarlet cord from their bodies than they look up, and they say: "You had better get all your friends in this house—your father, your mother, your brothers and your sisters; you had better get them in this house. And then, after you have them here, take this red cord which you have put around our bodies and tie it across the window; and when our victorious army comes up, and sees that scarlet thread in the window, they will spare this house and all who are in it. Shall it be so?" cried the spies. "Aye, aye," said Rahab, from the window, "it shall be so." That is the second scene in this Bible drama. There is a knock at the door of the old man. He looks up and says: "Come in," and lo! there is Rahab, the lost child; but she has no time to talk. They gather in excitement around her, and she says to them: "Get ready quickly, and go with me to my house. The army is coming! The trumpet! Make haste! Fly! The enemy!" That is the third scene in this Bible drama. The hosts of Israel are all around about the doomed city of Jericho. Crash! goes the great metropolis, heaps on heaps. The air suffocating with the dust, and horrible with the screams of a dying city. All the houses flat down. All the people dead. Ah no, no. On a crag of the wall—the only piece of the wall left standing—there is a house which we must enter. There is a family there that have been spared. Who are they? Let us go and see. Rahab, her father, her mother, her brothers, her sisters, all safe, and the only house left standing in all the city. What saved them? Was the house more firmly built? O, no; it was built in the most perilous place—on the wall; and the wall was the first thing that fell. Was it because her character was any better than any of the other population of the city? O, no. Why, then, was she spared and all her household? Can you tell me why? O, it was the scarlet line in the window. That is the fourth scene in this Bible drama. When the destroying angel went through Egypt it was the blood of the lamb on the door posts that saved the Israelites; and now that vengeance has come upon Jericho it is the same color that assures the safety of Rahab and all her household. My friends, there are foes coming upon us, more deadly and more tremendous, to overthrow our immortal interests. They will trample us down and crush us out forever, unless there be some skillful mode of rescue upon. The police of death already begin to clamor for our surrender, but, blessed be God, there is a way out. It is through the window, and by a rope so saturated with the blood of the cross that it is as red as that with which the spies were lowered; and if once our souls shall be delivered, then, the scarlet cord stretched across the window of our escape, we may defy all bombardment, earthly and Satanic.

In the first place, carrying out the idea of my text, we must stretch this scarlet cord across the window of our rescue. There comes a time when a man is surrounded. What is that in the front door of his soul? It is the threatenings of the future. What is that in the back door of the soul? It is the sins of the past. He cannot get out of either of those doorways. If he attempts it he will be cut to pieces. What shall he do? Escape through the window of God's mercy. That sunshine has been pouring in for many a day. God's inviting mercy. God's pardoning mercy. God's all conquering mercy. God's everlasting mercy. But you say the window is so high. Ah, there is a rope, the very one with which the cross and its victim were lifted. That was strong enough to hold Christ, and it is strong enough to hold you. Bear all your weight upon it, all your hopes for this life, all your hopes for the life that is to come. Escape now through the window.

"But," you say, "that cord is too small to save me; that salvation will never do at all for such a sinner as I have been." I suppose that the rope with which Rahab let the two spies to the ground was not thick enough; but they took that or nothing. And, my dear brother, that is your alternative. There is only one scarlet line that can save you. There have been hundreds and thousands who have been borne away in safety by that scarlet line, and it will bear you away in safety. Do you notice what a very narrow escape those spies had? I suppose they came with flushed cheek and with excited heart. They had a very narrow escape. They went in the broad door of sin; but how did they come out? They came out of the window. They went up by the stairs of stone; they came down on a slender thread. And so, my friends, we go easily and unalloyedly into sin, and all the doors are open; but if we get out at all it will be by being let down over precipices, wriggling and helpless, the strong grip above keeping us from being dashed on the rocks beneath. It is easy to get into sin, young man. It is not so easy to get out of it.

THE FIRST STEP.

A young man goes to the marble counter of a hotel. He asks for a brandy smash—called so, I suppose, because it smashes the man that takes it. There is no intoxication in it. As the young man receives it he does not seem to be at all excited. It does not give any glassiness to the eye. He walks home in beautiful apparel, and all his prospects are brilliant. That drink is not going to destroy him, but it is the first step on a bad road. Years have passed on, and I see that young man after he has gone the whole length of dissipation. It is midnight, and he is in a hotel—perhaps the very one where he took the first drink. A delirium is on him. He rises from the bed and comes to the window, and it is easily lifted; so he sits it. Then he pushes back the blinds and puts his foot on the window sill. Then he gives one spring, and the watchman finds his disfigured body unrecognizable, on the pavement. O, if he had only waited a little—if he had come down on the scarlet ladder that Jesus holds from the wall for him, and for you, and for me; but no, he made one jump, and was gone. A minister of Christ was not long ago dismissed from his diocese for intoxication, and in a public meeting he gave this account of his sorrow. He said: "I had a beautiful home once; but strong drink shattered it. I had beautiful children; but this fiend of rum took their dimpled hands in his and led them to the grave. I had a wife—to know her was to love her; but she sits in wretchedness tonight, while I wander over the earth. I had a mother, and the pride of her life was I, but the thunderbolt struck her. I now have scarcely a friend in the world. Taste of the bitter cup I have tasted, and then answer me as to whether I have any hatred for the agency of my ruin. Hate it! I hate the whole damning traffic. I would to God tonight that every distillery was in flames, for then in the glowing sky I would write in the smoke of the ruin: 'Woe to him that putteth the bottle to his neighbor's lips!'" That minister of the Gospel went in through the broad door of temptation; he came out of the window. And when I see the temptations that are about us in all countries, and when I know the proclivities to sin in every man's heart, I see that if any of us escape it will be a very narrow escape. O, if we have, my friends, got off from our sin, let us tie the scarlet thread by which we have been saved across the window. Let us do it in praise of him whose blood dyed it this color. Let it be in announcement of the fact that we shall no more be fatally assailed. "There is now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus." Then let all the forces of this world come up in cavalry charge, and let spirits of darkness come on—an infernal storming party attempting to take our soul—this rope twisted from these words, "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin," will hurl them back defeated forever.

PROTECT YOUR HOUSEHOLD.

Still further, we want to take this red cord of the text and stretch it across the window of our households. When the Israelitish army came up against Jericho, they said: "What is that in the window?" Some one said: "That is a scarlet line." "Oh," said someone else, "that must be the house that was to be spared. Don't touch it." That [illegible] enough to save Rahab, her father, her mother, her brothers and her sisters—the entire family. Have our households as good protection? You have locks on the front door and on the back, and fastenings to the window, and perhaps burglar alarms, [illegible] for a man to reject Christ; but to lie down in the night of sin, across the path to heaven, so that his family come up and trip over him—that is terrible. It is a sad thing for a mother to reject Christ; but to gather her family around her, and then take them by the hand and lead them out into paths of worldliness, away from God and heaven, alas! alas! There may be geraniums and canaries in that family window, and upholstery hovering over it, and children's faces looking out of it, but there is no scarlet thread stretched across it. Although that house may seem to be on the best street in all the town or city, it is really on the edge of a marsh, across which sweep most poisonous malarias, and it has a sandy foundation, and its splendor will come down, and great will be the fall of it. A house without God! A prayerless father! An unshriven mother! Awful! awful! Is that you? Will you keep on, my brother, on the wrong road, and take your loved ones with you? Time is so short that we cannot waste any of it on apologies, or indirections, or circumlocutions. You owe to your children, O father, O mother, more than food, more than clothing, more than shelter—you owe them the example of a prayerful, consecrated, pronounced, out and out Christian life. You cannot afford to keep it away from them.

Now, as I stand here, you do not see any hands outstretched towards me, and yet there are hands on my brow and hands on both my shoulders. They are hands of parental benediction. It is quite a good many years ago now since we folded those hands as they began the last sleep on the banks of the Raritan, in the village cemetery; but those hands are stretched out towards me today, and they are just as warm and they are just as gentle as when I sat on their knees at five years of age. And I shall never shake off those hands. I do not want to. They have helped me so much a thousand times already, and I do not expect to have a trouble or a trial between this and my grave where those hands will not help me. It was not a very splendid home, as the world calls it; but we had a family Bible there, well worn by tender perusal; and there was a family altar there, where we knelt morning and night; and there was a holy Sabbath there; and stretched in a straight line or hung in loops or festoons there was a scarlet line in the window. O, the tender, precious, blessed memory of a Christian home! Is that the impression you are making upon your children? When you are dead—and it will not be long before you are—when you are dead, will your child say: "If there ever was a good Christian father, mine was one. If there ever was a good Christian mother, mine was one?"

Still further: We want this scarlet line of the text drawn across the window of our prospects. I see Rahab and her father, and her mother, and her brothers and sisters looking out over Jericho, the city of palm trees, and across the river, and over at the army invading, and then up to the mountains and the sky. Mind you, this house was on the wall, and I suppose the prospect from the window must have been very wide. Besides that, I do not think that the scarlet line at all interfered with the view of the landscape. The assurance it gave of safety must have added to the beauty of the country. Today, my friends, we sit in the window of earthly prospects, and we look off towards the hills of heaven and the landscape of eternal beauty. God has opened the window for us, and we look out. We now only get a dim outline of the inhabitants. We now only here and there catch a note of the exquisite harmony.

THE SCARLET LINE AT THE WINDOW.

But blessed be God for this scarlet line in the window. That tells me that the blood of Christ bought that home for my soul, and I shall go there when my work is done. And as I put my hand on that scarlet line, everything in the future brightens. My eyesight gets better, and the robes of the victors are more lustrous, and our loved ones who went away some time ago—they do not stand any more with their backs to us, but their faces are this way and their voices drop through this Sabbath air, saying with all tenderness and sweetness, "Come! Come! Come!" And the child that you think of only as buried—why, there she is, and it is May day in heaven; and they gather the amaranth, and they pluck the lilies, and they twist them into a garland for her brow, and she is one of the May queens of heaven. O do you think they could see our waving today? It is quite a pleasant day, pretty clear, and not many clouds in the sky. I wonder if they can see us from that good land? I think they can. If from this window of earthly prospects we can almost see them, then from their towers of light I think they can fully see us. And so I wave them the glory, and I wave them the joy, and I say: "Have you got through with all your troubles?" and their voices answer: "God hath wiped away all tears from our eyes." I say: "Is it as grand up there as you thought it would be?" and the voices answer: "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for those that love him." I say: "Do you have any more struggle for bread?" and they answer: "We hunger no more, we thirst no more." And I say: "Have you been out to the cemetery of the golden city?" and they answer: "There is no death here." And I look out through the heavens, and I say: "Where do you get your light from nights, and what do you burn in the temple?" and they answer: "There is no night here, and we have no need of candle or of star." And I say: "What book do you sing out of?" and they answer: "The Hallelujah Chorus." And I say: "In the splendor and magnificence of the city, don't you ever get lost?" and they answer: "The Lamb which is in the midst of the throne leadeth us to living fountains of water." O how near they seem. Their wings—do you not feel them? Their harps—do you not hear them? And all that through the window of our earthly prospects, across which stretcheth the scarlet line. Be that my choice color forever. Is it too glaring for you? Do you like the blue because it reminds you of the sky, or the green because it makes you think of the foliage, or the black because it has in it the shadows of the night? I take the scarlet because it shall make me think of the price that was paid for my soul. O the blood! the blood! the blood of the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. I see where you are. You are at the cross roads. The next step decides everything. Pause before you take it, but do not pause too long. I hear the blast of the trumpet that wakes the dead. Look out! Look out! For in that day, and in our closing moment on earth, better than any other defense or barricade, however high or broad or stupendous, will be one little, thin, scarlet thread in the window.

What a Blind Man Accomplished.

The Berkshire County (Mass.) Eagle gives an interesting account of the achievements of Dr. Edward L. Plunkett, who died at his residence in New York city on the 10th ult. He was a native of Pittsfield, his father, who died many years since, having been a wealthy and influential citizen. While at Lafayette college, Easton, Pa., in 1879, the son became blind. He was 21 years old. Instead of falling back on the abundant means of the family, he resolved to study medicine. The undertaking doubtless seemed to many to be preposterous, but he was admitted to the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York, went through the course and took the degree of M. D.

His success was due to the assistance of his devoted mother, a lady of superior intelligence and attainments, who followed up the son's attendance on the lectures with reading to him by day and by night the necessary books. With determined purpose he memorized what he heard, and his delicate sense of touch enabled him to become familiar with the various parts of the body as they were placed in his hands after dissection. He became a private instructor of medical students who were at the same time going through the college course. In the last year no less than thirty students who had been his pupils in this collateral way were graduated from the college.

There is a species of acacia which is commonly called the angry tree. It reaches the height of eighty feet after a rapid growth, and somewhat resembles the century plant. One of these curious plants was brought from Australia and set out in Virginia, Nev., where it has been seen by many persons. When the sun sets the leaves fold up and the tender twigs coil tightly, like a little pig's tail. If the shoots are handled the leaves rustle and move uneasily for a time. If this queer plant is removed from one spot to another it seems angry, and the leaves stand out in all directions like quills on a porcupine.

THE Troy Press makes the point that the stories of rapid growth in population at the West are more than matched in the Empire State. The census to be taken this year will show that the population of the State of New York is about 6,000,000. The rate of development of the upper portion of the city of New York is wonderful. In Brooklyn there have been erected within the past year houses for the accommodation of 80,000 people, and the population of that city now verges on 900,000.

IN Boston, according to the Saturday Evening Gazette, the album has been superseded by the package of Kodaks in every house. You are no longer asked to look at the family "likenesses," but at "Our August at Sweet Brook," "An Anti-Browning Club in a Hay-Mow," or "Our Baby's First Summer." There is a strange monotony about these amateur photographs. In them all you see about the same trees, the same roads and the same brooks. You would say that you saw the same people in them, also, if their outlines were not so indistinct as to defy recognition.

HUMANE-MINDED persons may take comfort in the knowledge that it does not hurt the oyster to be torn from his shell and scrunched between the teeth. Science, which is making great strides in oystrology, has discovered this by sticking pins into the oyster's stomach and listening for groans with a microphone.

A SHRIEK came from the parlor, and the mother rushed into the room in great agitation. "What is it, my daughter?" she exclaimed. "Has this—this person from New York been rude or uncivil?" "Not intentionally, mamma," said the young Boston maid, faintly. "But it was a painful shock. He said 'hippopotamuses' instead of 'hippopotami.'"

NEVER say again that a newspaper writer is not a master of diplomacy. One of the fraternity was to write up the history of an old lady of ninety-eight. He was told she had never so much as learned her letters. Did he blurt it out in print? Not a bit of it. He merely stated in his finely written article that "she can read the finest print as well as she ever could."

THE preacher who dropped into an office in Alpena, Mich., the other day where four of the biggest guns in town were playing poker for money may not have known what he was about, but then again he may. DOMESTIC DETAILS.

IF desired to boil an egg soft, put it in cold water and allow it to come to a boil. In this way it is as a jelly throughout, both the yolks and whites. Boil on the back of the stove slowly in hot water for seven minutes.

COPPERAS is a cheap and good disinfectant for many purposes. It is easy to obtain and readily dissolves in warm or cold water. Used in the proportion of two pounds to the pailful of water, it makes a good solution for water-closets, cesspools, vaults and catch-basins.

TO VARNISH the leather covers of books: Use bookbinder's varnish, which is made by dissolving pale gum sandarac three ounces to one pint ninety-five per cent. alcohol, dissolve cold and decant. Apply very quickly with small soft sponge, like wiping the surface lightly. It is the excess in quantity that makes the color run.

RISSOLETTES, which are made of puff paste and cut the size of a biscuit, are adorned with marmalade or jam. Over the top is laid another layer of paste covered with the white of an egg, and the whole is baked to a light brown. White sugar is sifted all over it and a few drops of jelly are put on top.

MANY housekeepers make the mistake of dampening their clothes too much when folding them for ironing, and that, of course, makes that process more wearisome. Two-thirds of the clothes can be folded before the iron touches them, and then be simply pressed enough to keep them folded so they will not take up so much room in the clothes presses and bureau drawers.

SPICED BEEF TONGUE.—Rub into the tongue a mixture of half a pint of sugar, a very small piece of saltpeter, a tablespoonful of cloves and place it in a strong brine, let stand for ten days, take out, wash and dry. Roll in paste made of flour and water, put in a pan with a little water and bake slowly until done. When done remove the paste, skin, and set away to cool. Have very cold and slice thin.

LEMON TARTS.—Peel and grate a good lemon; add two-thirds of a cupful of white sugar, yolk of an egg, one cupful of cold water, in which has been well mixed a dessertspoonful of corn-starch; stir well together; cook in a new tin or a porcelain pan; stir until it is a smooth jelly. This is good between layers of a cake. Fill the tart shells, ice with the white of an egg whipped to a froth with a spoonful of sugar, and set in a hot oven one minute.

CHEESE RAMAKINS.—Put half a pint of milk and two ounces of bread in a small saucepan, and set on the stove to boil. Stir until it is a smooth paste; then a small teacup of grated cheese and two ounces of butter. Stir over the fire one minute; take off. Season with salt and cayenne pepper, add the yolks of two eggs. Beat the whites of three stiff, and add gently. Pour in a greased pan or baking-dish, and set in the oven fifteen or twenty minutes.

AN unusual contrast was lately witnessed upon one of the grimy London wharves—an auction of a beautiful and interesting collection of sculptures just imported from Italy. A HORSE employed in a lumber mill at Guerneville, Cal., for the last twelve years to haul away the sawdust has become so well acquainted with his work that he goes from one hopper to another, through intricate passageways, without a driver and never strikes a post. A CITIZEN of Erie, Pa., was walking along the street the other day when his dog came up, pulled his coat and tried to make him retrace his steps. He turned around and followed the dog a short distance and picked up a fine revolver. The dog seemed to know that the weapon was valuable, although it was too heavy for him to carry in his mouth.

PEDESTRIANS on Eighth street, Philadelphia, were amused by the sagacity of a dog. The animal was trotting up street when suddenly his muzzle fell to the sidewalk. He stopped, looked at it, and after a few attempts again got his head in the cage. But just as he started on his trot it fell off a second time. This was repeated four times. Then the dog, apparently realizing that it was beyond him to fasten the muzzle, took it between his teeth and ran on, his looks indicating the pride he felt in mastering the difficulty.

A RESIDENT of Depauville, N. Y., is the owner of a fine maltese cat that is unusually intelligent, and has developed to a remarkable degree traits that are seldom found in the cat family. The most popular thing about this particular Thomas is his love for a gun, a love which began to manifest itself about three years ago. The cat first began to follow his owner to the woods and fields in search of birds, and Mr. Eigabroadt, noticing his liking for the sport, took some pains to develop the hunting instinct and make Tommy useful. The cat was easily taught, and a few lessons sufficed to make him a trustworthy retriever.

ACCORDING to the best statistical authority, the consumption of sugar in the world is 5,200,000 tons a year, of which the United States consumes 1,500,000 tons and Great Britain 1,100,000 tons. These two bones, called colic stones, are regarded to possess medicinal virtues. They were mounted in gold and hung round the neck.

THE London Money-Order Office was set on foot by three enterprising post-office clerks in 1792, who hired premises outside the post-office, the firm being known as Stow & Company. MISCELLANEOUS.

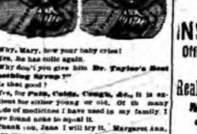
BEFORE TAKING. AFTER TAKING.



Why, Mary, how your baby cries!
Yes, he has colic again.
Why don't you give him Dr. Taylor's Best Soothing Syrup?
Is that good?
Yes, for Pains, Colds, Coughs, &c., it is excellent for either young or old. Of the many kinds of medicines I have used in my family I have found none to equal it.
Thank you, Jane I will try it. Margaret Ann, go as soon as you can to either REYNOLDS', or SHAW'S Drug Store, and get a bottle of Dr. Taylor's Soothing Syrup. 1-14m

HOW CAN THE LONG
BE THE SHORT

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake, and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast, Vancouver, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time, once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. CHOICE PRESS POEMS.

The Lost Song.

I plucked a wild flower from the river's brim
 And drank awhile its faint but fragrant breath,
Then cast it back upon the wave a-swim,
 And watched it, as I fancied, drift to death.
"'Tis lost," I said, "but far adown the tide"
 A tempted maiden saw its dainty hue;
She snatched it kneeling at the water side
 And vowed: "I will be pure, Sweet Flower, like you."
  And I, I never knew.

I plucked [illegible] from out my heart one day
 And [illegible] upon the noisy stream of rhyme;
Sadly I watched it slowly float away
 'Mongst thistles, weeds, and sprigs of fragrant thyme.
"'Tis lost," I said, "'tis lost forever more,"
 Although within my heart of hearts it grew,
And yet far down the ready shore
 It taught [illegible] its lesson sweet and true.
  And I, I never knew.
   —George Horton, in Chicago Herald.

Her First Valentine.

She'd never had a valentine,
 She told me so herself
While looking at the pretty ones
 Displayed along the shelf.

And so to please the winsome maid
 My heart was well inclined,
I bade her fix her choice on one
 Exactly to her mind.

I told her that Saint Valentine
 Would bring it to her door,
And she must kiss him heartily
 A dozen times or more.

She gave consent with charming grace,
 Nor made the least complaint
At treating so fam'liarly
 This amiable saint.

And when the day came 'round I took
 The valentine myself,
That I might give her sweet surprise
 And watch the little elf.

With ready kisses on her lips
 She met me in the hall,
And said: "You're only Papa! and
 You ain't no saint at all!"
   —Josephine Pollard, in Independent.

Patience with the Living.

Sweet friend, when thou and I are gone
 Beyond earth's weary labor,
When small shall be our need of grace
 From comrade or from neighbor;
Passed all the strife, the toil, the care,
 And done with all the sighing,
What tender ruth shall we have gained,
 Alas! by simply dying?

Then lips too chary of their praise
 Will tell our merits over,
And eyes too swift our faults to see
 Shall no defect discover.
Then hands that would not lift a stone
 Where stones were thick to cumber
Our steep hill path, will scatter flowers
 Above our pillowed slumber.

Sweet friend, perchance both thou and I,
 Ere love is past forgiving,
Should take the earnest lesson home—
 Be patient with the living.
To-day's repressed rebuke may save
 Our blinding tears to-morrow;
Then patience—e'en when keenest edge
 May whet a nameless sorrow.

'Tis easy to be gentle when
 Death's silence shames our clamor,
And easy to discern the best
 Through memory's mystic glamor;
But wise it were for thee and me,
 Ere love is past forgiving,
To take the tender lesson home—
 Be patient with the living.
   —Christian Advocate.

A Valentine.

O, tell me not of your bright brunette,
 With her cheeks of olive hue,
And her ripe red lips and her eyes of jet;
 She is charming, it is true;
But she may be sly, and she may reveal
 A temper that's all her own,
While the red-haired girl is as true as steel,
 And her moods, as they come, have flown.

Your stately blonde has a winning way,
 And her face is wondrous fair,
Her eyes are as blue as the sky of May,
 She's a wealth of golden hair;
But too cold is she, with a capital
 She spells not love for man,
While the red-haired girl's as tropical
 As a summer in Hindoostan.

Ah! the red-haired girl is the girl for me,
 For her love is like a flood;
She is never as false as some may be,
 And her veins are filled with blood.
Oh, red-haired girl! when you get this note,
 May the missive make you mine,
May it turn your heart to the man who wrote
 He would be your valentine.
   —Daniel S. Lamont.

A Conspiracy with a Sage.

No need to ask me what I think of this or that,
 Because, O Socrates, you must have known the while
That in these days reflection's not considered pat,
 And thought in any guise has long gone out of style.

I'm deeply grieved, too, that such should be the case,
 Because I think, my sage—and prithee do not scoff—
If but one-half the so-called nabobs of our race
 Would think for just a moment, that would kill them off.

And when we two might come into the rich estate
 Which these are squandering in senseless, ribald joys—
The joys which you and I could not appreciate
 Had we not once long years ago been silly boys.

Were there a way to work this happy scheme of mine,
 To get our moneyed dudes to think and di[illegible],
 I'd grab it!
Come, wisest Socrates, what say you, let's combine,
 And strive to put in vogue a deadly thinking habit.
   —John Kendrick Bangs, in Harper's Bazar.

In the Chimney Corner.

What do you see in the fire, my darling,
 Gold-haired lassie beside my knee?
Is it a castle in Eldorado;
 Is it a lover from o'er the sea?
Leave the castle for others, lassie,
 Let the lover come whence he may;
Love is love in the humblest cottage,
 Never mind what the world may say.

What is there in the flames, my darling?
 Do you wonder what I can see?
The old white house and the little garden,
 Oh, how it all comes back to me!
Oh, the sound of the mill wheel turning,
 Oh, the scent of the lime tree!
When I was a girl like you, my darling;
 When your grandfather courted me.

You will grow old like me, my darling;
 Time will whiten your golden hair;
You'll sit at eve in the chimney corner,
 Dreaming and watching each empty chair.
You will not weep as you sit and ponder;
 You will remember granny's smile;
For we know that the hearts that are gone, my darling,
 Are but lost for a little while.
   —Frederick E. Weatherly.

The Patriot.

"Down with a tyrant foe," said he,
 "That seeks this happy land;
All the energy that I possess
 My country may command.

"No arduous labor would I shirk,
 No task would I disdain,
To check invasion's hateful way
 And liberty maintain."

And when he finished his address
 And moved each hearer's soul,
His wife had built the kitchen fire
 And carried in the coal.
   —Merchant Traveler.

GASTRONOMICAL GRINS.

EVIDENCE of terrapin unsophistication is failure to consume the eggs.

DIAMOND-BACK terrapin probably come under the head of brilliant gastronomy.

IT is believed that cold fried oysters will sometimes induce a man to commit suicide.

NEVER look a gift donkey in the heels, nor a restaurant chicken salad in the ingredients.

AN American plum pudding made in an English mold is just like the rose under another name.

JOKES based on one oyster in a stew and disasters incident to the carving of a duck are in annual circulation.

CONSOMMÉ, as a name, continues to cover enough hot water to float the Great Eastern, it being represented as soup.

IN a plate of griddle cakes, the cake on top and the one next the plate are the ones best to avoid, for good and sufficient reasons.

ANYBODY can tell the difference between black and white, but he must needs be a connoisseur in game who can tell by the eating a redhead from a canvasback duck in these days of sumptuous gastronomy.

"[illegible] conglomeration" is a new name for hash among the facetious whose gastronomic exercise is confined to boarding-houses and restaurants. Inasmuch as the dish is even held to be mysterious, "magician's mess" might do as well.

STYLES IN FOOTGEAR.

The Fashion in Boots and Shoes for Big and Little Feet.

Perfumed Shoes Now the Fad of the Ladies—Dainty Boots and Slippers—Lace Shoes the Thing for Gentlemen.

COPYRIGHT 1890.

As there is a tendency to follow everything that is English, it might be well to state that this season the most fashionable London shoes, for very smart occasions, are in silk, suede, or morocco, corresponding with the gown, with contrasting heels, rands, and either ribbon tying the side flaps together, on the instep, or a handsome buckle. Gray silk or morocco, white heels, rands, and silver buckle; dark green with white, rosada with pale pink, black with red, gold color with gray, have all been popular combinations. The fashion of piping shoes with color comes to us from the commencement of the eighteenth century. The black patent-leather shoe, with colored satin heel, is another fashionable style, and is a copy of French court shoes, worn very many years ago, the shape and general fashion being adhered to, though the patent-leather is an invention of modern days. Those with red heels and handsome gold buckles are extremely smart, and most becoming to the foot.

The lace boot is again re-instated in favor, but it comes back in a more ornamental form. In some instances the fronts are cut in scollops, and the silken laces of some bright color, as scarlet or yellow. A notable example is seen in a laced walking boot (Fig. 1), that has the vamp and quarter cut in one piece, from dark gray morocco, and patent-leather trimmings that extend from the toe, up the lace front, and around the top. This trimming is made the subject of much ornamentation, being pinked and perforated in fanciful designs, and the stitching is with colored silk, which shows off to good advantage on the black ground of the patent-leather. Another peculiarity is that the patent-leather laps over the quarter deep enough to allow a row of eyelets to be set in mock button holes—worked with gray silk—and thus give the foot the appearance at a side view of the button boot, while it has all the advantages of the lace.

Another novelty is the "Blucher" (Fig. 2). They are made on the Piccadilly last, which gives that slim effect to the foot now so much sought after in the best grades of fine wear. They are made in different combinations of leathers, patent calf and French enamel being the most used. They are ornamented with toe-caps of various designs in outline, with fancy perforations. On the ladies' "Bouchers" the front lace-piece is of a different leather from the quarters. The quarters are stitched on the front lace-piece instead of its being stitched on the outside of quarters as of old. The effect is much handsomer. The front edges of the quarters are pinked and perforated with fancy "Grecian" patterns or pointed, and scolloped wheels.

In button boots the latest novelty is of French importation, (Fig. 3) and first made its appearance on the return of the gushing belles that "did" the Paris Exposition. They are of a unique design that permits of variety enough in combination to suit the most ultra tastes. Besides being unique in design and color, its chic appearance is set off by the presence of three broad ribbons, one at the instep, a second at heel, while the third spans the ankle, and each is clasped by a light silver buckle. The vamp, quarter, trimmings and ribbons may all be of different colors or shades to suit the fancy of the wearer. Paris shoemakers are now displaying a kind of shoe that is well liked both by ladies and gentlemen. They are light gray. It is said that black so soon shows the dust, and on that account gray is far preferable. Gentlemen's gray shoes are made of leather and ladies' of silk cloth. The heels are set round with pretty little silver-headed nails. A shoe that doubtlessly will attract unusual attention has seamless vamps of patent-leather, with tops of royal blue suede. The lace fronts are of patent-leather, bound with silver cords.

A "fad," and a rather singular one, to say the least, is to wear perfumed shoes. Many favor the Russia leather shoe on this account, as it has a distinctive odor that is hard to imitate, although it is now being done to some extent. As the genuine Russia leather is quite expensive, and thus can be worn only by the wealthy, and as the demand is for a perfumed shoe in the medium grades, several of the leading shoe manufacturers have adopted the plan of sprinkling orris-root powder, in which is sifted a favorite sachet, between the leather and the lining of their patrons' shoes.

A slipper suitable for morning wear is a most desirable part of a lady's toilet. To be right it must be light, comfortable, and of a material that will harmonize with the variety of morning wrappers worn, and of neutral colors. Of these there are many styles shown to tickle the vanity of the fair purchaser. Perhaps the most fanciful design is somewhat of a combination of slipper and low shoe (Fig. 4). The material for the quarter, which, as will be seen, extends around the toe, forming aforderto the ramp, is pearl-colored buckskin bound with narrow silk ribbon to match the color of the buckskin as nearly as possible. Pearl-colored silk is also used for stitching. The vamp is pearl-colored dull kid crossed by narrow, flat silk braid, pink in color, and stitched on each edge. The contrast in colors is enough to give a rich, dressy appearance without being so decided as to offend taste or to mar the harmony by strong contrast. The same design can be had in almost any color, shade or combination, which is usually decided upon by color of the wrapper with which they are to be worn.

For evening, brocade shoes, made with the contrasting heel and rand, with dainty bows lined with the color of the heel, or with out buckles, are in the height of fashion. Some of the bows are smartly set up, each one lined with color, drawn together at the base, in form somewhat resembling a mouse's ear, while others are laid over upon the shoe, sometimes with three pearl or crystal studs placed down the center. The brocade is usually that of the gown the shoe is to be worn with, and the heel and rand that of the color in it, such as gold and white brocade, with a gold satin heel and piping, and so on. That rosettes are again in style is due no doubt to the fact that the slender foot is now considered to be the ideal, and nothing so emphasizes the petite slenderness of a slippered foot and misleads the eye in the case of a large one as does the well poised rosette. The "correct" rosette is not the ordinary one that has been worn from time to time, but the great lace and silk roses of Charles I's day. For ordinary evening wear, kid or suede shoes are more fashionable than satin. For afternoon wear, colored and embossed morocco shoes, after the Louis XV. period, with high pointed instep flaps and handsome buckles are much worn.

One of the attractive novelties for evening wear is a slipper (Fig. 5), cut very low at the sides and open across the front just above the ball of the foot. The vamp is cut of glazed white kid, low at the toe and long on the sides, extending back to the thin portion of the shank. The quarter is of kid to match the wearer's dress in color. It is made up plain so as not to show stitches anywhere on the outside. The inside is lined with pearl-colored kid. The buckle, which is very long and bent to fit over the instep, is of oxidized silver, gold, or fire-gilt. The frame is open fretwork, and the bands are held by an initial letter or monogram, suited to the name of the wearer, the monogram being studded with stones, the kinds to suit the taste or whim of the wearer. The heel is covered with white leather, and the edge of the sole, which is very thin, is finished white. In toilet slippers a great variety are shown, comprising a range of styles from which the most particular can make a selection. They are to be had in almost every known shade and color, and of choice selections of fancy leathers and cloths of any quality. They can be had with heels, or without, to suit the fancy of the wearer, and with a plain innersole, or one padded with the softest down and quilted with rich colored silk. Of the heelless variety a striking example is seen in one with quilted silk or satin vamp (Fig. 6), trimmed around the edge with a sort of box pleating, the whole surmounted with a neat bow or pompon of gold or silver threads. Another novelty (Fig. 7), has French kid vamps and Louis XV. heels. Around the top of the vamp is a pleating of black silk tipped with white lace while the front is ornamented with a neat bow of black and white satin ribbons. The lining is of white kid and the innersole padded to the comfort of milady's dainty feet.

The lace walking shoe, or balmoral for gentlemen's use, is the principal style of foot covering now worn. The button and congress styles are losing their old-time popularity. A tasteful design is a patent-leather with seamless vamps cut in such a manner as to extend up the back seam to the top of the shoe (Fig. 8). This design has the merit of doing away with the seam at the back where top and vamp usually join, and which is so apt to break away. It also permits of any amount of pinking, perforating and fancy stitching with colored silk. The heels are of medium height, but rather slim, the sole light and flexible, and has the rand ornamented with yellow stitches. This shoe is also made in calf, kangaroo and dongola. When made in button a greater opportunity is afforded for fancy ornamentation, which is made the most of (Fig. 9) by some unique designs at the button pieces, which are metered out in tasty scroll work around the button-holes and stitched to an underlying piece of leather of different material, color or shade.

All the attractive ornamentation conceivable is being put into the once popular button boot, for it has found a conceited rival in the lace boot.

VISIBLE GRAIN SUPPLY.

All the World Closely Watches Uncle Sam's Food Products.

The Editor of "Bradstreets" Explains How the More Important Statistics of the Grain Trade Are Obtained—Produce Exchange Old Fogyism.

COPYRIGHT 1890.

The most important statistics bearing upon the grain trade, next to those of production, are those of accumulated stocks out of farmers' hands.

This is not difficult to appreciate.

With an approximately accurate knowledge of the yields of wheat in the United States and in other countries which produce more wheat than they consume, one may estimate fairly the home consumption in each instance, and with the aid of like data from the leading wheat-importing nations, the United Kingdom, France, Portugal, and others, all that remains to determine the probable import requirements of the latter is a fair understanding of stocks of wheat on hand at the beginning of a cereal year—say August 1.

When the probable wheat requirements in countries which have to import to supplement their own harvests are arrived at approximately, it becomes important to ascertain stocks on hand in countries which usually have wheat to export; after which—if this be accomplished—the long-headed grain merchant at New York or Chicago, for instance, may, with some degree of intelligence, calculate the probable or possible quantity of wheat to be sent from the United States during a year, from one August to another.

Let us suppose a case.

We will say that the United Kingdom will have to import more wheat than usual for the year ending with August 1, 1890; this being determined by a smaller yield of wheat there in 1889 than in 1888 and by smaller stocks on hand on January 1, 1890, than a year ago.

It may also be premised that Russia, generally a heavy exporter of wheat, will have less than usual to ship; that Australian shipments will not be available for some months to come, and that Californian exports are made at too great a distance from Europe to meet sudden requirements.

The possibilities of India may be regarded as doubtful, as to quantity. Stocks of wheat throughout Europe have all been depleted—and all of these suppositions are quite close to the facts—and by inference the conclusion is reached that Atlantic port wheat shipments are to derive increased importance between this time and August 1.

The ability of the United States to export wheat between August, 1889, and August, 1890, I determine as follows:

Domestic wheat crop of 1889.....		490,000,000
Needed for food at home......	295,000,000
Needed for seed at home......	52,000,000
Needed for manufactures and arts.......,	15,000,000	362,000,000
Available for export (bushels)		128,000,000

This is reached by presuming that the 35,000,000 bushels of wheat on hand (in and out of farmers' hands) on August 1, 1889, prove sufficient to carry us into the new cereal year seven months hence. Out of these 128,000,000 bushels we have exported about 58,000,000 bushels, leaving, say, 70,000,000 bushels for export during six months to come.

Hingeing upon our calculated ability to export 70,000,000 bushels within six months, comes the available wheat "in sight" in the United States, east of the Rocky Mountains; that is in the United States and Canada, for our wheat exports to the Dominion annually have about equalled the latter's exports; for if the farmers hold back their wheat it cannot well be exported except at higher prices, at figures which will induce the growers to part with it.

It may thus be seen how important it is to know what is the total "visible supply of wheat" tributary to the Atlantic ports.

The inventor of the visible supply of wheat report is Mr. Elmer H. Walker, for many years statistician of the New York Produce Exchange. Some twenty years or so ago he began this work by collating weekly for the Exchange at New York totals of stocks of wheat at points of accumulation where, at that time, the bulk of all stocks "out of farmers' hands" were held, viz.: Milwaukee, Chicago, Peoria, Kansas City, St. Louis, Chicago, Indianapolis, Detroit, Toledo, Cincinnati, Buffalo, Albany, Boston, Toronto, Montreal, Oswego, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore. Within a few years Minneapolis, Duluth and St. Paul were added to the list, about which time the Chicago Board of Trade began the compilation each week of a visible supply report of its own, claiming that the New York statement was too slow in appearing, not then being given out until Thursdays following the Saturdays for which totals of stocks on hand were compiled.

This rivalry proved fortunate, and in the race for prompt returns both reports began to appear on Mondays, as they do to this day.

The importance of these official visible supply reports was speedily recognized abroad, and each week the total of wheat, and of corn, oats, barley, and rye, are cabled to leading European grain markets.

Five or six years ago I called the attention of several members of the New York Produce Exchange to the inadequency of its weekly visible supply of wheat, showed them how it failed to explain the actual condition of stocks, if it were not, at times, actually misleading.

Mr. Walker, a good friend of mine, asked: "What would you propose as a substitute?"

"Well," I replied, "since you began this visible supply report, stocks of wheat have come to be held at many interior points where none were formerly stored, and if a heavy movement of wheat from farmers' hands to these outlying interior points of accumulation should set in, your weekly visible supply would not show it."

"But our report has been kept up for years, and we are thus enabled to present comparisons with each new set of totals. What could be done with such a report as you suggest without comparative totals?"

"Keep it going until comparative totals accumulate."

"But such a report would not be official," he objected.

"What do you mean by official?"

"Our totals are obtained from officials in charge of grain warehouses and we know them to be correct. We collate them, put the stamp of the New York Produce Exchange upon them, and send them out as 'official.' If you obtained Leavenworth, St. Joseph, Memphis, New Orleans, Nashville, and Port Huron stocks, besides supplies at forty or more other points of accumulation, in addition to supplies at eight or nine hundred railway elevators, which, as you say, have sprung up in Minnesota, Dakota, Wisconsin, and Iowa, how do you know, or how will the trade know, that the totals are accurate?"

I replied that if Bradstreet's undertook to obtain the data referred to it would get it from authorized agents of elevators and warehouses, through its own correspondents, just as any newspaper might; that the presumption that warehouse agents would or could lie (successfully) month after month to intelligent local correspondents was not only absurd, but a libel on the commercial morality of the trade of which the New York Produce Exchange is a type.

"But," interposed Mr. Walker, "we are the New York Produce Exchange, and make an 'official' statement of that on which we set our seal. Go ahead. I shall watch your work with interest."

And he did. Some years after he declared that the new and comprehensive report of the visible supply of wheat, which included stocks at 73 cities and 865 interior elevators along the lines of railways, East of the Rocky Mountains, was all that had been promised in my conversation with him in 1884.

In October last these reports showed the unprecedented movement of wheat from farmers' hands of 20,000,000 bushels, while the official statement knew nothing of it.

The report now goes to India, as well as to London and Liverpool, where it appears to be regarded as more of a price-maker than the official statement.

SHOPPING IN ALGIERS.

The Merchant Not Different from Those in Baxter Street, in New York.

You select your goods with slow deliberation, pile them up together casually in a little heap, eye them askance with an inquiring glance, and take a contemplative pull or two at the inspiring weed in solemn silence. Mohammed Ali responds with a puff from his cigarette in grave concert. Then you walk once or twice up and down the place slowly, and jerking your head with careless ease in the direction of your selected pile, you inquire, as if for abstract reasons merely, in an off-hand tone, your Moslem friend's lowest cash quotation for the lot as it stands.

Two hundred francs is the smallest price. Mohammed Ali paid far more than that himself for them. He sells simply for occupation, it would seem. Look at the work, Monsieur. All graven brass, not mere repoussé metal, or real old chain stitch alike on both side, none of your wretched common-place, modern machine-made embroidery.

You smile incredulously, and remark with a wise nod that your Moslem friend must surely be in error. A mistake of the press. For 200f., read 50f.

Mohammed Ali assumes an expressive attitude of virtuous indignation and resumes his tobacco. Fifty francs for all that lot! Monsieur jests. He shows himself a very poor judge indeed of values.

Half an hour's debate and ten successive abatements reduce the lot at least to a fair average price of 70f. Mohammed Ali declares you have robbed him of his profit, and pockets his cash with inarticulate grumblings in the Arab tongue. Next day you see in the Rue Bab Azzun that you have paid him at least 20f. too much for your supposed bargain.

CURE FOR DRUNKENNESS.

How the Laws of Norway Treat Heavy Drinkers.

A habitual drunkard of Norway and Sweden renders himself liable to imprisonment for his love for strong drink, and during his incarceration he is required to submit to a plan of treatment for the cure of his failing, which is said to produce marvelous results. The plan consists in making the delinquent subsist entirely on bread and wine. The bread is steeped in a bowl of wine for an hour or more before the meal is served. The first day the habitual toper takes his food in this shape without repugnance; the second day he finds it less agreeable to his palate; finally he positively loathes the sight of it. Experience shows that a period of from eight to ten days of this regimen is generally more than sufficient to make a man evince the greatest aversion to anything in the shape of wine. Many men after their incarceration become total abstainers.

THERE are now enough French people along the line of the Maine Central railroad to justify that corporation in posting its time-tables printed in French.

A NEW contrivance has been applied to watches, called an "appointment reminder." A small dial is set into the watch's face upon which one can set the hands at any hour required.

THERE is not a cigarette on sale in the town of Frankfort, the capital of Kentucky. In his message to the Legislature Governor Buckner said that something must be done to repress the passions of the people, so the town authorities passed a law prohibiting the sale of cigarettes.

THE most novel character at a masquerade ball held in a Philadelphia house a few nights ago was that assumed by a young lady who personated "la grippe." Her costume was of black and had painted on it skeletons, pill-boxes, medicine vials and other similar and appropriate designs.

STANLEY sees fine prospects for railways in Africa. According to his estimates 800 miles could be laid down for $17,000,000. This mileage would open to commerce four great river basins, with a total area of 2,370,000 square miles and a total population of 80,000,000. Of the resources of the region he speaks in the highest terms.

IT is a fact not generally known that it requires from ten to fifteen years for an orange tree to develop. A grove does not attain perfection in less time than that, the land speculators to the contrary notwithstanding. It is true that an orange tree will bear a few oranges within a few years after planting, but a tree has to bear not only a few, but a great many oranges to make the industry pay.

A PENNSYLVANIA railroad man says young men are selected as drivers of the locomotives on fast trains because old men do not have the nerve to stand the strain of the terrible speed of these trains, and even the nerviest young man gets afraid of them after awhile. Then they get to letting up a little in speed, the trains run behind time, the engineers are given other runs and new men are put on in their places.

"THERE is something curious about the American silver dollar and half-dollar of 1804," says a numismatist. "There were about twenty thousand of the dollars coined, but not one of them got into circulation. Two of them are in coin collections to-day, however, and they are the most valuable of all American coins. Why the dollar of 1804 was never in circulation after leaving the mint is one of the unsolved government mysteries. The half-dollar of 1804 is surrounded by a mystery equally profound. There were 150,000 of these coined, but not one was ever known to be in circulation."

FACTS FOR FRUIT GROWERS.

WHEN a man tries to sell you budded trees for several times higher price than he says grafted trees are worth, don't buy.

DRY bran is recommended as one of the best materials for packing apples, as it partly protects against sudden changes of temperature.

STAKE young trees if they are liable to be severely shaken by the winds. On light, sandy soils, where the ground is soft and loose, it may be necessary to stake trees from two to three years old.

PRODUCTION is increasing all the time, and the time is here when if we would grow fruit or produce any thing else at a profit, we must not only produce the best varieties, but we must produce them in the most economical way. Study economy in production.

TO KEEP the trunks of apple trees smooth and clean use a wash made by slacking one-half bushel of lime with hot water, and adding one gallon of soap and two pounds of crude carbolic acid. If applied as often as the acid loses its odor it will also keep off rabbits and other vermin.

A WRITER in the Ohio Farmer says a pear tree which blooms but bears no fruit is making too much root growth, and recommends cutting a trench eighteen inches deep below the circumference of the first limbs, filling it half full of compost manure and returning the soil on top of it. This will check root growth and start the tree in bearing.

LEARNED men write books and governments make large appropriations to help farmers, orchard-growers and vine-growers to defend their crops against injurious insects, but if we were civilized enough, says Orchard and Garden, to protect our friends and allies instead of cherishing our enemies, the birds would soon dispose of most of these pests.

TO PLANT strawberries rapidly and well, says an exchange, shove a straight-bladed spade into the ground, push the handle from you, drop the roots into the crevice, draw out the spade and firm the soil by stepping on each side of the plant. An acre and a half was thus planted by one boy and man, in three days, without loss of a single plant. They had to dig the plants and mark the ground, and averaged eight hours per day.

A GARDEN soil that has been brought into a high state of fertility is capable of producing two or even more light, green garden crops in a season. In fact it loses less of heart and vitality to grow a second crop than it would to lie idle or grow a crop of weeds that are pretty sure to go to seed. After the first green peas, radishes, etc., are off, set out cabbage plants, or plant late cucumbers or sow turnips. Keep the soil rich and active. Never allow the weeds to take possession in any part of the growing season.

THE latest revelations concerning Egyptian antiquities come through the research of Prof. Naville, of Geneva, made at Bubastes. Bubastes was the sacred city of Bast, the cat-headed goddess. It was supposed that its great temple had entirely disappeared, but M. Naville discovered extensive remains of it, and striking proof to show that the pyramids of Cheops and Chefren must have been in existence at least by 3700 B. C., or about six thousand years ago. The Hyksos, or shepherd kings, came from Babylon or Mesopotamia in the twenty-third century B. C.

Recent investigation by a committee of the State Senate, touching alleged discrepancies in the election returns of Hudson County, last November, has already brought to light very unsavory facts, and made positive the necessity for ballot reform, both speedy and searching, and applicable to sworn election officers as well as to all other offenders.

Scores and scores of fraudulently deposited tickets in the ballot boxes, and therefrom counted, in violation of law and morality, is plainly the result of official examination.

Can there be a more flagrant outrage against the principles of "free government"?

We know not and care not whether the individuals who committed such election frauds, but this we do know, and unhesitatingly declare, that any man, be he a Democrat or a Republican, high up or low down, who will anywhere or in any manner perpetrate or connive at the crime of ballot box stuffing, ought to be adjudged a felon, and made to labor for and meditate long behind State Prison walls.

And, we believe, every truly honest man in the State of New Jersey, regardless of party name, will heartily endorse that expressed sentiment.

Small thieves are quickly lodged in jail. Why should election robbers, political criminals, be allowed to pollute the wider sphere of freedom?

Ballot Reform is an urgent necessity.

SUNSHINE.

—Learn to laugh.

A good laugh is better than medicine.

Learn to keep your own troubles to yourself.

Learn to stop croaking.

If you cannot see any good in the world keep the bad to yourself.

Learn to hide your pains and aches under a pleasant smile.

Learn to meet your friends with a smile. The good humored man or woman is always welcome, but the dyspeptic or hypochondriac is not wanted anywhere.

Meet the world with a smile and you will be surprised to find out how kind it will be to you.

There are more sunbeams than clouds.

The man who can laugh heartily and who has a good digestion may not have found the philosopher's stone, but he need not look for it, for he has contentment.

Whatever you do, don't growl.

Don't complain.

If you can't make other people happy, don't make them miserable."

We extract the foregoing from the recorded sayings of Marshal P. Wilder, and they are certainly golden-edged and deserving of remembrance.

How much happier would we all be, if instead of growling, grumbling and general fault finding, we cheerfully took things as they came, making the best of life, endeavoring in a proper manner to rectify its errors and imperfections, and, "with charity for all and malice towards none," striving to benefit ourselves by benefiting others as we pass through the varied scenes of human existence.

Sunshine is the priceless elixir of life.

Taxation necessary to meet legitimate expenditures for the general public welfare is an obligation no right-thinking citizen can or will object to, but when taxes, direct or indirect, are levied and collected for non-essential or extravagant purposes, protests are justly in order.

The Czar of Russia refuses to recognize the Republic of Brazil while ex-Emperor, Dom Pedro, lives. The day may come when even an iron-handed Russian Czar will have to flee into exile before a revolutionary cyclone. No crowned head rests secure. The march of popular rights is steadily onward.

Honest and honorable fidelity to party principles is laudable and worthy of respect, but, when partisanship madly overleaps the barrier of truth, justice and decency, in its wanton pursuit after power and plunder, it becomes a public disgrace, alike hostile to the intent of free representative institutions and the best interests of the people.

Fortunes piled millions high and in comparatively few hands is no index of national wealth. A land filled with homes, however humble, owned and occupied by the industrial classes, whose means of earning and opportunities for saving are encouraged and protected by honest and equitable laws, constitute the riches and a country's enduring strength.

Examining the Accounts.

Special auditor Frank DeHart of the New Jersey Central Railroad has been in this city for several days past examining the accounts of ticket agent John H. Stryker, who was removed on Friday, but whether or not any irregularities were found is not stated. In due course of time, the company will appoint a successor to Mr. Stryker, but ticket-agent Edward Nelson's position will be held open for him until he has recovered sufficiently to resume his charge.

The Ballot Reform Law.

A ballot reform law has been introduced into the Legislature with these provisions:

First—Uniform personal registration.

Second—Absolute secrecy of voting.

Third—An exclusive official ballot, printed at the public expense and distributed only at the polls on election day.

Fourth—Right of nomination by petition.

Fifth—Every candidate shall be compelled to file a sworn statement of his election expenses.

The above named bill has not yet become a law.

The Court Capably Manned.

The Union County Court feels annoyed over the strictures made upon it recently, and published in THE PRESS, by the Board of Trade of Elizabeth, chiefly composed of Republicans.

The three Judges who comprise the Court are Democrats, and they have been censured for the appointment of sixteen constables, when they only appointed four. The Republican Sheriff selected ten and the Grand Jury named two. The Court only appointed one-fourth of the constables, yet gets the blame for the excessive number of officers in attendance on the Court. The Judges say they do not object to impartial criticism, but do not like to see any favoritism displayed by the Board of Trade in its complaints.

BISHOP WIGGER'S ORDERS.

Catholic Parents Must Send Their Children to the Parochial School.

From the pulpit of St. Patrick's cathedral at Newark, Sunday morning, Rev. Father Kernan ordered those parents having children to take them from the public schools and send them to the parochial schools. This order is said to come direct from Bishop Wigger.

In Plainfield—THE PRESS is informed by those connected with the public schools—a large number of the scholars who left to attend the parochial school when it opened, have already returned to the public school.

With all due respect to the Elizabeth Journal, THE PRESS has said nothing, and never says anything, it is called upon to explain away as a mistaken statement.

The editor of our slightly esteemed contemporary is most honorable as a man, and with his especially able business manager publishes the second best newspaper in the county. But as an editor he is one of the most wilfully blind and wickedly bigoted political writers we have ever known—which is, we are entirely aware, a very harsh statement. In his efforts to bolster the political party whose collar and hand-cuffs he wears in plain sight, he will stoop to print the falsest statements that occur to him. And he prints them with a very vicious habit and manner, too.

A TRIAL BY JURY.

The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Cause the Arrest of Walter Smalley for Alleged Cruel Treatment to a Horse—The Jury Disagrees.

On June 22d last, Walter Smalley, a young man of this city, hired a horse of Andrew Huff of North Plainfield, ostensibly to drive to Oak Tree and back. When the horse was returned late at night, Mr. Huff alleges the animal was covered with welts, the result of brutal treatment. The matter was laid before the above-named society, and Chief Carey caused young Smalley's arrest.

The case came up before Justice [illegible] and a jury in [illegible] Hall, Monday afternoon, Mr. W. K. Coddington appearing for the prosecution. Mr. W. K. McClure represented the defendant. Mr. Huff, the owner of the horse, was the first witness called. He testified that the horse had been driven to Bound Brook during the day, and told of the condition of the animal when Smalley hired it. Other witnesses testified substantially the same.

The defence did not deny the allegations charged in the complaint, but claimed that the alleged brutal treatment was not perpetrated by the defendant. Counsel summed up and the jury went out about six o'clock.

The jury at first stood five for acquittal while the rest were for giving the plaintiff damages from six cents to $5, although the suit was for $100. As supper time approached an effort to compromise was made, and some of the "non-guilty" jurors were coaxed over, for the sake of getting home early. But juror Cook said "No, sir! There was no evidence presented here to convict the defendant, and I won't agree to vote a man guilty to suit other people's convenience, if I have to stay here all night." Consequently the jury hung, and were discharged.

A Family in Distress.

Constable Moffett on Saturday night served a dispossess warrant upon the family of Patrick Newell who occupy one of the Land Improvement Company's houses on South Second street, for non-payment of rent. The family is destitute and without food, Mrs. Newell is sick and one of the children is lying in Muhlenberg Hospital not expected to live.

Newell was arrested some time since on a charge of disorderly conduct, and fined $5. Since then it is alleged, he has left the city. Constable Moffett sympathized with the unfortunate woman, and gave her a sum of money out of his own pocket. It is said that in order to obtain bread for herself and children Mrs. Newell recently sold the rag carpet on her kitchen floor.

The case should be immediately investigated, and if the family is found to be worthy of assistance, help should be given them at once. The case is returnable before Justice Nash on Thursday of this week.

SHE CAN'T DENY THEY ARE THE BEST.

In Spite of Rahway's Loss, Her Papers Confess That Plainfield's Nine's "The People."

The Rahway Advocate says: "The Plainfielders are very much 'set up' over securing Rahway's old players, whom they term a 'stone-wall in-field.' Well, here's the place good ball players are made. None of those 'stone-walls' excepting Lufberry had any reputation until advanced by Rahway management."

And the Rahway Democrat softens the blow for its readers by talking hopefully through its hat before breaking the sad news, thus: "Things are beginning to boom in base ball circles as the Spring draws near. Manager Wilson of the Rahways, is hard at work selecting players to represent the association, and is confident that this season's team will be as strong, if not stronger, than last season's."

Then it goes on to say: "There will undoubtedly be many new faces among the nine, as Lufberry, Martin, Jones and Weigand have already accepted offers from the management of the Crescents of Plainfield, for the season of '90. Manager Wilson endeavored to sign these men, but the Plainfielders were beforehand, and in addition presented greater financial inducements than the local board. The Crescent league are hanging up big money for players this season, and expect to have a crack team. They certainly have secured good men in the four above mentioned. However, the name of the good ball players looking for engagements is legion, and the home team will be in no wise weakened."

A DELIGHTFUL RECEPTION.

The Washington Park Whist Club Entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Dupee and the Smith Family.

Mr. and Mrs George P. Dupee, at their handsome home on RockView avenue, entertained on Friday the Washington Park Whist Club and the "A. P's." (which if it must be known, signifies "Aged Parents,) together with a few of their friends. Mrs. Dupee, assisted by her sister, Mrs. E. Hotchkiss, received her guests in a charming manner.

The especial feature of the evening was the performance of the "Smith Family" by seven members of the Whist Club, introduced and explained by Mr. Samuel St. J. McCutchen. The "family," even including the cat, proved themselves good singers and good actors, to say nothing of their attractive personalities. Music, vocal and instrumental, then diverted the company and was in turn followed by refreshments in sumptuous and elegant profusion. Midnight brought a most delightful evening to its close and those who attended will long recall its enjoyments with pleasure.

Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Howland, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Waring, Mr. and Mrs. Benj. M. Day, Mr. and Mrs. Martin I. Cooley, Mr and Mrs. Morgan S. Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. B. Arrowsmith Hegeman, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Saunders, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. McGee, Mr. and Mrs. Augustus VanDeventer, Mr. and Mrs. George Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel St. J. McCutchen, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. Edward St. John, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Townsend, Mr and Mrs John Weir, Mr. and Mrs. Walter M. McGee, Mr. and Mrs. George C. Evans, Mr. and Mrs. Chas E. Horne, Mrs. David L. Thompson, the Misses Bessie D. Day and Ida Musgrave, Messrs Joseph Howell, George P. Taggart, Gifford Cooley and H. D. French.

IS THIS MORE OR LESS TRUE?

Obstacles Alleged to be Checking the Development of Plainfield's Water Works.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—

The Plainfield water works project has met several serious obstacles. The contract is unsatisfactory, and the Company has been unable to obtain water in sufficient quantities in the Northeastern quarter of the city whence alone, under the contract, it can be drawn. The recently promulgated decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Galesburg case has upset all attempts at present to float water works bonds not secured by the pledge of a solvent municipality itself. In this case the city of Plainfield assumes no direct obligation.

This clipping was taken from Friday's New York Tribune and the news contained therein is presumably reported from Plainfield. Is it true that water was not found in sufficient quantity in the Northeastern part of the city?

If you should have an opportunity to look over the "Galesburg decision" you will find that it has no bearing on the situation in Plainfield. The reason that it will never be an easy matter to float Plainfield Water company bonds under the present contract with the city, is that the Water company cannot show how it is to earn the interest on the bonded indebtedness even if it can find water enough for fire purposes and private consumption.

Two engineers engaged at the city's expense have previously reported substantially that it is a doubtful question if water can ever be obtained in Plainfield in sufficient quantity or proper quality, by boring for it. I think we will discover that brook water will have to be resorted to in the end, and it has proven to be immensely better for domestic purposes even in this vicinity. There is plenty of capital waiting to make advances to build water works in Plainfield, when a business like franchise is granted by the city.

ONE OF THE PEOPLE.

Of Interest to the Plainfield Bar.

The County Court officers request THE PRESS to state that Judge VanSyckel will sit in Elizabeth, Monday morning, at 10:30 o'clock, to hear motions. The Plainfield lawyers can in no other possible way be notified.

Mr. Richards' People on the Anxious Seat.

There was much suppressed excitement Sunday week among those of the Crescent Avenue church congregation who supposed they were in the secret. It was whispered that a committee of strange gentlemen who were noticeably present, were from Dr. Cuyler's church, in Brooklyn, on the search for his successor.

Free Lecture on Food Adulteration.

No subject is interesting the public today, as is that to be discussed in Music Hall, Wednesday afternoon, the details of which are given in our advertising columns. E. B. Worrell, who is lecturing upon the subject in principal cities throughout New England, is awakening within the people a deep interest in this great subject, which is of such vital importance to every home. Housekeepers should completely fill Music Hall on Wednesday afternoon.

Election of Officers.

CITY COUNCIL MEETING.

EVERYBODY GRANTED LIQUOR LICENSES IN SPITE OF COUNCILMAN RUSHMORE'S ELOQUENT AND HONEST PROTESTS.

No Information at Hand Concerning the Progress of the Water Works—And Nothing Definite to Report in Relation to a Street Railway.

The City Council met in adjourned session, Monday, with President Moffett in the chair. All the other members were present. The lobby was densely filled with persons who had evidently been drawn there out of mere curiosity, and to see what action the Council would take with reference to granting or rejecting the liquor license applications. Boys or young men not of age were not admitted to the room. The minutes of the February meeting were read and approved, and the regular order of business was taken up as follow:

PETITIONS AND COMMUNICATIONS.

Under this heading the following were received. From the Woman's Temperance Aid Society, asking Council not to grant any liquor licenses. Filed.

From Malissa U. Angleman remonstrating against Council accepting Sandford avenue unless according to the route at first laid out. Referred to the Street Committee.

From W. H. Hillman and others, asking for two street lamps on Sherman avenue. Referred.

From the Mayor, appointing Vincent W. Nash a special policeman. The appointment was confirmed, upon resolution adopted, and Mr. Nash was given the power to collect delinquent taxes. At a later stage in the proceedings Mr. Nash's bond for $1,000 was submitted signed by himself and Amos Moffett. It was referred to the Finance Committee, reported back as correct and ordered on file.

Albert Hedden petitioned the Council for permission to erect a building on East Fourth street, about 20x30 feet in dimensions, for the storage of carriages, said building to be covered with tin. Referred to the Committee on Fire and Buildings.

Messrs Jones & Co., asked for a scavenger's license, and there was one application for a peddler's license by a man who evidently hailed from Italy, both of which were referred to the License Committee.

By Frank Linke of North Plainfield, was asked the privilege to sell at wholesale, liquors at No. 43 West Front street, in the building owned by him. Referred to the License Committee.

Property owners on Orchard place petitioned the Council to extend, lay out and open that thoroughfare to New street. Referred.

The claim of C. A. Marsh, for $187 90 was referred to the Committee on Salaries, Officers and Elections.

A resolution by Mr. Newhall to the effect that $153.65 now laying in the bank credited to the assessment account, be transferred to the general account. Prevailed.

ALL LICENSES GRANTED.

President Moffett announced that the time for considering the liquor license applications had arrived, and he said that no matter what action was taken the spectators in the lobby were expected to remain silent.

The License Committee then reported back as correct the applications of Frank and Edward Randolph for truck licenses. They were granted. Likewise the request of John Bergen to have his name stricken from Chas. Bock's license application. The liquor applications came up in the following order, and except where otherwise mentioned they were granted by a vote of eight to three according to the ballot on the first application:

John E. Beerbower, City Hotel.

Ayes—Messrs Gallup, Hetfield, Johnson, Moffett, Roberts, Rushmore, Smith and Spangenberg—8.

Nays—Messrs Dunham, Jenkins and Newhall—3.

Jacob Blimm, hotel, 17 and 19 Somerset street.

Chas. Bock, saloon, 17 and 19 East Second street.

Fred. Caspar, hotel, 24 and 26 East Front street.

Jas. Conneely, saloon, 34 Park avenue.

Patrick Day, saloon, 97 West 3d street.

Jas. H. Force, hotel, 7 North avenue.

John Goff, hotel, Third and Liberty streets.

J. B. Miller, hotel, West Front street.

James O'Neill, 178 South Second street, was granted a license by a vote of 6 to 5, Messrs Dunham, Gallup, Jenkins, Newhall and Rushmore voting in the negative.

Mr. Rushmore said that he had been informed by Chief Carey that O'Neill is employed in New York, and that his brother, Richard, was to tend the bar in case a license was granted. He maintained that the brother was not a fit person to be placed in such a position. A discussion followed in which Messrs Newhall, Smith and others took part. Mr. Smith said that the committee had reported solely on the application, and not as to whether the applicant did business elsewhere or not.

John Rafferty's application was the next to be considered, and it went through like a hurricane, the vote being eight to three, as did also Chas. Smith's by the same vote.

Joseph Sullivan, of 66 West Third street, met with some opposition in the granting of his license, but he got it nevertheless by a vote of 7 to 4, those voting in the negative being Messrs Dunham, Jenkins, Newhall and Rushmore.

Mr. Rushmore spoke against granting Sullivan's license. He said that Sullivan had been indicted; furthermore he thought there were enough saloons in the vicinity of the "boulevard," and last but not least, he conjectured that the place was disreputable. To all of these objections Mr. Hetfield made clear illustrations, vindicating the applicant.

No. 14 in the list of liquor license applications was that of Wm. A. Schorb, hotel, at No 11 East Front street, under the post office. His application was granted. Messrs Dunham, Jenkins, Newhall and Rushmore voting "No."

Mr. Rushmore made a bold stand on granting the above license, and he said that in his estimation the Council would be put to shame by granting it, inasmuch as the wives and daughters of the members would most likely have occasion to go in and out of the post office, under which a licensed bar would be doing business.

Mr. Newhall spoke with reference to the Sullivan license, adding that he had been told that the applicant had been convicted for keeping a disorderly house. Corporation Counsel Marsh was asked to make a statement. He said Sullivan was tried here for illegal selling, and the jury failed to agree; next he was indicted and convicted for keeping a disorderly house, and last week he was acquitted by a jury at Elizabeth, on a charge of fraud, an indictment having been found against him by the Grand Jury on that count.

President Moffett maintained that if the law had been enforced during the past year forty or fifty convictions would have undoubtedly resulted.

Mr. E. F. Thorn's application, was the last one presented, making fifteen in all. It was granted by a vote of 8 to 3.

Mr. Newhall asked for information concerning the progress of the water works, and Mr. Hetfield answered that thus far the company had only been boring for water. He was not prepared to state whether or not the company had decided upon a location.

Mr. Smith reported progress on street railway matters. He further stated that the committee had examined the claim of Mr. J. H. Wilson for 197½ tons of stone, but could only find vouchers for 53 tons. Mr. Wilson's books had been shown to the committee, and they showed that three tons more than the bill called for or 200½ tons in all had been delivered. The bill was returned for correction.

A resolution was adopted fixing the fees of the delinquent tax collector as follows: For taxes back of 1888, ten per cent. in addition to the regular fees; for '88 and '89, five per cent. in addition to the regular fees.

An ordinance was introduced amending the liquor license ordinance. It was read twice, and ordered engrossed and advertised. The proposed ordinance makes it possible for the Netherwood Hotel to take out a license from May 1, to November 1, the fee being fixed at $400.

Mr. Dunham introduced an ordinance to amend the ordinance establishing the office of city physician and the prescribing of his duties. It was read twice, adopted, and ordered engrossed and advertised.

Mr. Hetfield offered resolutions which prevailed, requesting the collector to make a return of the tax delinquents on or before March 1, next; also that when the returns are in the city judge issue his warrant to the delinquent tax collector, the latter to proceed with the collection of taxes in accordance with the law.

Upon motion of Mr Newhall all of the papers relating to an old claim of T. W. Morrison, together with all resolutions bearing on the subject were taken from the table and referred to the Law and Ordinance Committee; likewise a claim by the estate of the late Geo. P. Suydam.

The matter of fixing the salary of the city judge was then taken up, and the compensation was fixed at $600 per annum, all present voting aye.

The Auditing Committee reported on a batch of claims for street work sent in at the last meeting, and they were ordered paid.

Council adjourned at 10:30 P. M.

AT ST. MARY'S CHURCH.

Monsignor Seton Lectures in Aid of a Fund to be Used for the Benefit of the Poor.

The Right Rev. Dr. Seton lectured Sunday night at 8 o'clock in St. Mary's church, on the subject: "Shrines of the Holy Land." He has just returned from a visit to these sacred places, and as he is an entertaining speaker the lecture was listened to with great interest by the audience that completely filled the large edifice.

Dr. Seton was one of a party of Catholic prelates who made a pilgrimage to the Holy Land recently. The Plains of Sharon on the way to Jerusalem, he described as most beautiful, with its myriads of flowers of variegated colors, including roses, and from whence comes the name of the flower known as the "Rose of Sharon." A short distance outside the city of Jerusalem the party were met by the American Consul, who kindly offered his protection to them. The pilgrims carried an American banner with a cross on top, but had been warned that it would be dangerous to enter Jerusalem with that emblem; that it would excite the wrath of the Turks; but with the protection of this country, represented by its Consul, as told above, the journey into Jerusalem was made with safety.

Nazareth, one of the places visited, the Monsignor described as a most beautiful city, with its white houses and red tiles, situated on the side of a hill. He described at length the public fountain of Nazareth, from whence the only water in the place is obtained. He also told of his visit to Bethlehem, the birthplace of our Lord. His description of the Dead Sea and the River Jordan were also very interesting. He also visited Mt. Carmel, on the top of which is the convent bearing that name. The reverend gentleman told about the Garden of Olives, which he had the pleasure of going through. The garden is in charge of a Franciscan father, who has been there for fifty-nine years. The pilgrims kept together until their arrival at Paris on the return journey, when they separated.

It would be impossible for us to give in detail the many shrines and places visited by the party and told of last night, but have endeavored, as far as our space would permit, to tell the most interesting. After the lecture a collection was taken up to start a fund to be used for the benefit of the poor of the parish, the dispensing of which will be in charge of the Sisters of Charity.

ASSAULTED HIS WIFE AND FLED.

A Colored Man Beats his White Wife and Escapes to Easton—He Returns to Spend 20 Days in Jail.

Henry Furrough, a coal black negro who is married to a white woman, and who is alleged to have beat his wife and sister about three months ago, at their home in "Battle Row" on West Fourth street, escaping to Easton afterward, returned to this city on Saturday evening, and was arrested by Officer Lynch and locked up.

During his absence Furrough wrote threatening letters to his wife which she never answered, the last letter having come in care of grocer Westphal of Liberty street. On Saturday night Mrs. Furrough heard of her husband's presence in town and about midnight she notified the police, with the above result.

On Monday the prisoner pleaded guilty to a charge of disorderly conduct preferred by one Eliza Thompson, his wife having refused to lodge a complaint against her husband. Judge Codington thereupon fined the prisoner ten dollars, and in default of the payment of which he is to be committed to the County Jail for 20 days.

The Burglars Frightened Away.

Some of the women folks who were all alone in the boarding house at the corner of Third street and Washington, February 11, found a lamp lighted and the scuttle open upstairs. The police were sent for, and Officer Giese was promptly on the spot. The women positively asserted that none of them had lighted the lamp. Then the officer made a search, and found that whoever had been in the house had escaped meanwhile, as the scuttle was shut again. Some of the tenants who were about to move, had just sold a quantity of furniture and it is supposed the burglars knew the money was in the house and that the men folks were all away.

The Ladies' Favorite.

The newest fashion in ladies' hats will doubtless cause a flutter of pleasurable excitement among the fair sex. Ladies are always susceptible to the changes of a fashion plate; and the more startling the departure, the more earnest the gossip over the new mode. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a positive cure for all [illegible]. This sovereign panacea can be relied on in all cases. It builds up the poor, haggard and dragged-out victim, and gives her renewed hope and a fresh lease of life. It is the only medicine for woman's peculiar ailments, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money refunded. Read printed guarantee on bottle wrapper.

MARY E. WILSON CHAPEL.

The Memorial at Washingtonville to be Dedicated on Washington's Birthday.

The beautiful new Mary E. Wilson Memorial chapel is nearing completion. In artistic design and beauty of finish, it will be a credit to architect and builders as well as to its projector who has been lavish in expenditure in order to complete it in the quaintness of style originally proposed.

The difficulties to be met and overcome in a building of this kind, can scarcely be foreseen. The committee in charge hoped to be able to occupy the chapel about last Christmas, but circumstances prevented. Little more remains to be done. The chapel will be ready for occupancy by the 23d inst., when dedication services will be held in which some of the leading clergymen of Plainfield will take part. The building will be thrown open to the friends of the Sunday school and the public generally.

No event in Washingtonville has ever aroused such general interest as the new chapel. United and earnest have the efforts been to make the surroundings conform to the beauty of the building. But some things yet remain that must necessarily be delayed until Spring as the ground is too wet to work at present.

TAKING THE MATTER IN HIS OWN HANDS.

Ex-Collector Sheridan Arrested While Trying to Get Back His Own Property.

Mr. Patrick Sheridan, ex-County Collector, and one of the executors named in a paper said to be the will of the late William Moore of this city, was in the Butler Street Police Court, Brooklyn, Saturday, charged with larceny. He entered Hills Brothers' livery stable on Hicks street Friday night, and was leading a horse out when arrested. He stated the horse was stolen from him three weeks ago, and was worth $2,000. It was traced to Jersey City, but was spirited away while he was engaged in procuring the necessary papers for its recovery. The same thing occurred in Newark, and this time he determined to take the matter into his own hands.

He had $4,000 cash when arrested, and promptly furnished bail for his appearance on Tuesday. Mr. Sheridan ran for Mayor of Elizabeth on the Democratic ticket and was defeated. He was Alderman for several terms, and is one of the most prominent and respected of politicians in this county.

A Harbinger of Summer.

At Reynolds' pharmacy they are once more again crushing strawberries for those who love the succulent soda water and want the daintiest syrups.

Railroad Men in Conference.

General Superintendent J. H. Olhausen, Superintendent W. H. Peddie, of the New Jersey Central division, and Captain Hopper, Superintendent of the Newark and New York division, held a conference in New York a few days ago relative to the petition for the extension of the road through Newark, and thence to this city. No definite decision was arrived at.

Joe English at Reform Hall.

Sunday evening next promises to mark an event of great interest in Reform Hall, as the seventh anniversary of the Plainfield Reform Club's organization will then be observed with appropriate exercises, and among the speakers will be the popular and distinguished temperance advocate Joseph English, a gentleman well and favorably known in Plainfield, and who was one of the originators of the club. A crowded house will no doubt hail his presence.

Free Lecture on Food Adulteration.

Mr. E. Worrall, who is to lecture Wednesday afternoon, February 26, in Music Hall, on "Food Adulteration," is doing good work in stirring up communities on this interesting subject. Every housekeeper, who takes an interest in questions touching the welfare of the home, will certainly be present. This work is done under the auspices of the well-known house of Joseph Burnett & Co., which is a guarantee of its reliability.

Valentine Sociable.

A novel entertainment styled a "Valentine Sociable," was held in the Sunday School room of the First Presbyterian church, on Friday, and it was largely attended. The programme rendered included three beautiful solos by Miss Grant, a recitation by Mr. Thos Blair, entitled "Valentine's Day," a duett by Miss Petrie and Mrs Van Dyke, and some vocal selections by Mr. Martin. Each one present received a token in the shape of a valentine, which they received by applying at a post office, located in one corner of the room.

During the evening, cake, chocolate and cream were passed around, and at about ten o'clock the entertainment came to an end.

Only a "Small Job."

Ex-Councilman J. K. Myers, who is Treasurer of the American Bank Note company, and is the head of its department of printing with nine hundred employees under him, says the printing of many million postage stamps for the Government, is but a "small job."

Consequently the sickly green postage stamp has but a few more days to live. During the coming week arrangements will be completed by the Post Office Department for a change in color of stamps of nearly all denominations. The new two-cent stamp will be a deep carmine, and the one-cent stamp will remain a bright hue, as at present. The order for the manufacture of the new stamps is almost finished, and as soon as a stock of them can be obtained the unpopular green stamp will be wiped out of existence.

Exercises Upon the Presentation of the Jackson Flag.

At the last meeting of the Board of Education, Mr. J. W. Jackson presented a flag to the pupils of the Irving school. The formal presentation exercises will take place at the Irving school building, Monroe avenue, on Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The exercises will consist of speeches and patriotic recitations, together with the singing of National songs by the scholars and members of the High School Glee Club.

The Rev. Chas. B. Mitchell will present the flag in behalf of Mr. Jackson. Dr Hurlbut will accept it on the part of the Board, and in turn present it to Vice Principal Gilbert who will accept the flag for the pupils of the school. Parents and friends of the scholars and all others who are interested, are cordially invited to be present.

A Reception Tendered the Crescent Nine.

The base ball season in Plainfield doesn't open until Saturday afternoon, April 5, yet the enthusiasm of the people was shown Saturday evening by the large attendance of members and invited guests that gathered in the Crescent League club house to meet the new members of the nine.

Livingston, who was the crack pitcher last season of the Brooklyn L team; Catcher Jones, Short stop Martin, Second baseman Lufbery, and First baseman Wiegand, of last year's Rahway team, the champions of the State; were all present and congratulated upon having been signed by the Crescents. The Plainfield nine will play at home every Saturday, and the managers have already scheduled games with the strongest semi-professional teams in the country, including Princeton and Rutgers college nines.

A TRUSTEE SPEAKS WITH WISDOM.

The Scotch Plains School Building Architects Unequalled in the Country.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—My attention has only recently been called to a "reading notice" (i. e., a paid for article,) in your issue of January 23, in which certain references are made to our new school building, which may perhaps give to those people in Plainfield who are not in the habit of visiting the beautiful little hamlet, an erroneous impression as to what is being done in District No. 14. I am told also that the item has been copied (minus the three stars * * *) in some of the county papers, and so may do harm. As I have the good, or ill, fortune to be one of the Trustees, will you kindly permit me to say a few words?

The essence of the article would seem to be that "Fanwood" architects and builders were not employed. It is more than probable that they would have been employed if the appropriation asked for had been voted at the April meeting. But at the June meeting when the $18,000 was raised, an Advisory Committee was appointed to act with the Trustees, composed of Mr. A. D. Shepard and Dr J. Ackerman Coles of Scotch Plains, and the late Mr. J. O. Cottrell of "Fanwood"—gentlemen well and favorably known in Plainfield. And it was by the advice of this committee that the provisional plans in contemplation by the Trustees were laid aside, and both the design and the supervision of construction placed in charge of Messrs McKim, Mead and White, the New York architects.

I need hardly say that this firm enjoys a National, almost a World wide, reputation, and the circumstances which resulted in their undertaking the work, were most fortunate for District No. 14. Their work is not confined to New York or its vicinity—many important buildings in Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Newport, Long Branch and elsewhere having been erected under their supervision. Among other buildings in course of construction by them, I will mention a white marble mansion for Mr E. D. Morgan of New York, at Newport, R. I., and the new Madison Square Garden, while the people of the metropolis have already subscribed over $68,000 to realize in marble the Washington Memorial Arch, the design of the Mr. White of this firm. To the minds of the cultivated people of Plainfield it will be evident that the taste and judgement of such architects may be safely opposed to the æsthetic sense of the "Fanwood Old-timer" referred to in the communication in question, whose view of their work would seem perhaps to infer a possibly larger experience in reformatory than in scholastic edifices.

The building when completed will be an honor to the District and to the gentlemen to whose cultivated and refined taste its construction is due.

Respectfully yours,
DAVID P. HALL.

Garden Heliotrope Perfume Given Away.

At the free lecture, next Wednesday afternoon, in Music Hall, each lady present will be presented with a bottle of "Burnett's Perfume of Heliotrope." If this is not a sufficient attraction, the high character of the house under whose auspices the lecture is given, which is a guarantee that everything will be exactly as represented, ought to pack the Hall to its fullest capacity.

A Bridal Reception.

At their handsome apartments in The Hamilton, Fifth avenue and 42d street, New York, Tuesday evening, a reception was tendered to a large circle of admirers by Mr. and Mrs. Nicolas Geoffroy. They had just returned from a wedding trip to Havana, and as it was the first opportunity their friends had had of offering their sincere good wishes and congratulations in person, a goodly company availed themselves of the occasion. Mrs. Geoffroy was formerly Miss Jennie Clarkson, of this city, and is the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. R. Clarkson, old residents of Plainfield, whose Winter home is at Fifth avenue and 39th street, New York.

The reception was a very elegant affair and quite an event even in New York society. The floral decorations of the rooms the music and the supper were upon a scale of unlimited expense. The Rev. Dr. Yerkes, who has been for years the pastor of the Clarkson family, was among those present from Plainfield. The groom is a wealthy wholesale jeweler. Mr. and Mrs. Geoffroy will remain at The Hamilton until the season out of town opens. Mrs. Geoffroy is at home on Tuesdays.

Young People's Sociable.

The Young People's League of the First Baptist church held a sociable in the lecture room last Thursday. Mr. S. B. Joseph, president of the League presided. There was a large number of the young people of the church and Sunday school present. Among the attractions, Miss Mabel Maxson gave a piano solo, and Mr. E. C. Pease sang the popular song entitled, "White Wings," accompanied on the piano by Miss Kittie Case, after which a short business meeting was held by the members of the League as to the advisability of changing the night of their prayer meeting which is now held on Sunday evening to Friday at 8 o'clock, which was unanimously carried. Mr. Harold Serrell then gave an interesting and instructive talk on amateur photography, and there was a number of amateur photographs, from different members of the Camera club on exhibition around the room. Mr. Ernest Marx who was to have taken a flash light of the audience sometime during the evening was unable to be present on account of being confined to his home by illness, which was quite a disappointment to all those present. Subsequently refreshments were served and a very social time was had by all until about ten o'clock, when they adjourned to their homes.

The sociable was under the management of the Social and the Reception Comittees of which the following are members:

Social Committee—Miss Mamie French, Miss Ella Milligan, Miss M. Thorn, and Miss Annie Woodland.

Reception Committee—Mr. George F. Brown, chairman, Miss Nellie White, Miss Coriell, Mrs. B. Vail, and Messrs L. H. Bigelow, G. Hagel, Ed. Wilson, H. Serrell.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

The New Era Washer

Is a simple, easy and practical application of the ONLY principle ever known, discovered or practiced in washing clothes, viz: the forcing of water through the article to be cleansed.

From the old "pounding-barrel" down through all the improvements in Washing Machines, washing boards, etc., to the present day, this one principle is recognized and acted upon as the actual cleansing process. Rubbing on a washboard is not cleansing (else rub them when dry) it is simply one process (and a tiresome one) of forcing the water through just that portion of the article that is subjected to the pressure of the hand; therefore every part of each article must be brought under that pressure to be cleansed; whereas, by the NEW ERA WASHER, every stroke of the piston or plunger forces two quarts of water (suds) through six or eight inches thickness of clothes, laid in the bottom of the tub; and this, too, with no more muscular effort than one rub of the hands from the top to the bottom of the washboard!

But as practical demonstration is more convincing to many than published statements, we leave the acceptance of the foregoing to those who are willing to obtain a correct knowledge before forming a conclusion in this matter. See large circulars for further particulars.

J. M. PICKELL, Esq., No. 111 WEST FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD, N. J., Local Agent for this section, will respond to inquiries, and also to a limited number of applications per week, to give a practical illustration of the working and merits of the NEW ERA WASHER.

KASKINE,
(THE NEW QUININE.)

Good Cheer Instead of Despondency; Energy by Day, Sleep at Night. No Opium.

A POWERFUL TONIC.
A Specific for Malaria, Rheumatism, Nervous Prostration.

THE MOST SCIENTIFIC AND SUCCESSFUL BLOOD PURIFIER. Superior to quinine.

Mrs. Caroline Austin, Astoria, N. Y., says: "Last Winter I ran down so rapidly from malaria that I would faint away sitting in my chair. I heard of Kaskine, the new quinine. Using it three weeks I was well."

W. L. Holcombe, M. D., late Prof. in New York Opth. Hospital and N. Y. Medical College, writes: "After five months' use of Kaskine I cheerfully state that I have found it superior to quinine in its specific power, and entirely free from causing any disturbance in the hearing."

Kaskine can be taken without any special medical advice. $1.00 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. Sold by druggists or sent by mail on receipt of price.

-FREE LECTURE!-
ON FOOD ADULTERATION,
On Wednesday Afternoon,
FEBRUARY 26,
BY
Mr. E. B. WORRELL,
Representative of Messrs Joseph Burnett & Co., Boston.

Ladies—especially housekeepers—and gentlemen accompanied by ladies, are cordially invited. Babes in arms and children unaccompanied by parents not admitted.

At the close of the first talk on BURNETT'S FLAVORING EXTRACTS which follows the lecture, present will be given a bottle of Burnett's Perfume of Garden Heliotrope and a Burnett's floral book, as souvenirs of the occasion.

EACH LADY

The high character of the house under whose auspices this work is done, upon which throughout the world stands only for strictly fine, gilt-edged goods, is an absolute guarantee that everything will be exactly as represented.

Doors open at 1:30 o'clock. Commences at 2 o'clock.

The exquisite perfume which will be given away is made from natural Heliotrope, and not an imitation. Its odor is lasting, and is pronounced by connoisseurs to be unequalled even by the best French perfumes of the same name.

REMEMBER THE TIME,
Wednesday Afternoon, February 26.

Perhaps no local disease has puzzled and baffled the medical profession more than nasal catarrh. While not immediately fatal it is among the most distressing and disgusting ills the flesh is heir to, and the records show very few or no cases of radical cure of chronic catarrh by any of the multitude of modes of treatment until the introduction of Ely's Cream Balm a few years ago. The success of this preparation has been most gratifying and surprising.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST. - - City Editor.

—Oh, for a Y. M. C. A. building.

—It will require about 100 incandescent lamps to light the First Baptist church.

—The hardware dealers announce a reduction in the price of single and club skates.

—Mr and Mrs. John Kilbride of Peace street, have removed to Manchester, Long Island.

—Dog-catcher James Babbitt, Friday, gathered in a fine hound dog on North avenue.

—A man from Rahway was arrested by the police Sunday for fast driving, and next morning he was fined $10.

—Gazelle Engine company took its apparatus out for a wash, on Friday, and the engine worked satisfactorily.

—City Judge Codington's time was taken up Tuesday in examining the city's poor. Thirteen in all applied for assistance.

—Cyprus Commandery, No. 6, K. T., of this city, met for drill on Monday evening. The Commandery now has 38 members.

—There will be shooting at both live and inanimate targets on the Middlesex Gun Club grounds at Dunellen, all day, Washington's Birthday.

—The series of revival services which the Rev. C. B. Mitchell is holding in Vincent chapel, this week, attract large and interested audiences.

—The annual reports of the various Township Committees throughout the county, are being published in pamphlet form by THE PRESS job department.

—Mr. M. Higgins of South Plainfield, now has charge of Mr. John I. Holly's Park avenue farm, since the death of Edward Burk, Mr. Holly's trusted employee.

—Mr. John H. Tier of this city says that he has cut ice ten inches thick as late in the season as March 10, but this has not been accomplished in recent years.

—The moving of the Crescent Avenue church organ, will begin next Monday morning. It will take about two weeks to place it in its new position at the right of the pulpit.

—A bed of crocuses in full bloom out doors on the lawn at the corner of Broadway and Ninth street, is an object of much wonder and admiration, this 20th day of February.

—Messrs Coddington and Voorhies of the North Plainfield Township Committee have audited the books of Treasurer E. R. Fairchild and Collector H. N. Spencer, and found them correct.

—A social and supper will be given by the Ladies Aid Society of the Congregational church on Friday evening of this week. Supper will be served in the church parlors from six o'clock on.

—It is estimated that about $300 of damage was done to Mr. William Stoodgood's handsome lawn at Netherwood, during the reception given at his residence on Saturday afternoon last, by reckless driving.

—The sale of reserved seats for the entertainment to be given by the members of the Crescent League, will begin to-morrow morning at the pharmacies of R. M. Stelle and L. W. Randolph. Get on the line early.

—Dr. Andrew Manning informed a PRESS reporter, that the number of cases of sickness among the poor of this city is on the decrease. There are yet however, a number of cases where the patients are dangerously ill.

—The interior of the new chapel of the Crescent Avenue church, in many respects, is unequalled in the State. The colored windows are especially rich. Two new Steinway grand pianos are among the costly furnishings.

—The Water Works company will soon begin to tear up the streets for laying the water mains. The company is now looking for a place in which to house one hundred Italians, who will be put to work at an early date.

—On account of a disagreement of the jury in the case of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals vs. Walter Smalley, Justice Nadyne will re-try the case. The date for the second trial has not yet been decided upon.

—A surprise party was tendered to the Misses Schwartz, at their home on West Front street, on Friday. Prof S. D. Frasse furnished the music for the twenty odd couples, which passed the evening in dancing. A beautiful collation was served during the evening.

—Mrs. Dr Tomlinson of this city, President of the Union county W. C. T. U., will speak at the Methodist church, Scotch Plains, Saturday evening at 8 o'clock. Subject—"The National Convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, 1889." The public is invited.

—The match set down for Tuesday evening, April 1, between the Somersets, of Somerville, and the Olympics, of this city, will be rolled on the Olympic alleys instead of the "Somersets" as first stated in error by those who made up the schedule of the Central Bowling League.

—There was sent to THE PRESS office Monday in full bloom, a specimen of a beautiful triple Christmas loch cactus, plucked from a plant owned by Wm. Beekman of East Third street. The flower is considered something remarkable on account of its being of the triple leaf pattern.

—A common sense, practical little washing machine is advertised in these columns, today, that gives perfect satisfaction wherever used. The representative, Mr. Pickell, will canvass the city soon and show its merits. It is worthy of a trial, and always sells when thoroughly tested.

—There was a full rehearsal in Music Hall, last night, by the members of the Crescent League Minstrel company, and rehearsals will be continued almost every night until the date of the entertainment, February 25. Reserved seats will be on sale at Randolph's and Stelle's pharmacies on the 20th inst.

—A special service of song was held in the First Presbyterian church, Sunday night that was thoroughly enjoyed by the large audience present. Mr. Lee of Elizabeth, presided at the organ, and the choir and congregation joined in the service. Rev. Dr. [illegible], the pastor, preached a short sermon.

—Collector H. N. Spencer of North Plainfield reports that the collection of taxes for the past year is up to the average, and that the collection of back taxes is above the average of the amounts collected in in former years. The names of the delinquents have been filed with the County Clerk at Somerville.

—Mr. N. Yoshida, a young Japanese student, will deliver a lecture on the customs and habits of his people, in the lecture room of Trinity Reformed church, to-morrow evening at eight o'clock. He will be attired in Japanese costume, and the lecture will be very interesting. Admission free. All are welcome.

—The largest audience that was ever gathered in Music Hall, will be seen on Tuesday evening of next week, when the local minstrel show will take place. Five hundred tickets have been sold already. The diagram of reserved seats will begin to-morrow morning at L. W. Randolph's and R. M. Stelle's pharmacies.

PERSONALS.

Mr. Samuel Wallace of Baltimore, has returned to this city on a visit.

Dr. R. K. Carroll occupied the pulpit in the M. E. church, Sunday morning.

Mr. Adam Nicholson, the evangelist, preached in Hope chapel Sunday night.

Mr. Harry Blackwell, of Easton, Md., is visiting relatives on Park place, North Plainfield.

Mrs. John Green and son, Ralston, of Salem, N. J., are spending a week with Mrs J. Laing of Dunellen.

Mr. Daniel VanWinkle, is convalescing from an attack of bronchitis, at his home corner of Mercer avenue and Duer street.

Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Runyon and Miss Annie Boice, all of Park avenue, have gone to Washington, D. C., to spend a few days.

The young son of Mr. S. C. Terry of Richmond street, who has been so seriously ill with diphtheria, is slowly recovering.

Mr. James Clark and wife of West Seventh street, returned on Friday night from St. Louis, where they have been for about two months.

Miss Jennie VanWinkle of Madison avenue, arrived home last week after an absence of nearly two weeks among friends at Albany, N. Y.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Matthews of North Plainfield entertained a select few of their friends at their home on Grove street, Monday evening of last week.

Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Haviland, of Rock View avenue, celebrated their crystal wedding February 12, by entertaining their many friends at a "cobweb party."

Mr. C. W. Hillman conducted the devotional exercises in Warren Mission chapel, Sunday night, and the usual choir with orchestral accompaniment furnished the music.

Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Terry of Richmond street, have again been afflicted by the loss of their twelve-year-old daughter, Ella, whose death occurred on Thursday from diphtheria.

Miss Bertie Stokes of Philadelphia, who has been visiting Miss Mabel Woodruff of this city, returned home Friday. Miss Woodruff accompanied her, and will remain until after Easter.

The members of the "Dorcas Society" held an evening sociable at the home of Mr. Jacob Voehl on Somerset street, last Thursday. Games and refreshments were included in the programme.

At their home on West Fourth street, on Friday, was celebrated the anniversary of the wedding of John W. Murray, Jr., and Miss Amelia Dowley. A number were present and thoroughly enjoyed the occasion.

At the bride's home, 215 Somerset street, on Thursday afternoon of next week at three o'clock, will take place the marriage of Miss Carrie Meeker Woodland and Mr. Isaac Collins Ireland of Philadelphia.

Mount Olive Baptist church was packed to its utmost, Sunday night, by a congregation that were attentive listeners to an eloquent sermon by the Rev. J. H. Bailey, pastor of the Shiloh Baptist church, Elizabeth.

At his home at Neshanic, N. J., on Feb. 10, occurred the death of Mr. Geo. Gano, father of Mrs. Wilson Fulper, of this city. Mr. Gano was seventy-eight years of age, and his death resulted from apoplexy. The funeral took place on Thursday.

At her home in New Brooklyn, Sunday, occurred the death of Emeline, widow of the late Firman Runyon, in the 79th year of her age. The funeral took place from the Baptist church at New Brooklyn, Tuesday at 2 P. M.

Mrs. David Franklyn Harbaugh, nee Miss Emma Broome, of this city, was at home afternoon February 12, at her residence, No. 47 West Fifty-eighth street, New York. She was assisted in receiving by Miss Miller of this city, and Miss Alys Bennett of New York.

The last reception before Lent, was tendered the pupils of Rodman Seminary, on East Fifth street, by the principal, Mrs. M. C. Dingee, Saturday evening. About 30 were present. Dancing was one of the features of the evening, and everybody had a good time.

The State Encampment, Grand Army of the Republic came to a close at Trenton on Friday night. Among the officers elected was Past Commander J. N. Atwood of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, of this city, to the office of Junior Vice Department Commander.

Miss Agnes Langhorne, daughter of Mr. F. C. Langhorne, gave a birthday party to a few of her friends at her parent's home on Putnam avenue, from four to seven o'clock Thursday afternoon. The occasion was one to be long remembered by those who participated.

It may be in the nature of things, that good taste in classical music superinduces bad taste in modern art. Yet it is none the less a subject of remark that so fine a programme as is given at the Mendelssohn Club musicales, should be printed in so illegible and altogether disreputable a manner.

Mr. John A Laing of Quakertown, Hunterdon county, is visiting relatives on West Fourth street, this city. Mr. Laing is a peach grower, and he advances the information that many of his peach trees are now in bloom, owing to the open Winter, and that the crop of peaches is likely to be ruined.

At a concert in Chickering Hall, last Thursday, by the celebrated Rubinstein Club of New York, Miss Alice Holmes, of this city, sang an incidental solo in one of the part songs. The Club is composed entirely of women vocalists, and includes Annie Louise Carey and other great lights. Its patrons are New York's four hundred.

The Monday Afternoon Club, at the Seminary Monday, enjoyed the opera of Lohengrin read by Miss Anna Titsworth and sung in parts by Mrs. Myers, Miss Holmes, Mrs. Saunders, and Mr. Runyon who was the only man admitted within the shrine. Miss May and Miss Erskine were the instrumentalists of the occasion.

According to the advance sheet diagraming the location of the Assemblymen in the present session of the Legislature, Assemblyman Ulrich of this city occupies seat No. 15, which is in the second row to the left of Speaker Heppenheimer, and next to Assemblyman John Norris of Rockaway, Morris county, who occupies a seat adjoining the main aisle.

The ladies of the Trinity Reformed church, who had in charge the bazaar that closed in the Chautauqua building, on Friday, desire to publicly express their thanks to those who by their donations added to the attractiveness of the affair, and to those who by their patronage aided in the realization of almost $300 profit that will be devoted towards the indebtedness of the Church.

Mr. S. A. Davis, formerly of this city, but now of the Elm House, Elizabeth, who was painfully injured by a fall about ten days ago, has so far recovered from the injuries he received as to leave his room. Mr. Harry Davis and wife of North Plainfield, removed to Elizabeth on Saturday and have taken up their residence with Mr Davis' parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Davis, at the Elm House.

Mr H. VanName, the oyster dealer of Park avenue, Thursday sold to Mrs. Julia Terrill of Arlington avenue, his Queen Anne cottage at the corner of Fifth and Washington streets, for $3,500. The building contains nine rooms, and is equipped with all of the modern conveniences. Mr. VanName will hereafter occupy his cottage on West Front street, which he will soon begin to remodel.

Mrs. E. L. Goddard is visiting at New Bedford, Mass., for three weeks.

Miss Millie Ferguson has so entirely recovered her good health, as to be out again.

Mrs. J. B. Atwood returned home on Saturday from a visit of three weeks at Atlantic City.

Mrs. Charles Clark of Ashaway, R. I., is visiting her cousin, Mrs. T. C. Smith of New street.

Mr J. Allen Sangston is back in his old position with Mr. L. Warren Randolph who will take a long rest.

Mr Fred Dedrick formerly of Reynolds' pharmacy and now of Kingston, N. Y., has been visiting friends in this city.

Mr S. C. Milliken who has been away searching for better health along the shore, is home again much improved.

An infant daughter was born to Mails and Ella Olsond of No. 215 West Third street, at ten o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. Lewis R. Blackford of North Plainfield, is at Trenton, attending the Grand Lodge, K. of P., as representative of Unity Lodge, No. 102, K. of P., of this city.

The grocers and drygood's men will close store at noon on Washington's Birthday. Housekeepers would do well to remember this fact, and make their purchases accordingly.

Burglars entered the home of Mr. Chas. K. Moore, the water works contractor, on Tuesday, and stole his ulster. Mr. Moore was at a progressive party, and so fortunately was dressed in his best suit of clothes.

Dr. T. H. Tomlinson and Mrs. Tomlinson of this city, were included in the large audience which listened to Miss Frances E. Willard, National President of the W. C. T. U., in Taylor's Opera House, Trenton, on Tuesday.

A number of the prominent men of New Brunswick were present at the men's meeting, held in the Y. M. C. A., rooms in that city, on Sunday, and listened to an interesting address by Mr. William D. Murray of this city.

The "Silent Four" will tender the late Good and Welfare Committee of Franklin Council, J. O. U. A. M., a reception on Friday evening, (Washington's Birthday Eve.,) in Taylor's Hall, corner of Park and North avenues.

Mrs. Anna Myers of East Front street, is carrying on a good work. Every Sunday she teaches a class of Chinese scholars in the hall over the City National Bank, and some of them are becoming greatly interested in Bible study.

The health of Mr. Carmon Parse is not so satisfactory just now as his friends would desire. He is at Knoxville, Tenn., at the home of Mrs. Parse's brother, Mr. John H. Honeyman. A most serious complication has arisen that is extremely weakening to the patient, and he is confined to the bed. Dr. Edward Rushmore, of Park avenue, wired a prescription Thursday, and as the complaint has always before been amenable to this treatment, good news of the patient may be hoped for.

"Ladies' Night" at the Crescent League club house, last Monday, was a thoroughly pleasing event. The bowling match between teams of ladies, was contested in just as good humor as if they were real men. Miss Fritts won the first prize, and Miss Kline the second. Although the members were denied the privilege of smoking, they were present in numbers and staid late. The ladies subsequently served a bountiful supper in the composition of which each had done her best in the way of tempting dainties.

A GREAT SUCCESS.

The Opening of a Bazaar by the Trinity Ladies and King's Daughters.

The bazaar which a number of ladies have had in course of preparation for some time past, opened in the Chautauqua Building Thursday, and the attendance on the opening night was very large, the commodious hall in which the bazaar was held being densely filled with people.

On entering the hall one's eye came in contact with a very pretty sight. Handsomely decorated booths and tables were located in convenient places, around which a crowd of eager purchasers pressed to and fro during the evening. Pretty waitresses, members of the King's Daughters, had an eye to business, and were promptly on hand attending to the wants of their patrons. The oppressive heat in the room made the sale of iced cream and lemonade correspondingly large, and the receipts from these two items alone were very satisfactory. The various tables and booths were presided over by the following persons in a highly commendable manner:

Candy—Miss Emma U. King, Miss Jennie VanWinkle.

Lemonade—The Misses Etta Howland and Lizzie Dunn.

Jack Horner and his pie—Masters Chester See, Robbie Meeker and Willie Vandeventer.

Hand-painted articles—Mrs. Wm. G. E. See, Mrs. J. F. MacDonald.

Fancy articles—Mrs. Charles P. Leggett, Mrs. Robert Meeker and Mrs. C. Schenck.

The Surprise Was Complete.

Mr. John J. Kenney of East Second street was agreeably surprised by about thirty of his intimate friends and acquaintances, at his home, Monday night, the occasion being a surprise party arranged by Mr. Thos. Hughes and other near friends. Dancing and the playing of games was interspersed with refreshments.

Pawnbroker Dreier Again the Victim.

Mr. Samuel Dreier, the pawnbroker of West Front street is again the victim of a conspiring enemy. When the clothing firm of Brown Bros. absconded recently leaving Mr. Dreier a creditor to the extent of about $2,000 the latter took out a writ of attachment on the few goods left in the store on North avenue. The goods were stored in an empty house at No 122 South Second street.

Sometime between Saturday and Monday, the place was broken into and most of the goods were carried away. Constable Moffett was to have sold the goods at auction Monday afternoon but when he arrived at the house there was but little left to offer his customers. Suspicion points to a certain individual.

FRAUD AND MISREPRESENTATION.

A Former Employe of Mr. Leo Daft Succeeds in Obtaining a $50 Check Under False Pretenses—The Man Makes Good His Escape, but a Warrant is Out for His Arrest.

While Mr. Leo Daft, the electrician, and his family were at dinner Feb. 12, a man by the name of N. B. Amory, who had previously worked for Mr. Daft as superintendent of construction in the erection of the latter's electric street railway at Asbury Park, called at the house, and told a pitiful story. He said he had a child lying dead at Somerville, whose body he wanted to forward to Baltimore. The fellow told a plausible story, and Mr. Daft advanced him a $50 check on the First National Bank. It has since been ascertained that he had no wife or child living, and instead of going to Somerville, he went to Force's Hotel on North avenue, where he prevailed upon the proprietor to accept and hold the check in payment for his board. This Mr. Force reluctantly did, also advancing the stranger $10 in cash.

Thursday Mr. Daft discovered that the check had been obtained by fraud and misrepresentation, and he attempted to stop the payment of the same. Check had been cashed. Amory has left the city, although a warrant is out for his arrest. It is said that the man left unpaid bills amounting to about $300 when he was discharged from the Asbury Park job nearly three years ago.

It is also said that Amory bought a turkey and a leg of mutton from Mr. Wm. VanSickle, the butcher, but he was not fortunate enough to get away with his purchases he having no money to pay for them.

$225 in Sick Benefits.

The Firemen's Relief Association held a meeting Feb. 12, and received the report of the Treasurer for the past two months, showing that during that time $226 have been paid out in sick benefits alone. The business of the meeting was of a routine nature.

An "Eighteen-Year-Old" Champion.

Much interest is being taken in the forth coming meeting of the New Jersey Chess Association. In refering to the matter, the Newark Advertiser says "The present holder of the State championship is Clarence L. Murphy, son of the Rev. T. Logan Murphy, an Episcopal clergyman, of Plainfield. He is only eighteen years old. He won the championship used last Winter easily defeating all the contesting players."

No Postponement.

Lecture will be given, rain or shine. It is especially urged that those attending the lecture, Wednesday afternoon in Music Hall, be prompt in attendance. Mr. Worrell is everywhere greeted with crowded houses, and this city will prove no exception to the rule; therefore, to get seats, the ladies should be at the house by quarter before 2 o'clock. Each lady present will be given a bottle of Heliotrope perfume. The lecture will not be postponed on account of weather.

The Local Minstrels.

The midsummer night's entertainment of amateur minstrelsy by the members of the Crescent League, is to take place at Music Hall, on the 25th inst. Reserved seats will be placed on sale at Stelle's and at Randolph's pharmacies, Thursday of this week.

The house will be packed. The young men of the company have been preparing for this event for several weeks, under the direction of that greatest of all interlocutors, Ed. Marble. Those who have attended the rehersals predict a performance quite as satisfactory as any of the professional organizations give.

Nothing Mean About That Fire.

Mr. Warren Squires the paper hanger, has been engaged for some days past fitting up the Chautauqua rooms at Park and North avenues, and night Feb. 12 he worked late so as to complete the job. Mr. Squires wanted some extra bordering, so about nine o'clock he went to Woolston & Buckle's store on North avenue. The store was dark but the door was unlocked, and Mr. Squires went in, made his selections and came out again locking the door after him.

When Mr. Squires entered the store in the dark he stumbled and fell over a step-ladder, narrowly escaping serious injury.

An Exciting Runaway.

A runaway of a most exciting nature, took place on East Front street, about four o'clock Tuesday afternoon, but so far as known no serious damage resulted. At that hour a stout lady, whose name could not be ascertained was seated in a cart driving a pony along that thoroughfare. When in front of the post office the animal made a lunge, and grasping the bit in his mouth, started off at a breakneck speed.

The lady bravely held the reins and guided the runaway horse in the middle of the street, and when last seen the rig was rounding the curve just beyond Richmond street. The occurrence created considerable excitement.

Repeating a Former Entertainment's Success.

Holy Cross Choir Guild gave their second reception to the gentlemen of the church in the Sunday school building, Feb. 12, and repeated the success of their former entertainment. A goodly number of gentlemen were present and they thoroughly enjoyed the evening.

A brief address by President William H. Hardy, was followed by a short impromptu programme of music and recitations. Then the refreshment committee got in their work, and those who still doubted the glory of the Guild were speedily converted, and the whole company put in the best of good humor.

Among those present, Dr. J. H. Carman, and Messrs A. C. Jessup and J. H. Douglas, were elected honorary members of the Guild.

Song Recital and Musicale.

A select gathering attended, upon invitation, a song recital and musicale on East Front street, last evening, given by the composer, Mr. Julian Jordan, assisted by Miss Edna Ray Park. Among the others who contributed toward the success of the entertainment, were Miss Mabelle Park, Mr. F. M. Dudley and Mr. P. L. Conde.

The programme consisted of vocal and instrumental music, each number of which was rendered in a highly creditable and accomplished manner.

Wedding Anniversary.

There was a large and happy gathering of members of the family and relatives at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Edward T. Dunn, on West Fourth street, Tuesday, to commemorate that couple's twenty-fifth wedding anniversary. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Dunn had secretly arranged for the gathering, which was a surprise to their parents, and all the more appreciated by them. The wedding cake at this anniversary feast was a "piece of work," and reflected great credit upon the makers and bakers of the article, Misses Lizzie and Ellie and Mrs. Fred Dunn.

—Mr. E. R. Fairchild of 21 East Front street, calls attention to his large stock of furniture, bedding, etc., which he invites the public to inspect.

OUR LONE CITIZEN REMEMBERS THE DAY WE CELEBRATE.

George Washington's Birthday Will Only be Commemorated by One Coat of Whitewash.

Tuesday the historic rocks known as "Washington Rock," situated on the brow of the mountain back of Dunellen, N. J., received their annual coat of whitewash in commemoration of the approaching birthday anniversary of the Father of his country.

This work is done at the expense and under the supervision of one of Plainfield's old and well known citizens, who for a number of years past has thus seen that the famed rocks are made conspicuous, while he escapes the notoriety he does not court, by the secrecy with which the work is accomplished.

THE HIGH SCHOOL CONCERT.

A Musical Success That Cleared Over One Hundred Dollars.

High School hall was packed, Tuesday night, with the parents and friends of the school who listened with pleasure to the concert by a select chorus of seventy voices from the High and Grammar schools. The chorus work was decidedly good for such young singers. The children sang with fine spirit and expression, especially in "The Heavens are Telling," and "The Lord is my Shepherd."

The High School Glee Club rendered several humorous part songs very acceptably. Master Fred Freeman of the Grammar school also sang his solos in a highly pleasing manner. The presence of Miss Alice Holmes and Mr. Elmer Runyon, as soloists, of course added greatly to the enjoyment of the evening. Miss Holmes was enthusiastically received and gave as her second selection, "Little Pilgrim," by Millard. Her voice shows a marked improvement during the past year. Both solos were sung with great sweetness and high artistic finish. Mr. Runyon is always a favorite. On his recall he sang "Dreams," by Strelezki. This duet was never sung here before. It was well received but they declined a recall.

The whole evening reflected great credit upon the musical director, Mr Hazell, and the pupils who have worked so hard to make the concert a success. The school will clear over one hundred dollars for the new singing books. Miss Mabel Maxson's accompaniments were remarkably praiseworthy.

A CARD OF THANKS.

We, the scholars and teachers of the High and Grammar schools, desire to express our earnest thanks to Miss Holmes, Mr. Runyon and others, who so kindly assisted in the concert of last evening. We keenly appreciate the hearty good will toward the school that prompted so generous an action.

'TWILL BE A DAZZLE-DAZZLE TOURNAMENT.

A Schedule of the Forty-two Games That Are to Decide the Bowling Championship of Central New Jersey.

A meeting of the Central Bowling League—the completion of which organization was told of exclusively in THE PRESS of Feb. 12—was held in the Crescent club house, this city, that evening.

President Burnet presided, and also represented the Elizabeth Athletic club as authorized in a communication from them. The other clubs represented were the Nameless and the Mondays, of Westfield, the Fanwoods and the Crescents. Messrs Kyte and Wilcox, the committee on schedule, presented the following dates of contest, which were adopted. The games will be rolled by teams of five men each:

Work for Children, Pays.

The social which has enjoyed by the Loyal Legion afternoon Feb. 12, at the W. C. T. U. rooms, gave satisfaction to both the members and teachers whose work grows more and more interesting every week under the direction of Mrs. Tomlinson, the present Superintendent.

Recitations and singing interspersed with cake and lemonade, proved very inticing, and the partakers will look forward to another by and by as future reward for attendance and good behavior.

THE SOLDIERS MONUMENT.

The Committee Hold a Meeting and Examine the Designs, but Take No Definite Action.

Gen'l Negley, as chairman, Nelson Runyon as Secretary and Messrs J. E. Stewart, S. A. Ginna, E. B. Clark, L. W. Serrell, J. R. Tracy, E. J. Olsson and Geo. W. Moore, representing the Soldiers Monument Committee, met in Winfield Scott Post room, Friday evening, and examined several new designs for a monument which it is intended to erect in this city in the near future. Designs were submitted from seven different granite companies, who have quarries in Maine, Vermont and Rhode Island. One company from Chicago was also represented at the meeting.

The committee took no definite action, but adjourned until Thursday evening of this week, when the matter will be placed in the hands of the sub-committee which was appointed two weeks ago, and the said committee it is expected will then award the contract.

HARD WORK AND DISAGREEABLE DUTIES.

The Lot of the City Judge is Not a Happy One.

The City Judge is kept busy these days not only in hearing complaints made against violators of the law, but every six weeks about forty different tax warrants are to be issued. Also, since the city has attained its present size, there are from fifty to seventy-five applicants for relief from the poor fund whose examination the City Judge is required to take in writing before the overseer can grant relief. While the Judge is considerate of all demands made, yet the unworthy need not apply, for in such instances relief will be refused as has already been the case several times.

SOMERSET COUNTY TEACHERS HERE.

The North Plainfield Instructors Contribute Able Papers on Public School Work.

The Somerset county teachers met in association at Raritan, Saturday. The association was called to order by President Cooley and opening exercises followed.

The first paper was by Miss Compton, who showed how Language should begin by conversation with children as soon as they enter school. To this should be added, step by step, written work until they have mastered letter writing and business forms.

The next paper was a plea for the Agassiz Society, by Miss Purdue of North Plainfield. In a pleasing manner she presented the subject, first objecting to the word plea because the society has no need for the word, its merits speaking for it. Miss Purdue plainly showed the great good of which the society was capable; noted some of the benefits and pleasures that had come to the society of North Plainfield, and showed future possibilities.

The next paper was "Progress in Educational Power," by Prof Bose, Principal of the North Plainfield school. In this paper the origin of normal schools and the great good they are doing was spoken of. Among some of the present powers mentioned were: Associations, Reading Circles, Societies of Science, and Manual Training; and the teachers were urged to take part in these movements. The roll was called and responded to by quotations. The association then adjourned to a room on the first floor where a fine collation was served. The teachers came back to the afternoon session at 1:30, and after singing listened to an interesting paper by Mrs. S. S. Higgins, on "The Art of Questioning applied to Reading." She showed that the thought is the first thing to be sought, and it should be clear in the child's mind. The questions must be of such a nature as to elicit thought on the part of the pupils.

Next came a lesson on Form, by Miss Lydall, who had a class of twelve little children. She very finely developed the words "sphere" and "surface," and showed a good understanding of her subject and an admirable control of the class.

The next subject was "Sparks," by Mr. J. S. Haynes, who gave advice to young teachers as to what and how they should study to insure successful work.

BY ALL MEANS GIVE THEM A SITE.

A Large New York Publishing House Anxious to Locate Here, With a Capital Stock of One Million Dollars.

A number of New York capitalists had an agent in this city Thursday, looking around to see what advantages Plainfield would offer, in case a company was organized here with a capital stock of about one million dollars, for the purpose of publishing books and magazines.

This syndicate of wealthy gentlemen have also been looking up locations at Bridgeport, Conn., and at Suffern, in New York State, but the excellent railroad facilities offered by the New Jersey Central Railroad, and this city being in a direct line between New York and Philadelphia, it is thought that they can be induced to locate here provided certain advantages are accorded them—principally a desirable site.

In the event of the Company locating here, a large building will be erected, capable of holding five hundred employees, and a main office in New York will be connected with the works by telephone. It is the intention of the syndicate to bring about fifty families to Plainfield, and where the employes request it the company will put up houses and allow the men to pay for them on the installment plan.

Property owners in this city should wake up in the matter and offer every inducement to bring the company here.

Not An Unusual Occurrence on All Trains.

The "ladies car" on the 4:30 Easton express from New York, yesterday afternoon, was so crowded with men that there were but three or four seats left for the ladies when they arrived.

The Tramp Nuisance.

Within the past few days tramps have been unusually numerous in this city, as many as two and three applying at a single house in one day. The mild and open Winter has been the cause of starting the tramps on their annual tour much earlier than usual.

Death of Israel C. Coon.

The announcement is made of the death of Mr. Israel C. Coon, which occurred at his home on Grove street, North Plainfield, at six o'clock on Saturday, from dropsy. The deceased was sixty-eight years of age and has been a sufferer from dropsy for a long time. He leaves a widow.

To Erect Stone Stations.

In future when the Central Railroad builds new stations it is the intention to construct them of stone and other indestructible materials. Such a plan will be doubly expensive at the outset, but wooden buildings are believed to be fully as expensive in the long run and not nearly as artistic Trap Shooting.

It is anticipated that there will be a large attendance on the grounds of the Middlesex Gun Club, at Dunellen, N. J., Saturday, February 22, when there will be sweepstake shooting all day at live and inanimate targets. During the day there will be interesting individual matches shot off between local amateur shooters. Refreshments will be served on the grounds.

The Saengerbund's Masquerade.

About one hundred and fifty couples of young people attended the second annual masquerade ball of the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein, in the Society's hall, on Somerset street, North Plainfield, Monday evening. Many of the costumes were very elaborate. Particular mention is made of the attire worn by Miss Lena Kellar. A local orchestra furnished the music for dancing, which continued until morning.

A New-Model Locomotive.

The "Onward," a new-model locomotive has been making trial trips over the Central Railroad of New Jersey for several days past, passing through this city, going West, between nine and ten o'clock. This engine has a self-balancing apparatus which throws the entire weight on the single driving wheel at starting, and when under headway the pony trucks carry the weight. It also has a compressed-air device, which rings the bell and ejects sand at the proper time, and a fog-horn whistle.

Notes of the Bicycle Club.

(By "[illegible].")

Still the membership of the Plainfield Bicycle Club keeps rolling up. At a recent meeting a Gymnasium Committee composed of five was appointed with Dr. J. H. Cooley as Chairman; they will draft a set of rules to govern the gymnasium and will have full power in its management. A caucus will be held on Saturday evening, March 8, to nominate the officers for the coming year. The Billiard and Pool Table Committee were instructed to procure another table, the present one not being sufficient for the wants of the members. The Saturday Night Entertainment Committee will hereafter be composed of three instead of two members, and they will be appointed for the remainder of the season by President, Councilman Townsend Rushmore.

Shooting on the 22d Inst.

There will be a sweepstake shooting at live and inanimate targets on the grounds of the Middlesex Gun Club, at Dunellen, N. J., on Saturday, February 22, commencing at 10 o'clock A. M., sharp. There will be an abundance of live birds. Private matches will also be shot on that day.

Took Insurance Policies and All.

If the person who "lifted" an overcoat from a peg in one of the hotels in this city, a few evenings since, will return the life insurance policies which one of the pockets contained, he will receive the thanks of the owner. The coat was of a black material, and in the pockets there were also a pair of gloves and a silk handkerchief.

The Linden Race Track.

The Linden race track is being put in readiness for the opening on April 15. The grounds are being re-graded, covered with a top soil of one depth and two inches of sand. About seventy-five men are engaged in the work, and the enclosure presents a lively scene. When completed the track will be in perfect condition.

Wants Him to Invent Another Process.

The Home News of New Brunswick says: "A Plainfield gentleman (John A. Hasbrouck), has 'struck oil' by patenting a process for maturing whiskey, by which its age is advanced from three months to three years. Now let this gentleman use his genius further by inventing a process which will suddenly sober up a drunken man and make him hate the vile thing forever after."

Bound Brook's New Enterprise.

"The high rate of taxation precluded the possibility of our locating in New Brunswick," said one of the firm of the Spreckels Sugar Refinery to a reporter a day or two ago. "We have selected Bound Brook as the next convenient place, and will begin the work of building at the earliest opportunity. Probably not less than 500 hands will be required when the refinery shall be in full blast.

Adding Fire Escapes to the Building.

Mr. L. E. Hart, owner of the handsome new building at the corner of Park avenue and Fourth street, has inaugurated a movement in this city which is bound to meet with general approval. Mr. Hart is erecting substantial and attractive fire escapes on the rear of his building, so as to allow the tenants a chance to escape in the event of a fire.

Other builders in this city should do likewise and thus protect their tenants.

Almost a Fire.

A lamp which took fire in some unaccountable manner, at six o'clock Tuesday night, in a West Fourth street dwelling, was thrown from a window by one of the occupants of the house just in time to save the house from perhaps total destruction. Children passing through the yard saw the lamp flickering, and they notified the inmates of the house, who by their prompt action prevented a conflagration.

Each Subscriber to Receive a Certificate.

Handsomely engraved certificates are now being presented to all those who subscribed ten dollars or more towards lifting the indebtedness of Trinity Reformed church. The year in which the subscribers pledged themselves to pay the amounts set opposite their names, expires on March 1, and but a few hundred dollars remain uncollected.

The certificates—which have been engraved and printed at the personal expense of a member of the Consistory—are works of art as well as testimonials of good deeds. They contain a picture of the church, and are filled out with the amount subscribed, the number of "shares" it represents, and signed by the President of the Consistory, who is also the pastor, the Rev. Cornelius Schenck, and by Special Treasurer B. A. Hegeman.

Garden Heliotrope Given Away, Wednesday Afternoon, at Music Hall.

All persons attending the lecture, Wednesday afternoon, must be prompt to the hour to get desirable seats. Children, unaccompanied by their parents and babes in arms, will not be admitted. Doors open at 1:30 and will commence promptly at 2 o'clock. Each lady present will be given a good-sized bottle of Burnett's perfume of Heliotrope.

The Cutest Little Things.

"Cute!" he echoed. "Well, I don't know as the adjective would have occurred to me in just that connection. But if you mean that they do their work thoroughly, yet make no fuss about it; cause no pain or weakness; and, in short, are everything that a pill ought to be, and nothing that it ought not, then I agree that Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets are about the cutest little things going."

The Reason That Everybody Goes to Watson's for Perfect Fitting Pantaloons, They Get the Best Patterns, See the Largest Stock and Save Money on Every Purchase.

Watson & Co. make a specialty of perfect fitting pantaloons, and have the cutting and making down so close that nobody attempts to meet their low prices or carry the elegant styles they show.

When you see a pattern you like in any merchant tailor's window remember Watson & Co. can show them to you all ready to put on for $5 a pair and you may find a pair of their finest pants among their broken lots that are marked down daily to $3 a pair, no matter what they cost to make. Just now their stock of broken lots, like samples shown in window next to Market street, is very large. Seen them, they are all hand-cut in regular custom style, and you can get the corresponding coat and vest at equally low prices.—Newark Press.

A Remarkable Case.

In June of the year 1888, I was stricken with a difficulty of my throat, which proved, upon a searching diagnosis, to be Cancer at the root of my tongue. I was treated by two physicians, but obtained no relief. My tongue turned black, and was so swollen I could scarcely speak or swallow. I neither ate nor slept for fourteen days. My physician advised me to consult a specialist, and I called upon Dr. Dumont C. Dake, of 499 Fifth Avenue, New York City, who by his wonderful and skillful treatment has cured me without the use of the knife. The good Doctor has my lasting gratitude for saving my life; and I desire that all the world shall know of his wonderful skill. He was thorough in his treatment and reasonable in his charges. I will be glad to answer all inquiries. C. H. EDWARDS.

Catarrh

IS a blood disease. Until the poison is expelled from the system, there can be no cure for this loathsome and dangerous malady. Therefore, the only effective treatment is a thorough course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla—the best of all blood purifiers. The sooner you begin the better; delay is dangerous.

"I was troubled with catarrh for over two years. I tried various remedies, and was treated by a number of physicians, but received no benefit until I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles of this medicine cured me of this troublesome complaint and completely restored my health."—Jesse M. Boggs, Holman's Mills, N. C.

"When Ayer's Sarsaparilla was recommended to me for catarrh, I was inclined to doubt its efficacy. Having tried so many remedies, with little benefit, I had no faith that anything would cure me. I became emaciated from loss of appetite and impaired digestion. I had nearly lost the sense of smell, and my system was badly deranged. I was about discouraged, when a friend urged me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and referred me to persons whom it had cured of catarrh. After taking half a dozen bottles of this medicine, I am convinced that the only sure way of treating this obstinate disease is through the blood."—Charles H. Maloney, 113 River st., Lowell, Mass.

RADAM'S
MICROBE KILLER
Cures All Diseases.
The claim to cure all diseases, may at first glance seem very absurd; but after reading our pamphlet, giving a history of the Microbe Killer, explaining the germ theory of disease, and reading our testimonials, which prove conclusively there is no disease it will not cure, the truth of our assertion becomes clear. No person suffering from any blood, chronic or contagious disease should let a day pass without getting and reading this interesting book, which will be given away or mailed free. ROUND ABOUT GOTHAM

Timely Items of Personal Gossip From the Metropolis.

Ward McAllister Has No [illegible]—The Quiet Life of Mrs. General Grant—[illegible] and His Work. Cleveland as a Lawyer.

[illegible]

That nothing succeeds like success is shown in the case of Ward McAllister. The New Year Ball, the echoes of which are still reverberating in Murray Hill parlors, has made him the most talked about of all the social leaders, and has given him a prestige and an influence so far above his fellows that he has not even a rival, much less an equal. McAllister's life is pretty well known. He has had his ups and downs. He is one of the most remarkable men in this country. He is a shrewd financier, and so good a judge of the value of money that he manages on an income of perhaps [illegible] a year to live as well as some of his neighbors who spend three times that amount. He is an expert in the art of dinner-giving, and he is one of the best cooks in this country. He can make a salad as well as did Sam Ward, that prince of good fellows, in his palmiest days. He is a story-teller, the equal of [illegible] Horace Porter or Chauncey M. Depew, and he is more than either of those gentlemen—he is a connoisseur of wines. It is no secret in the wine trade that not one man out of a hundred knows the difference between a fairly good sherry and one that is worth its weight in gold. You will see men at the various clubs holding up their glasses to the light and proclaiming that this Burgundy or that champagne has no superior or equal, when, as a matter of fact, after they have passed the dead level of good wine the judges are so few that it is easy to impose on almost any one. McAllister is not one of these. He has a wine-cellar collected at great expense from all quarters of the globe, and while he is not a drinking man at all, except that he likes wine for dinner, he can tell, without seeing a bottle, the age, richness and value of the article.

When he selected the wines for the great New Year ball supper he showed his good judgment, although he was severely criticised for departing from the usual custom of taking what the caterer said was the best. Since that time he has been the recipient from wine merchants and dealers all over the country of sample bottles of their goods, for which they hope to get a favorable word from him, for it is now seen that if McAllister says the wine is good or bad, the sentence will fly from one club to another, and from one drawing-room to another along Fifth Avenue, until the fame and fortune of the wine has been made or it has been [illegible] turned out of good society.

So with the florists. They are as eager to serve him now and through him the trade, that there is hardly a day on which he does not receive a [illegible] assortment of cut flowers to keep his parlors looking like a conservatory. It is so in other matters; and those who have dined around his hospitable board say that he gets the best joints, the best game, as well as the freshest and most delicious vegetables of any man in New York; not that he pays more for them than does his neighbor, but because he is Ward McAllister, and can make any wine merchant, florist, [illegible] or butcher independent for life by saying the word.

A well-appointed brougham dashed through Central Park the other afternoon. The driver was in deep mourning, and the sole occupant of the [illegible] was conspicuous for her [illegible] and widow's weeds. It was Julia Dent Grant, widow of General Grant, who was out for her afternoon drive through the Park. There was a stream of carriages and horseback riders, but not one person of that fashionable cavalcade knew the distinguished woman. Mrs. Grant looked what she really is—far from well. She has been ailing for a long time, and is very seldom seen in society. Her eyesight is very poor. She attends church regularly when her health permits, drives out, because her doctor insists on it, and lives a quiet, peaceful life among her own circle of friends. One of her most frequent callers is General Sherman. He often dines at Mrs. Grant's house, and is on the most intimate terms of friendship with her and her friends. When General Grant was alive all the big and little men of the country who visited New York paid their respects to the hero of Appomattox, but they have forgotten his widow, and now she is seldom troubled except perhaps when some old soldier whom her husband befriended comes to inquire after her health, or some of the dead General's most intimate friends pay what may be called "duty calls."

It may not be generally known that Mrs. Grant has a large number of the private papers of her late husband which if not of extreme value would make entertaining reading. She has under advisement the proposition from a leading book-publishing house to write a book. It is not likely she will do so, however, for her means are ample and her health will hardly permit of the work. Her main object in life now is to see that her husband's last resting place is marked by a suitable monument. She is bending every energy in that direction. Every once in a while an effort is made to induce her to have the General's remains taken to some other city, but this she will never consent to. George W. Childs is still her business adviser and confidential friend. He never fails to call on her when in New York, and in fact Mrs. Grant never makes any move without his advice.

It may be added in a general way for the benefit of those persons who like gossip, that there is not the slightest truth in the reports that constantly come to us from over the ocean that Mrs. Sartoris, the beautiful Nellie Grant, intends to leave her husband. This fabrication has been exploded a great many times, but, like [illegible], it "will not down." Mrs. [illegible] is on the most amicable terms with her son-in-law and is happy in the possession of the love and respect of her [illegible] sons, who are all doing well in business now, and whose future [illegible]. It is possible that Mrs. Grant may go abroad in the spring for a visit to her son, Minister Grant, at Vienna, but that depends on her health. Her greatest object in life, as above stated, is to see the completion of the Grant Memorial Monument, if that should take place before the millennium.

If there be any busier man in New York than Rev. Morgan Dix, of Trinity corporation, he would do well to [illegible] up and be identified. Besides attending to the vast [illegible] business of the Trinity corporation, with its [illegible] invested, preaching, burying, marrying people, visiting the sick and officiating over the dead, he is called upon by men and women in every walk in life for advice on all sorts of questions. No matter how early you go to his office in the afternoon you will find a dozen or twenty people ahead of you. They all want to see the distinguished rector of old Trinity in person and explain to him their various schemes and troubles. The writer of this waited two hours in his office the other day for an opportunity to get a word with him on a matter of private business. When at last the [illegible] had gone and we were alone, I expressed some surprise at the number of the callers.

"Yes," said Dr. Dix, "it sometimes seems to me that I will never get through my day's work. People come to me on all sorts of subjects simply because I am at the head of the Trinity corporation, when they could get the same advice from almost any business man of their acquaintance. I get letters from all over the world on questions beyond imagination, and if I do not at once reply to them, I am [illegible] to death until I do."

At that very moment Dr. Dix's [illegible] was littered with letters a foot high. There was a request from a magazine for an article on the question: "Is the world getting better or worse?" a [illegible] that Dr. Dix explained would take up so much of his time to answer properly that he dare not even attempt it. There were invitations to dinner, requests from this and that person for financial aid, letters from mothers begging the good doctor to find employment for their sons, one from a widow who asked if Dr. Dix considered it a crime for her to marry her cousin, and so on. The great preacher goes through them all carefully. Opposite him sits a private secretary, who answers them all as the occasion may require.

In personal appearance Dr. Dix is one of the most striking men in New York, and he always attracts a great deal of attention. He is a strong preacher, a deep thinker, and his voice has been one of the charms that made him famous as a preacher. While not exactly the fashionable preacher, he is called upon by society to officiate at weddings that are unusually profitable. His personal income is enormous and he has a comfortable fortune. He gives away a great deal of money, and has helped more young men to get on in the world than any preacher of the day.

It doesn't make very much difference these days how big a man is physically or politically, once he comes to New York he ceases very soon to be much of a curiosity. Mrs. Astor, the social empress of New York society, and almost worth her weight in gold, walked down Twenty-third Street yesterday and neither man, woman, or child recognized her or turned to look after her. If the shop girls and women who elbowed her as she passed along had known who she was they would have stared their eyes out, thinking perhaps they might get a glimpse of the magnificent diamonds about which they have read so much, but never seen. Mrs. Grover Cleveland goes along Fifth Avenue, Broadway, Fourteenth Street, and travels like ordinary mortals in horse-cars day after day, and is never recognized. She never was very well-known in New York, but her distinguished husband, it might have been thought, would have escaped such a fate. But he has not. He walks up Broadway every afternoon without attracting any attention. He drops into the Fifth Avenue Hotel, in the midst of the very busiest men of the world, without causing a ripple of excitement. He lunches every day at a small restaurant near his office on Lower Broadway and not one person out of a hundred recognizes him. He takes his turn in the little Italian barber shop on Park Row, the same as any other man, without attracting the slightest notice. He waited fifteen minutes the other morning to be shaved and took the place of a burly longshoreman in the barber's chair, chatted affably with the artist as his razor glided over the ex-President's face, picked up his own hat, brushed his own coat, paid his fifteen cents and walked out of the place without even the barber suspecting who he was. He goes to the theaters with his wife, attends concerts, lectures, and often occupies a pew in St. Bartholomew's Church on Sunday morning, but he is not stared at, seldom pointed out, and has ceased to be a curiosity. It is not that New Yorkers intend any disrespect to the ex-Chief Magistrate. It is simply a phase of New York life. The big men come here, mingle with the little men, and are swallowed up in the vortex. They soon forget their own importance and probably enjoy life more for not being so conspicuous—at least Mr. Cleveland does, for he told a newspaper reporter who walked along with him down Park Row that he enjoyed doing as he pleased at last. "It is a great relief," he went on, "not to be stared at, and to be able to go in any direction that one's inclination leads, without attracting attention. I never knew how much I valued being left to myself until I came to live in New York."

It may be added as a matter of interest that Mr. Cleveland, while not making the vast fortune at the practice of law that he is popularly supposed to be, is possessed of an income which is not far short of the amount received while President of the United States. Most of his work is what is known among lawyers as "office-work." He has been engaged in some big cases. He is very often at his office at [illegible] o'clock in the morning.

A valuable substitute for jute or sisal hemp has been discovered—the fibrous stalk of the okra plant. Florida can produce two crops of this plant a year, and great returns are expected.

In the year 1888 there were laid in the United States [illegible] miles of track, which means an investment of [illegible]. This seems large, but it is estimated that America has spent in 1889 [illegible].

There are 7,000 diamond-cutters out of work in Amsterdam alone. At a meeting of more than 1,000 of them recently held there M. von Praag attributed the want of work chiefly to the high prices of raw diamonds.

Compressed paper has been turned to a novel use by the Germans. A torpedo boat built entirely of that material has been operated with encouraging success. The vessel is eleven feet long. It is said to be remarkably strong and elastic to a marvelous degree.

There are in Florida 10,000 orange growers. The acreage is 100,000 and the capital invested is from [illegible] to [illegible]. Three seasons ago there were produced 1,250,000 boxes, two seasons ago 2,100,000, and last season about 2,000,000 boxes. It is estimated that the crop of 1890 will be over 4,000,000 boxes.

Birmingham, Eng., is the greatest brass town in the world; 7,000 are employed. Birmingham and Paris lead Europe in the manufacture of brass. In Paris 10,000 are employed in brass and bronze mills. Paris hands work ten hours and get [illegible] per week; in England nine hours and get $7.50. They look more to excellence of work than quantity of production.

THE GLORIOUS CHRIST.

DR. TALMAGE PREACHES A POWERFUL SERMON IN BROOKLYN.

"He That Cometh from Above Is Above All"—The Son of God Is the First and Last—He Can Make Dying Hours Easy [illegible] Death of His Sting.

BROOKLYN, Feb. 16.—At the Tabernacle this morning the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., announced that he would very soon begin a series of sermons on his journey "To and Through the Holy Land." The subject of his discourse this morning was "The Glorious Christ." His text was: "He that cometh from above is above all"—John iii, 31. The great preacher said:

The most conspicuous character of history steps out upon the platform. The finger which, diamonded with light, pointed down to him from the Bethlehem sky, was only a ratification of the finger of prophecy, the finger of genealogy, the finger of chronology, the finger of events—all five fingers pointing in one direction. Christ is the overtopping figure of all time. He is the vox humana in all music, the gracefulest line in all sculpture, the most exquisite mingling of lights and shades in all painting, the acme of all climaxes, the dome of all cathedraled grandeur, and the peroration of all splendid language.

The Greek alphabet is made up of twenty-four letters, and when Christ compared himself to the first letter and the last letter, the alpha and the omega, he appropriated to himself all the splendors that you can spell out either with those two letters and all the letters between them. "I am the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last." Or, if you prefer the words of the text, "above all."

What does it mean? It means, after you have piled up all Alpine and Himalayan altitudes, the glory of Christ would have to spread its wings and descend a thousand leagues to touch those summits. Pelion, a high mountain of Thessaly; Ossa, a high mountain, and Olympus, a high mountain; but mythology tells us when the giants warred against the gods they piled up these three mountains, and from the top of them proposed to scale the heavens; but the height was not great enough, and there was a complete failure. And after all the giants—Isaiah and Paul, prophetic and apostolic giants; Raphael and Michael Angelo, artistic giants; cherubim and seraphim and archangel, celestial giants—have failed to climb to the top of Christ's glory, they might all well unite in the words of the text and say: "He that cometh from above is above all."

CHRIST ABOVE ALL [illegible].

First, Christ must be [illegible] above all [illegible] in preaching. There are so many books on [illegible] all [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] course have frequent mention of justification, sanctification, covenant of works and covenant of grace, that therefore it must be profoundly evangelical, while they are suspicious of a discourse which presents the same truth, but under different phraseology. Now, I say there is nothing in all the opulent realm of Anglo-Saxonism, of all the word treasures that we inherited from the Latin and the Greek and the Indo-European, but we have a right to marshal it in religious discussion. Christ sets the example. His illustrations were from the grass, the flowers, the spittle, the salve, the barnyard fowl, the crystals of salt, as well as from the seas and the stars; and we do not propose in our Sunday school teaching and in our pulpit address to be put on the limits.

I know that there is a great deal said in our day against words, as though they were nothing. They may be misused, but they have an imperial power. They are the bridge between soul and soul, between Almighty God and the human race. What did God write upon the tables of stone? Words. What did Christ utter on Mount Olivet? Words. Out of what did Christ strike the spark for the illumination of the universe? Out of words. "Let there be light," and light was. Of course, thought is the cargo and words are only the ship; but how fast would your cargo get on without the ship? What you need, my friends, in all your work, in your Sabbath school class, in your reformatory institutions, and what we all need is to enlarge our vocabulary, when we come to speak about God and Christ and heaven. We ride a few old words to death when there is such illimitable resource. Shakespeare employed fifteen thousand different words for dramatic purposes; Milton employed eight thousand different words for poetic purposes; Rufus Choate employed over eleven thousand different words for legal purposes; but the most of us have less than a thousand words that we can manage, less than five hundred, and that makes us so stupid.

When we come to set forth the love of Christ we are going to take the tenderest phraseology wherever we find it, and if it has never been used in that direction before, all the more shall we use it. When we come to speak of the glory of Christ, the Conqueror, we are going to draw our similes from triumphal arch and oratorio and everything grand and stupendous. The French navy have eighteen flags by which they give signal, but those eighteen flags they can put into sixty-six thousand different combinations, and I have to tell you that these standards of the cross may be lifted into combinations infinite and varieties everlasting. And let me say to these young men who come from the theological seminaries into our services every Sabbath, and are after a while going to preach Jesus Christ, you will have the largest liberty and unlimited resource. You only have to present Christ in your own way.

Jonathan Edwards preached Christ in the severest argument ever penned, and John Bunyan preached Christ in the sublimest allegory ever composed. Edward Payson, sick and exhausted, leaned up against the side of the pulpit and wept out his discourse, while George Whitefield, with the manner and the voice and the start of an actor, overwhelmed his auditory. It would have been a different thing if Jonathan Edwards had tried to write and dream about the pilgrim's progress to the celestial city, or John Bunyan had attempted an essay on the human will.

GLORIOUS THEMES.

Brighter than the light, fresher than the fountains, deeper than the seas are all these Gospel themes. Song has no melody, flowers have no sweetness, sunset sky has no color compared with these glorious themes. These harvests of grace spring up quicker than we can sickle them. Kindling pulpits with their fire and producing revolutions with their power, lighting up dying beds with their glory, they are the sweetest thought for the poet, and they are the most thrilling illustration for the orator, and they offer the most intense scene for the artist, and they are to the ambassador of the sky all enthusiasm. Complete pardon for direst guilt. Sweetest comfort for ghastliest agony. Brightest hope for grimmest death. Grandest resurrection for darkest sepulcher. Oh, what a Gospel to preach! Christ over all in it. His birth, his suffering, his miracles, his parables, his sweat, his tears, his blood, his atonement, his intercession—what glorious themes! Do we exercise faith? Christ is its object. Do we have love? It fastens on Jesus. Have we a fondness for the church? It is because Christ died for it. Have we a hope of heaven? It is because Jesus went ahead, the herald and the forerunner.

The royal robe of Demetrius was so costly, so beautiful, that after he had put it off no one ever dared put it on; but this robe of Christ, richer than that, the poorest and the wannest and the worst may wear. "Where sin abounded grace may much more abound."

"Oh, my sins, my sins," said Martin Luther to Staupitz, "my sins, my sins!" The fact is that the brawny German student had found a Latin Bible that made him quake, and nothing else ever did make him quake, and when he found how, through Christ, he was pardoned and saved, he wrote to a friend, saying: "Come over and join us great and awful sinners saved by the grace of God. You seem to be only a slender sinner, and you don't much extol the mercy of God; but we that have been such very awful sinners praise his grace the more now that we have been redeemed." Can it be that you are so desperately egotistical that you feel yourself in first rate spiritual trim, and that from the root of the hair to the tip of the toe you are scarless and immaculate? What you need is a looking glass, and here it is in the Bible. Poor, and wretched, and miserable, and blind, and naked from the crown of the head to the sole of the foot, full of wounds and putrefying sores. No health in us, and then take the fact that Christ gathered up all the notes against us and paid them, and then offered us the receipt.

And how much we need him in our sorrows! We are independent of circumstances if we have his grace. Why, he made Paul sing in the dungeon, and under that grace St. John from desolate Patmos heard the blast of the apocalyptic trumpets. After all other candles have been snuffed out, this is the light that gets brighter and brighter unto the perfect day; and after, under the hard hoofs of calamity, all the pools of worldly enjoyment have been trampled into deep mire, at the foot of the eternal rock the Christian, from cups of granite lily rimmed and vine covered, puts out the thirst of his soul.

Again, I remark, that Christ is above all in dying alleviations.

DEATH.

I have not any sympathy with the morbidity abroad about our demise. The emperor of Constantinople arranged that on the day of his coronation the stone mason should come and consult him about the tombstone that after a while he would need. And there are men who are monomaniacal on the subject of departure from this life by death, and the more they think of it the less they are prepared to go. This is an unmanliness not worthy of you, not worthy of me.

Saladin, the greatest conqueror of his day, while dying, ordered that the tunic he had on him be carried after his death on his spear at the head of his army, and that then the soldier ever and anon should stop and say, "Behold, all that is left of Saladin, the emperor and conqueror! Of all the states he conquered, of all the wealth he accumulated, nothing did he retain but this shroud." I have no sympathy with such behavior, or such absurd demonstration, or with much that we hear uttered in regard to departure from this life to the next. There is a commonsensical idea on this subject that you and I need to consider—that there are only two styles of departure.

A thousand feet underground, by light of torch toiling in a miner's shaft, a ledge of rock may fall upon us, and we may die a miner's death. Far out at sea, falling from the slippery ratlines and broken on the halyards, we may die a sailor's death. On mission of mercy in hospital, amid broken bones and reeking leprosies and raging fevers, we may die a philanthropist's death. On the field of battle, serving God and our country, slugs through the heart, the gun carriage may roll over us, and we may die a patriot's death. But, after all, there are only two styles of departure—the death of the righteous and the death of the wicked—and we all want to die the former.

God grant that when that hour comes you may be at home! You want the hand of your kindred in your hand. You want your children to surround you. You want the light on your pillow from eyes that have long reflected your love. You want the room still. You do not want any curious strangers standing around watching you. You want your kindred from afar to hear your last prayer. I think that is the wish of all of us. But is that all? Can earthly friends hold us up when the billows of death come up to the girdle? Can human voice charm open heaven's gate? Can human hand pilot us through the narrows of death into heaven's harbor? Can any earthly friendship shield us from the arrows of death and in the hour when Satan shall practice upon us his infernal archery? No, no, no, no! Alas! Poor soul if that is all. Better die in the wilderness, far from tree shadow and from fountain, alone, vultures circling through the air waiting for our body, unknown to men, and to have no burial, if only Christ could say through the solitudes, "I will never leave thee, I will never forsake thee." From that pillow of stone a ladder would soar heavenward, angels coming and going; and across the solitude and the barrenness would come the sweet notes of heavenly minstrelsy.

"TO GO TO CHRIST."

Gordon Hall, far from home, dying in the door of a heathen temple, said: "Glory to thee, O God!" What did dying Wilberforce say to his wife? "Come and sit beside me, and let us talk of heaven. I never knew what happiness was until I found Christ." What did dying Hannah More say? "To go to heaven, think what that is! To go to Christ, who died that I might live. Oh, glorious grave! Oh, what a glorious thing it is to die! Oh, the love of Christ, the love of Christ!"

What did Mr. Toplady, the great hymn maker, say in his last hour? "Who can measure the depths of the third heaven? Oh, the sunshine that fills my soul! I shall soon be gone, for surely no one can live in this world after such glories as God has manifested to my soul."

What did the dying Janeway say? "I can as easily die as close my eyes or turn my head in sleep. Before a few hours have passed I shall stand on Mount Zion with the one hundred and forty and four thousand and with the just men made perfect, and we shall ascribe riches, and honor, and glory, and majesty, and dominion unto God and the Lamb." Dr. Taylor, condemned to burn at the stake, on his way thither broke away from the guardsmen and went bounding and leaping and jumping toward the fire, glad to go to Jesus and to die for him. Sir Charles Hare, in last moment, had such rapturous vision that he cried: "Upward, upward, upward!" And so great was the peace of one of Christ's disciples that he put his fingers upon the pulse in his wrist and counted it and observed it; and so great was his placidity that after a while he said: "Stopped!" and his life had ended here to begin in heaven. But grander than that was the testimony of the worn out first missionary, when, in the Mamertine dungeon, he cried: "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give me in that day, and not to me only, but to all them that love his appearing!" Do you not see that Christ is above all in dying alleviations?

Toward the last hour of our earthly residence we are speeding. When I see the sunset I say, "One day less to live." When I see the spring blossoms scattered I say, "Another season gone forever." When I close this Bible on Sabbath night I say, "Another Sabbath departed." When I bury a friend I say, "Another earthly attraction gone forever." What nimble feet the years have! The roebucks and the lightnings run not so fast. From decade to decade, from sky to sky, they go at a bound. There is a place for us, whether marked or not, where you and I will sleep the last sleep, and the men are now living who will, with solemn tread, carry us to our resting place. Ay, it is known in heaven whether our departure will be a coronation or a banishment.

BRIGHT SEPULCHERS.

Brighter than a banqueting hall through which the light feet of the dancers go up and down to the sound of trumpeters will be the sepulcher through whose rifts the holy light of heaven streameth. God will watch you. He will send his angels to guard your slumbering ground, until, at Christ's behest, they shall roll away the stone.

So, also, Christ is above all in heaven. The Bible distinctly says that Christ is the chief theme of the celestial ascription, all the thrones facing his throne, all the palms waved before his face, all the crowns down at his feet. Cherubim to cherubim, seraphim to seraphim, redeemed spirit to redeemed spirit shall recite the Saviour's earthly sacrifice.

Stand on some high hill of heaven, and in all the radiant sweep the most glorious object will be Jesus. Myriads gazing on the scars of his suffering, in silence first, afterward breaking forth into acclamation. The martyrs, all the purer for the flame through which they passed, will say: "This is Jesus for whom we died." The apostles, all the happier for the shipwreck and the scourging through which they went, will say: "This is the Jesus whom we preached at Corinth, and at Cappadocia, and at Antioch, and at Jerusalem." Little children clad in white will say: "This is the Jesus who took us in his arms and blessed us, and when the storms of the world were too cold and loud, brought us into this beautiful place." The multitudes of the bereft will say: "This is the Jesus who comforted us when our heart broke." Many who wandered clear off from God and plunged into vagabondism, but were saved by grace, will say: "This is the Jesus who pardoned us. We were lost on the mountains, and he brought us home. We were guilty, and he has made us white as snow." Mercy boundless, grace superabundant. And then, after each one has recited his peculiar deliverances and peculiar mercies, recited them as by solo, all the voices will come together into a great chorus, which will make the arches echo and re-echo with the eternal reverberation of gladness and peace and triumph.

Edward I was so anxious to go to the Holy Land that when he was about to expire he bequeathed $160,000 to have his heart, after his decease, taken to the Holy Land, in Asia Minor, and his request was complied with. But there are hundreds today whose hearts are already in the Holy Land of heaven. Where your treasures are, there are your hearts also. Quaint John Bunyan, of whom I spoke at the opening of the discourse, caught a glimpse of that place, and in his quaint way he said: "And I heard in my dream, and lo! the bells of the city rang again for joy; and as they opened the gates to let in the men I looked in after them, and lo! the city shone like the sun, and there were streets of gold, and men walked on them, harps in their hands, to sing praises withal; and after that they shut up the gates, which when I had seen I wished myself among them!"

Five to One.

It is said to be a prevailing delusion among English tourists that the natives of foreign countries are guilty of peculiar stupidity in not understanding the English language. Sometimes, however, even those who were not born "bold Britons" attain a linguistic advantage.

Two English travelers in the east one day entered the shop of a Jew, who, though he spoke several other languages, had but a slight acquaintance with English. On his failure to make the Jew understand what he wanted, one of the travelers said carelessly to the other: "The old fool doesn't speak English."

Unfortunately, this remark came within the radius of the Jew's comprehension, and drew from him the following questions:

"Do you spik Italian?"

"No," answered both.

"Do you spik Grik?"

"No."

"Do you spik Turk?"

"No."

"Do you spik Spanish?"

"No."

"Do you spik French?"

"No."

Then, after a pause for preparation, the old man ejaculated energetically:

"Me one time fool; you five times fool."—Youth's Companion.

A One Armed Printer.

A one armed printer is as much of a curiosity as the armless man who dexterously handles a knife and fork with his toes. There came to Cincinnati two days ago such a wonder, and he is now working as a "sub" in The Enquirer office. His name is Harry Pearod; he is 27 years old, and hails from Washington, where he learned the trade. Six years ago he went out [illegible] and there lost his left arm in a railroad accident. Only a short stump, extending but a few inches from the shoulder, remains. Nothing disheartened by a misfortune that would have rendered most men helpless, Pearod set to work to master the intricacies of his craft with one hand, and he succeeded so well that he now sets as big a "string" as the best printer, and he justifies his own matter and does it well. In "setting" type Pearod places the "stick" on the case in front of him and then nimbly shoots the type into place, working very rapidly and apparently with as much ease as a man with two hands.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Everybody a Victim.

While not sharing the ultra-catholicity of the school girl who translated "chacun a son goût" everybody has gout, it is possible to affirm with a certain degree of verity that everybody had been more or less the victim, not of grippe necessarily, but of the influence that produced the epidemic. Under their malign sway the cheerful have become irritable, the irritable melancholy, and the melancholy given over to manifest sorrow and leaden eyed despair. Physicians and laymen alike have ceased to regard as absurd a disease of such formidable proportions.—New York Medical Journal.

The Australian papers speak of a remarkable hailstorm at Brisbane at the beginning of last month. The storm lasted twenty minutes, and the hailstones are described as jagged blocks of ice. One hailstone was picked up at South Brisbane, measuring 5½ inches by 10½ inches.

INDUSTRIAL INTELLIGENCE.

English syndicates have invested $[illegible] in the various branches of American industry since May, 1888.

There was a decrease of over 1,000,000 tons in the total amount of anthracite coal mined in 1889 as compared with the previous year.

There are fifty manufactories of imitation butter in Germany. A factory in Mannheim produces daily 6,000 pounds from a preparation of cocoanuts.

A cannery at Pomona, Cal., has made a contract with an Eastern house to deliver annually for four years [illegible] quarts of peas, apricots, peaches, nectarines and plums.

The glass works at Kokomo, Ind., claim to have cast the largest sheet of plate glass ever produced in the United States. It covers 175 square feet and weighs [illegible] pounds.

The hydrocarbon process of treating iron and [illegible] so it will not corrode is said to cost less than one-half that of galvanizing, while the durability, under similar conditions, is considerably extended.

RECENT EVENTS.

A Chicago company has been organized with intent to pipe natural gas from the Indiana field to that city, a distance of 130 miles.

Statuary wrought in Italy after a model of an American artist may not be brought here free of duty as the production of an American artist. So has decided the Treasury Department.

Two Beatrice (Neb.) men have patented a portable corn husker, which is drawn through the fields and husks the corn as clean as could be desired. It is claimed it will husk twelve acres a day.

A young man plowing on a ranch near Galt, Cal., found over sixteen hundred dollars. His employer kept all but twenty dollars of it, and left the plowman to plod his weary way in the field.

Mary who had the little lamb died lately. Her name was Mary F. Sawyer and she was born eighty-eight years ago in Sterling, Mass. What became of the lamb history sayeth not, but likely it is dead, too.

A California paper relates that after the recent rain-storm many people of Angel's Camp, Calaveras County, got money enough for their Thanksgiving dinners by picking up gold in the streets and in the shallow streams.

While sitting at his desk in the library of the White House a few days ago the President was surprised at the intrusion of a big gray rat, who deliberately crawled upon a side table and dragged off a piece of fruit which had tempted him from his hiding-place.

A field of asbestos, which is pronounced the largest in the world, has been found and located in Wyoming, about forty miles south of Fort Steele. The field covers 190 acres, and the asbestos is pronounced by experts as of good quality, with very little serpentine in it.

At the recent fire in Boston one firm was entirely cleaned out, not even a penholder left, and added to this the papers in their safe were also destroyed. Since the great Boston fire many firms have a duplicate of their monthly trial balance kept at the residence of some member of the firm.

The fast mail time between oceans is now four days, twelve hours and three-quarters. Twenty-five tons of mail matter from New York City recently arrived at San Francisco in that time. Denver, Omaha, Cheyenne, Portland, all feel the influence of being nearer the East.

A carload of buffaloes for Austin Corbin's game forest on Croydon mountain lately passed through Claremont, N. H., en route to Newport, N. H. They came from "Buffalo Jones," who herds them at Winnipeg, Man., were worth $15,000 and were twelve days on the road. The man in charge reports they came peaceably and stood the journey well.

Natural gas has been discovered in Sonoma County, Cal., and in view of this cheap fuel the people of San Francisco see "in their mind's eye" that city developing into a great manufacturing center. The San Francisco Chronicle says that if there is abundance of the gas the fact "means more to San Francisco than half a dozen new transcontinental railroads."

An artesian well flowing 4,000 gallons per minute was completed at Yankton recently. It is the largest in the Northwest, discharging nearly 16,000 barrels every twenty-four hours. There are now twenty-five artesian wells in that county whose combined capacity is nearly 50,000 barrels per day. The force of the water is so great that it is being used for motive power.

The geological survey, through Prof. W. H. Holmes, recently made some most important discoveries of Indian relics west of Washington on what is known as Piney Branch Hill. The find appears to be the remains of an Indian workshop for the manufacture of implements, weapons, etc. The spot has been excavated and implements have been found clear to the bed rock. The discovery is considered to be of the greatest importance to archæologists.

Three Australians who are walking across the American continent reached St. Paul, Minn., from Tacoma a few days since. They are on a tour of the world from Melbourne on a wager that the tour can not be made in eight months. The conditions of the bet are that every appliance may be used for traveling after reaching New York, but the journey across North America must be made on foot. The bet is for £3,000, and the pedestrians are due at the Auckland Club in Melbourne just eight months from the date of their departure. The travelers are in good health and confident of success.

SCIENTIFIC BREVITIES.

Artificial glaciers as a means of storing water for irrigation have been proposed.

Ornithologists in the recent work published by the librarian of the London Zoological Society have traced five hundred names formerly considered obscure to their original source.

An incandescent lamp—16 candle power and 46 volts—lasted 11,005 hours before it gave way. Several others lasted for more than 8,000 hours and the average life of 31 lamps was 4,227 hours.

Herr Siemens, himself one of the princes of electricity, owns the corn. He tells his fellow-countrymen that Germany can not compete with America in the number and usefulness of new electrical inventions.

Signor Schiaparelli, the eminent Milanese astronomer, well known for his researches on the canals of Mars, says he has ascertained, after ten years' investigation, that Mercury has a rotation like that of the moon.

The phonograph is expected to prove a valuable aid in the study of languages. The pupil can take home a piece of tin-foil on which is recorded his teacher's correct accent, and practice with it in his own room as much as he pleases.

The green color of ocean water depends upon the number of medusæ and other minute animal forms which inhabit it. The deep green Northern seas literally swarm with these miniature creatures; in some places as many as 128 of them have been found in a single cubic inch of water.

A sovereign pigment has been found in the spines of the South American tree porcupine. The quills are tinged with bright yellow and tipped with dark brown. The yellow will dissolve in ordinary water, but the brown resists the solvent action of alcohol and chloroform, though it yields to ammonia and potash.

Sapolini, of Milan, has described a method of his which he states he has employed successfully in sixty-two cases of deafness of old age. It consists in mopping the membrana tympani with a weak oleaginous solution of phosphorus. He claims that the treatment diminishes the opacity of the membrane, increases the circulation and improves the hearing.

Prof. Orton, the State geologist of Ohio, says natural gas is now a fixed quantity, its manufacture having ceased long ago. Hence the more that is taken out of the earth, the less remains to be taken out. With care and economy the northwestern Ohio field with the present draft upon it will last for from five to eight years, but not for ten, he thinks. Three years he gives as the average life of a gas well. But there are professors of "exact" science who are confident that the natural gas supply is practically inexhaustible.

Nicotine is one of the most powerful of the "nerve poisons" known. Its virulence is compared to that of prussic acid. If birds be made to inhale its vapor in amounts too small to be measured they are almost instantly killed. It seems to destroy life, not by attacking a few, but all the functions essential to it, beginning at the center—the heart. A significant indication of this is that there is no substance known which can counteract its effects; the system either succumbs or survives. Its depressing action on the heart is by far the most noticeable and noteworthy symptom of nicotine poisoning. The frequent existence of what is known as "smoker's heart" in men whose health is in no other respect disturbed is due to this fact.

QUEER DOINGS OF PEOPLE.

A Lansing, Mich., man made his wife happy on Christmas by giving her a billiard table, but the good woman was enough for him. She hunted up the handsomest tea set in Michigan, and made a present of it to her husband.

An eccentric old widower, who lived a hermit's life in the village of Osseo, Minn., committed suicide recently. He wrote a funeral sermon several months ago, which he left in the hands of a neighbor, with instructions to have it preached over his remains.

A farmer in Highland, Osceola County, Mich., who awoke the other night and observed his wife's foot sticking out of bed, mistook it for a burglar and fired at it with a revolver which he always keeps under his pillow. The good woman has since had a bad limp.

Cairo (Ill.) has a grocer named Tyler, and the first question he asks of a would-be purchaser is: "Do you snore?" If the fact is admitted that ends the matter right then and there—no purchase can be made. He has taken a vow not to sell even a strawberry to a man who snores.

A prosperous Colorado ranchman advertised for a wife, giving an accurate description of himself and his surroundings, etc. His mail has been so heavy ever since that it has been necessary to put it in barrels in the post-office, and was compelled to bring his farm wagon to town to haul it home.

A New York society lady is said to have attended a dance there on Tuesday evening, left the next morning to attend two balls on successive evenings in Boston, and would leave immediately to attend a ball in Philadelphia the next night. Four balls in three cities in the course of four days would seem to be the height of fashionable folly.

At Beach City, O., a funeral sermon was preached over the remains of a remarkable lady. The deceased was Mrs. Catherine Brown, a widow. Her age was ninety-three years nine months and twenty-six days. She made her burial robes, knit herself a pair of linen stockings for the occasion, gave full details for her burial and calmly awaited the messenger.

A Pacific coast paper has this item: "A school-teacher at Kootenay, B. C., recently saw a personal in an Eastern paper soliciting correspondence, etc. He took a flyer and received in return a check for two hundred and fifty dollars to come to Minneapolis and get a bride. The day of the marriage he will also get a bank book covering a deposit of ten thousand dollars subject to his order."

A LITTLE AMUSEMENT.

Business-like.—Young Spriggs—"Mr. Bidquick, I am worth $50,000 and I love your daughter." Mr. Bidquick (retired auctioneer)—"Sold!"

"Why don't you go to work? Why do you waste your time begging?" "Did you ever beg?" "No; of course not." "Den ye don't know what work is."

"I am opposed to all games of chance," said Rawson. "And yet you got married?" said Lawson. "Yes; and that's why I am so strongly opposed to 'em."

Our Servants.—Lady of the House (to new parlor maid)—"Have you given the gold fish any fresh water?" Maid—"No, ma'am; why, they haven't finished the old yet!"

Mrs. Winks—"So you have taken another companion for better or for worse, eh?" Mrs. Secondtrip—"Only for better, my dear. He can't possibly be worse than the other one was."

A Boy with a Future.—"Tommy," said a Chicago youngster's mother, "there is a great big blot on your copy-book." "No, mamma, you're mistaken. That's only a period. Our teacher is awfully near-sighted."

Wife (suspiciously)—"Cyrus, my nose never deceives me. You have been drinking again." Husband (rather quickly)—"It's on my clothes, Emily. The car was crowded, and I had to occupy a seat with an internal-revenue collector."

Gentleman (to Uncle Rastus)—"Why, Uncle Rastus, you never charged me thirty-five cents before for carrying in a ton of coal." Uncle Rastus—"Dat's case de price hab riz, Mistah Smif. Yo' kan't expec' to git seven dollah coal carried in at de ole rates, sah."

Professor—"Have any of you experienced an electric shock?" Impressionable pupil (diffidently)—"Yes, sir; I have. A touching of hands, you know. And (impulsively) she felt it, too." Professor (severely)—"Young man, that was not electricity. That was galvanism."

Herbert—"Really, Miss Edith, I am very sorry I kissed you. I didn't think what I was doing. It is a sort of temporary insanity in our family." Miss Edith (pityingly)—"If you ever feel any more such coming on, you had better come right here, where your infirmity is known, and we will take care of you."

Didn't Observe It.—Mrs. Pretense (to daughter)—"Edith!" Daughter—"Ma'am!" Mrs. Pretense—"You are not profiting by the etiquette lessons you are receiving. Mrs. Sherwood says that you should never drink from the end of the spoon, but from the side." Daughter—"Well, I know that." Mrs. Pretense—"But you do not observe it. I saw you taking medicine from the end of a spoon this morning."

An American publisher has offered Gladstone $25,000 a year for the exclusive use of all he writes.

Mark Twain works only three months in the year, and then does his writing on a farm, near Elmira, where he has an octagonal glass room in which he composes.

It has been proposed to make a book that would be indestructible by printing in gold or silver letters upon thin leaves of asbestos, the binding to be of a thicker sheet of asbestos. Neither time nor fire could have any effect upon a volume of this kind.

"Though his general health is better than it has been for some years, Edmund Clarence Stedman," reports the New York Journalist, "has been suffering of late from rheumatism. Mr. Stedman is a great worker, and, like all high-strung Americans, is very sensitive to the weather."

Miss Yda Addis, the discoverer of the place of manufacture of the iridescent Mexican pottery, and of the process by which it is made (described in Harper's Monthly for August), is a well-known newspaper writer on the Pacific coast, is a good Spanish scholar, and has spent several years in Mexico. She is living now in Chihuahua.

Mr. Andrew Young, the writer of the religious song, "There is a Happy Land, Far, Far Away," is still alive, a man eighty years of age, vigorous in mind and body, and having all that sympathy for children without which it is impossible to influence the little ones for good. It is about fifty years since these words were written to the music of an Indian air, and they have since been translated into nineteen languages.

A proof-reader in the New York World office recently wrote to Jules Verne to know the precise name of the hero of the story "Around the World in Eighty Days." He received the following in response: "Replying to your letter, I will tell you that it is really Phileas and not Phineas that it should be written, also that 'the hero of "Around the World" is named Fogg. I take advantage of this occasion to send you my best wishes for the new year. Jules Verne."

William Black is small and sunburnt and hazel-eyed and black-mustached, he asks six thousand dollars for a novel and gets what he asks, yet withal he is profoundly unaffected and a master of small talk. He is also addicted to yachting and epicurean dinners; has recently described his treatment at the hands of the autograph fiend, and he is alleged to have a sneaking regard for a Scotch mist. He is forty-eight, wears spectacles and is reckoned among the admirers of Mary Anderson.

Alphonse Daudet had determined to remain a bachelor, because he was afraid should he make a wrong step in matrimony he might dull his imagination; but meeting Mlle. Julia Allard, who was a charming writer as well as a lovely woman, his fears were removed. His marriage has been a very happy one. His wife has been the light of his hearth, the regulator of his work and the discreet counselor of his inspiration. There is not a page that she has not revised, retouched and enlivened.

Yes, he has colic again.
Why don't you give him Dr. Taylor's Best Soothing Syrup?
Is that good?
Yes, for Pain, Colds, Coughs, &c., it is excellent for either young or old. Of the many kinds of medicines I have used in my family I have found none to equal it.
Thank you, Jane, I will try it. Margaret Ann, go as soon as you can to either Reynolds' or Shaw's Drug Store, and get a bottle of Dr. Taylor's Soothing Syrup. 1-3-6m

HOW CAN THE LONG
A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake, and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. Write to F. I. Whitney, G. P. & T. A., St. Paul, Minn., for maps, books and guides. RHYMES OF THE TIMES.

A Truth.

Oft in a beauteous body
A soul [illegible] is hid,
As the [illegible] span-worm nestles
The leaves of the rose amid.

Oft in a frame ill-favored
A heart of gold we find,
As the brightest of earth's jewels
From the darkest caves are mined.
—Susie M. Best.

Crying for the Moon.

In the nurse's arms one night,
In the balmy month of June,
Lay a baby spent and tired
With crying for the moon.
And we softly we smiled,
Said: "Poor, silly little child!
He'll know better soon."

Vainly had he tried to leap
Up toward the glowing sky,
And because [illegible] love restrained
He could only fret and cry;
And we said, and proudly smiled:
"He'll know better silly child!
Better, by and by."

Will he? Please to tell me when;
I don't think it will be seen.
If he's like most other men
He will always want the moon.
As a Boy, he'll want the toys
And [illegible] of far richer boys;
These will be his moon.

As a Youth, he in distress
For some beauty, rich and fair;
For some furniture or dress,
For some toy he counteth rare.
And far older men will say:
"He'll grow wiser every day;
Wiser, unaware."

As a Man, he'll sigh for wealth,
Long for power, and hope for fame;
And because he gets them not
Idly murmur, wrongly blame.
Crying still for some great boon
Far above him as the moon;
Babe and man the same.
—Union Signal

A Touch of Nature.

A little maid upon my knee
Sighs wearily, sighs wearily;
"I'm tired out of dressin' dolls
And having stories read," says she.

"There is a book, if I could see,
I should be happy, perfickly!
My mamma keeps it on a shelf—
But that you can not have," says she.

"But here's your 'Old Man of the Sea,'
And 'Jack the Giant'!" (Lovingly
I tried the little maid to soothe.)
"The interestin' one," says she,

"Is that high-up one!—seems to me
The things you want just has to be Somethin' you haven't got; and that's
The interestin' one!" says she.
—Anna F. Burnham, in St. Nicholas

The Parting of the Hare;

OR, THE JACKRABBIT BEARS OUT HIS ARGUMENT.

Eh? "How did I know that you hadn't a gun?"
Pooh! Ask me a harder one, Mr. Man!
My conscience told me—did you ever have one?
Not likely—you're built on the human plan.

Oho! So you think I've "a gall for a jack—
A donkey-eared rabbit—to talk abuse
To the biped king?" I might answer you back
That the biped's only a featherless goose!

It's entirely a matter of point of view.
Do you think I'd be such a fork-legged lump—
Such a bald-skinned, petty-eared error as you?
What do you know of a thirty-foot jump?

Oh! you "take it out in superior brains!"
That's good—if you've got 'em! But then you see,
I've discovered on these Colorado plains
That legs are quite brainy enough for me!

Superior nothing! Aha! Look a-there!
That grizzly comes timely to point my tale!
You just wished for a gun that would bang the hare.
But now that it's "Hang the Bear!" you are pale!
Now I need no arms—(you observe these heels)
He'd have his appetite for his run!
*But I hate to disturb a bear at his meals—
So good-bye, King that is slave to a gun!*
—Charles F. Lummis, in Life.

The Unexpected.

When clouds are black and rain has long been chilling,
The sudden sun will oftimes struggle through,
Anon with splendor all the prospect filling,
From jeweled trees to skies of deepest blue.
When lives are dark and hope has ceased be guiling,
Some unexpected gleam may glad the sight,
And after years, in fortune a perfect smiling,
Be filled with naught save honor, love and light.
—George Horton, in Texas Siftings.

Beauty.

You ask what is beauty?
Ah me! Who can tell!
And who can unravel
Its deep, magic spell?

We turn to the ocean,
A foam-crested wave
Is cradling a beauty
Of which poets rave.

The grand, snow-capped mountain,
Whose high-reaching peak
Points ever to heaven,
Of beauty doth speak.

It dwells in the flowers,
And spring-bubbling dells;
We find it perfected
In rose-tinted shells.

A bird trills it out
As he skims through the air,
And it gleams in the sheen
Of a maid's golden hair.

But far better than all
Is beauty of mind;
It makes the possessor
Both lovely and kind.
—Frances Rawlins, in Chicago Herald.

A Grammatical Romance.

A cultured Boston girl was she;
He, handsome, rich, but from Chicago;
And how our mother tongue did fare
Whene'er he let his Wild West jaw go!

He'd conned the rules of grammar, too,
But failed to put them into practice;
He knew the righteous ways of speech,
But trod them not, the simple fact is.

"Elizabeth Barrett Browning Blobbs,
Be mine! You've learned me love's ex and passion;
I'll never wed no other girl!"
He cried, in wild Chicago fashion.

"Really," Miss E. B. B. Blobbs cried,
And high her cultured ire had risen,
"If you can't use more proper speech
I simply must decline to listen!"

"Decline to listen! No you don't!"
Chicago cried, no whit frustrated;
"Listen's a verb; and verbs, I think,
Are not declined, but conjugated!"

This native wit so struck the maid
(He'd wheat in many an elevator)
That all she said was: "I'm your [illegible]"
She wanted him to conjugate her.
—The Lounger.

Only a Relic.

Aye, only a relic dimmed with tears.
The winter day is dying.
And memories of youth's loving years
Come with the night wind's sighing.
A token of love of by-gone days,
When life was bright, unshaded;
The thought of one with the lover strays;
The golden dreams have faded.

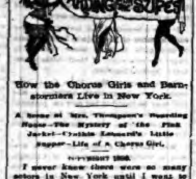
In the mist of swift-advancing years
The dreams of youth are hidden;
The relic is dimmed with bitter tears
The tears which come unbidden.
But the world is short—time quickly flies—
And heavy tears of sorrow
Will be forgotten 'neath the skies
Of that blest day—to-morrow.
—Flavel Scott Mines, in Harper's Bazar.

The city of Rome seems to be an almost inexhaustible depository of interesting relics. Archeologists and students generally will be interested in the latest find, which is claimed to be nothing less than the pavement of the ancient temple of Jupiter.

During the recent floods in Japan 2,410 persons were killed and 155 were wounded; 90,000 were deprived of the necessaries of life; 50,000 houses were swept away or rendered uninhabitable; 150,000 acres of agricultural land with their crops were laid waste; 5,000 bridges were carried away, and hundreds of miles of roads were destroyed.

A tunnel across the English channel is not among the improbabilities of the near future. The project is pronounced feasible by competent engineers, and a late number of the Scientific American contains the plans and estimates for such a structure, which were discussed at a meeting of the Iron and Steel Institute at Paris during the present year.

Montevideo, the capital of Uruguay, has been taking a census, and finds its population to be 175,000. This indicates a great and rapid growth, but Montevideo, though it has a better harbor and is not so far up stream as its more successful rival, Buenos Ayres, can not hope to overtake or keep within sight of that Argentine capital on the opposite bank of the great frith, or sea estuary, or river, known as La Plata. Buenos Ayres has to-day a population of 450,000, having doubled in about eight years.



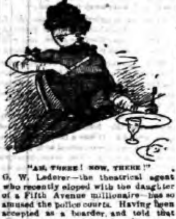
How the Chorus Girls and Barnstormers Live in New York.

A Scene at Mrs. Thompson's Boarding House—The Mystery of the Pink Jacket—Cynthia Leonard's Little Supper—Life of a Chorus Girl.

COPYRIGHT 1890.

I never knew there were so many actors in New York until I went to board with the supes.

It is six o'clock and dinner time at Mrs. Thompson's, a boarding house devoted to the chorus, concert-hall singers and supernumeraries generally. The house has lately come into notoriety as the boarding place of Clara Chester Binns, the London concert-hall singer, whose case to prove herself the wife of G. W. Lederer—the theatrical agent who recently eloped with the daughter of a Fifth Avenue millionaire—has so amused the police courts. Having been accepted as a boarder, and told that the charges are six for dinner or fourteen tickets for $5, I pick my way through a hall piled with trunks into a dining room where several tables are spread and men and women are seated. These persons are members of companies playing in the city, or else they are "stock" here—that is, out of a job—or they are just arrived per steamer, en route to other cities.



"AH, THERE! NOW, THERE!"

Vainly trying to decipher the badly-written and superfluous bill of fare, I raise my eyes to encounter on the wall opposite a large engraving of Da Vinci's "The Last Supper." Surely, I thought, this betokens a pious household and a cultured one; but a voice cuts rudely across this sober thought.

"Ah, there! Now, there!"

It proceeds from the prettiest girl in the room, and this proves to be her method of calling the waiter.

The exclamation and not the picture I find to be the keynote of the culture, and the appearance of the company I find to be in harmony with the discourse. There is on them the common expression which results from the same habits of life, and this expression is now a cosmopolitanism, born of constant travel, which sits oddly on persons who are evidently of very ordinary origin, who, if not in this occupation, would be plodding in quiet work as seamstresses, porters and salesmen. Among no other assemblage of the same origin could be heard such snatches of conversation as there.

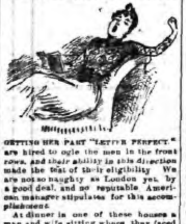
"I met Blank in Melbourne the other day—"

"Don't you wish you'd a-went to Montevideo with us?"

"That was a snap we had in Dublin," and so on.

But the landlady is gradually dominating the conversation. She is saying: "To my mind, since poor John McCullough died, there has been no one to take his place like Wilson Barrett." The expression "poor John McCullough" is common among stage employees, and he must be called the first saint in their calendar. And now Mrs. Thompson rises to the vacant space between the tables and gives an imitation of Barrett as Claudian. The calico wrapper she wears being unconfined by a belt and minus several buttons is readily manipulated to suggest a Roman toga, and Mrs. Thompson makes the most of her opportunities.

New York has an endless number of boarding houses devoted exclusively to this rank of the profession, but not all have the tone of this one. A certain per cent. of the women in this grade of stage service are fast, but fast women do not preponderate as they do abroad, where the members of some companies are hired to ogle the men in the front rows, and their ability in this direction made the test of their eligibility. We are not so naughty as London yet, by a good deal, and no reputable American manager stipulates for this accomplishment.



GETTING HER PART "LETTER PERFECT."

At dinner in one of these houses a man and wife sitting where they faced me stared at me persistently, and when I put on my cloak in the hall the man was there and he followed me into the street. "May I walk along with you to the theater?" he said. Seeing that I had an attendant waiting on the curbstone and resented his petition he said apologetically that he had met me in Chicago at the time of that jacket mystery at Mrs. Blank's, but he supposed I had forgotten it. He further said:

"We learned the whole inside of that queer affair, and as we knew you failed to unravel it at the time, my wife thought perhaps you never learned it, and we agreed I should ask you."

I saw here an opportunity to learn more unwritten history of a theatrical boarding house and my course was instantly decided.

"May I accompany you back to your wife?" and back we went. I said:

"Madam, you have mistaken me for some one else, but my curiosity is roused, and if you feel like telling me the story I would like to hear it."

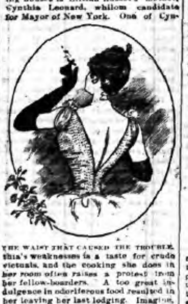
Who that has had an interesting incident suddenly recalled can resist an invitation to tell it? They had taken me for the contralto of —— company, and this is the tale:

No star had ever put up at Miss Blank's until the advent of Miss L——, who had just emerged from the chorus and was singing minor roles. She had the best room in the house and was envied by the other boarders for her numerous and chic wardrobe. Among other things she had a very charming house jacket of old rose silk, which she often wore at dinner, and whose appearance always turned the other ladies green with jealousy. It was a negligee affair falling well open at the throat and with sleeves ending at the elbow in a flowing ruffle. One evening she left this waist lying across her bed, and when she returned from the theater it was gone. At breakfast she announced her loss, but on going up stairs found it hanging in her closet. This occurred several times and was reported in the dining room, but as the jacket always reappeared Miss L——'s fellow-boarders began to laugh at her, and it was pretty generally believed among them that she had a nightly hallucination born of after-theater wine suppers. Miss L— was jeered to silence, but still the jacket went and came, and was no less a puzzle because she was forced to keep the matter to herself. The morning after she left town and took the mysterious corsage with her a newspaper contained this paragraph:

"THE FAIR ADRIENNE IN TROUBLE."

"At the —— street concert hall last night Mlle. appeared on the stage in a shabby and prudishly high-necked gown, which incensed the manager and caused such a row behind the scenes that a policeman was summoned. Mlle. explained to a reporter that the pink silk waist she had been wearing for some time was stolen last night and she had not had time to supply its place. She lives in one of that row of theatrical boarding houses of which Miss Blank's is one, and the presumption is that some other fair kicker has, by means of the low wing roofs which run along the block, carried off this pink confection to grace some other Bohemian resort."

One of the queer characters that haunt the New York theatrical boarding houses is Lillian Russel's mother, Cynthia Leonard, whilom candidate for Mayor of New York. One of Cynthia's weaknesses is a taste for crude victuals, and the cooking she does in her room often raises a protest from her fellow-boarders. A too great indulgence in odoriferous food resulted in her leaving her last lodging. Imagine, if you can, the brave Cynthia and the fair Lillian—bidden from her up-town flat—sitting down to a little supper of fried onions and cabbage, while the rest of the household got nothing but the fragrance. Small wonder if there is complaint.



THE WAIST THAT CAUSED THE TROUBLE.

Turn into Bulfinch Place some day in the ancient quarter of Boston, and pull the bell of No. 2, but see that you do it reverently, for the threshold is sacred to the memory of many footlight idols who are now passed off into the silence. This is the most famous private boarding place of theatrical stars in America. It is Miss Foster's house and she herself is one of Boston's typical old ladies. Slender, gray, and as delicate as the laces about her wrists and throat, and so old that the teacup shakes in her blue-veined hand, she knows more about the private habits of our celebrated actors than anyone else, except their families, and she could furnish volumes of unwritten biography concerning them. The house is full of mementoes, from paintings by Jefferson to cast-off costumes of McCullough, and every nook and cranny speaks of William Warren. I found Annie Pixley here in the room where Warren spent his last years. "He died in this bed," said Miss Pixley: "where my trunk is stood his coffin; it is a privilege to occupy the room after him."

But the most interesting room in this house is the kitchen. Here the after-theater supper used to be, and I pre*sume now is, laid. It is a quaint, Puri*tan looking place, with a dresser and a Dutch oven, and shining rows of copper and tin vessels upon the walls. Here Jefferson and Warren, and McCullough, and Maggie Mitchell, Annie Pixley, Barrett and the lamented Kate Beaumont, Booth, Murdock and many others have gathered at midnight. One can imagine that some very good things have been said here, when Hamlet brought his wit and Rip Van Winkle his merriment and the others their meed to the store. One who has shared these suppers says that some of the best things these men and women ever said have been said in Miss Foster's kitchen.

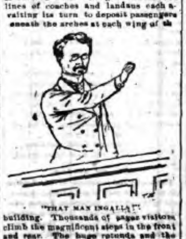
WHEN THE LIONS ROAR.

Amos Cummings Tells of Memorable Weeks in Congress.

"That Man Ingalls" in the Senate, and Speaker Reed in the House the Storm Centers—How the Galleries Looked.

COPYRIGHT 1890

Washington is a thermometer of political excitement. The quicksilver raises and falls in proportion to the heat of the debates at the Capitol. When Congress is excited the city is excited. Nearly everybody depends upon the Government for a living, and as Congress furnishes the supplies for the Government everybody in the National Capital is interested. As high noon approaches, hundreds of vehicles dash through the streets on their way to the Capitol. The horse-cars are filled to overflowing, and there are no empty seats in the long herdic omnibuses that climb Capitol Hill. The esplanade in front of the great building is covered with carriages. There are lines of coaches and landaus each awaiting its turn to deposit passengers beneath the arches at each wing of the building. Thousands of [illegible] visitors climb the magnificent steps in the front and rear. The huge rotunda and the hall of statuary are filled with a swirling tide of humanity. It eddies to and fro, and steady streams of men and women pour through the corridors and climb the marble stairs leading to the galleries. All are eager to witness the scenes of excitement in the Chamber of either the House or the Senate.



"THAT MAN INGALLS!"

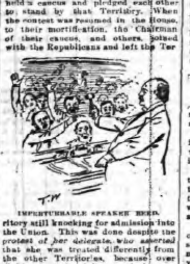
These scenes seem to be periodical. They illustrate sessions of Congress as pictures illustrate books of travel. Hardly a session passes without one or more of them. In the first session of the Fiftieth Congress the fight of General Oates, of Alabama, against the Tax Refunding Bill served as an illustration. There was a continuous session, or "legislative day," as it is called, for nearly a fortnight. The General finally compromised by postponing the decisive fight to the second session of the same Congress.

In that session there were half a dozen illustrative scenes. One attended the effort of the Hon. Thomas Brackett Reed to amend the rules so as to tie the hands of the filibusters. It was a fight that lasted three days, and it kept the heart of Washington throbbing with excitement. Harsh words were spoken, and there were wild rushes in the House around talking engines too well supplied with steam. Reed was finally beaten by three votes, in a House with seventeen Democratic majority. He really turned his defeat into a personal victory.

The legislative mercury then fell to a comfortable figure, but quickly rose again and the weather became hotter than ever.

Gen. Weaver began to filibuster on behalf of Oklahoma, and Washington was again in a ferment. All were anxious to see the legislative show. Humanity swarmed in the galleries like bees in a hive. The Greenback General was inexorable. There were more lively scenes upon the floor. He kept up his filibustering until a compromise was effected. Under it he secured the consideration of his Oklahoma Bill, and the Territory was thrown open to settlers.

Another scene of excitement attended the passage of the bills providing for the admission of North and South Dakota, Montana and Washington. The Democrats were anxious to include New Mexico. The fight became bitter. They held a caucus and pledged each other to stand by that Territory. When the contest was resumed in the House, to their mortification, the Chairman of their caucus, and others, joined with the Republicans and left the Territory still knocking for admission into the Union. This was done despite the protest of her delegate, who asserted that she was treated differently from the other Territories, because over eighty per cent. of her population was Roman Catholic.



IMPERTURBABLE SPEAKER REED.

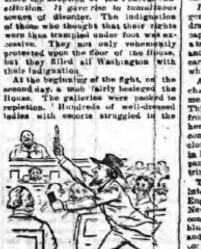
After this came the exciting days when Judge Payson, of Illinois, and the Rev. John Anderson, of Kansas, tried to prevent the consideration of the Pacific Railroad Funding and International Copyright Bills. The counting and announcement of the electoral vote sent the mercury up to more than torrid heat. It descended toward zero until Randall's effort to force the Tobacco Tax Repeal Bill to the front. When Kennedy, of Ohio, waved the bloody shirt as a signal of attack in the Smalls-Elliott contested election case, there was another grand rush for the Capitol. It was in this attack that Henry Cabot Lodge announced the intention of the Republicans to force through the next House a Federal election bill.

Even in the last hours of the session there was an extraordinary scene. A new President was to be inaugurated at noon. The House met at 9:55 a. m. It had two hours to live. Employes of the Senate barricaded the door leading from the House wing to the great rotunda and refused admission even to Congressmen and their families. When the announcement was made on the floor of the House that this was done by order of "the man Ingalls," there were passionate outbursts. Denunciation ruled the hour and Members advocated a resort to force. One who had been ordained to the ministry of the Gospel offered to head a batallion with an axe and remove the barrier by main force. He claimed that Members of the House had the same right to the privileges of the rotunda as Members of the Senate. If any barrier was raised it ought to have been raised at the Senate entrance to the rotunda and not at the House entrance. The bitter harangues lasted till there was only half an hour of life left in the Fiftieth Congress; crowded galleries pulsated with excitement until they died away. Meantime the barrier had been removed by order of "the man Ingalls." The storm within had been paralleled by the storm without, for never was there so remarkable an inauguration in the way of weather as that of President Harrison.

The interest in these scenes bears no comparison to the interest felt in the recent struggle in the House of Representatives. Nor was the excitement nearly as intense. The rulings of the Speaker in the parliamentary contest preceding the fight over the West Virginia contested election cases touched a constitutional point. Touch the constitution and you touch the heart of the nation. That instrument provides that a majority of each House shall constitute a quorum. Heretofore this majority has been ascertained by the record of the yeas and nays. They could be ordered at any time by one-fifth of those present. The Speaker decided that he had power to decide whether there was a quorum present or not, regardless of the yeas and nays. If he saw enough Members in the House to make a quorum he claimed that he had the right to announce a quorum present, even if it was not shown by the yeas and nays. Of course the appeals from these decisions were sustained by his party's majority.

The decision, however, was made in defiance of the precedents in the House since the adoption of the Federal Con*stitution. It gave rise to tumultuous* scenes of disorder. The indignation of those who thought that their rights were thus trampled under foot was excessive. They not only vehemently protested upon the floor of the House, but they filled all Washington with their indignation.

At the beginning of the fight, on the second day, a mob fairly besieged the House. The galleries were packed to repletion. Hundreds of well-dressed ladies with escorts struggled in the corridors and vainly applied for admission. The main gallery fronts the Speaker. It is reserved for men. The blacks had learned that something of importance to them was going on. They connected the fight in some way with the alleged intention of the Republicans to bring in a Federal election bill. Squads of them centered at the clock above the main entrance and black files stretched over the gallery like divergent rays. The ladies' galleries flank the reporters' gallery which is above the Speaker's desk. They were crowded to suffocation. Each doorway was banked with spectators and men were standing on chairs in the corridors trying to peer over the heads of those in front of them. The executive gallery was thrown open to distinguished strangers. The galleries reserved for the families of Members indicated the intensity of the excitement. Ladies were seated upon the steps, in the aisles and every nook and corner was filled with spectators.



"DAMNABLE! SIR."

The scenes on the floor were well worth witnessing. At times both wings of the House were in dire disorder. Democrats were protesting defiantly against the rulings of the Speaker, and in thundering tones demanding what they deemed were their rights. The Republicans were on their feet, laughing derisively and jibing them. Anon Silver-haired Breckinridge, towering Springer, Silver-dollar Bland or some other prominent Democrat would rush to the arena and demand recognition. Some would persist until they obtained it, while others would give up in despair, and drop into the nearest vacant seat. Even ex-Speaker Carlisle was once forced to move down a side aisle to the front seats and thrice ask for recognition be*fore he received it*. There was intense excitement when Mr. Bynum denounced the Speaker's ruling as "arbitrary, outrageous and damnable." The Indianian was roaring like a lion.

Major Martin of Texas, better known as "Old Howdy," was in the Speaker's lobby cutting a plug of tobacco. He heard the roaring and rushed upon the floor, plug and jack-knife in hand, just as Bynum uttered the word "damnable." The arena was filled with members listening breathlessly to Bynum's speech. The Major threw back his long hair, shook the plug and jack-knife in the face of the Speaker, and reiterated the words, "Damnable! damnable!" in tones expressive of his sense of the injury to his party.

"NOW, CONDUCTOR," said an old lady who got on the cars, "I place my safety in your hands." "All right, madam, I guess we can take good care of you." "And if there is an accident and the cars are thrown down a steep embankment you'll be sure to wake me up, won't you?"

TWO NEW HAVEN men were comparing notes on their domestic experiences, when one of them said: "Well, I have learned something by experience. When I come home late now I open the door quietly and throw in my hat. If it is kicked out I don't go in. It is best to maintain peace in the family at any cost."

A FRANKLIN (Pa.) editor happened to mention to a friend on Christmas Day that, among other things he really wanted, was an extra pair of suspenders. Be*fore the day was over half the stores in* town had sold all the suspenders they had, and enough of those articles to last him for one hundred and fifty years were in the possession of the editor.

A GERMAN Baron invited an English guest to shoot with him on his reserve. A LITTLE boy of Portland, Me., had committed some misdemeanor for which he was about to receive punishment at the hands of his mother. The boy begged to be first allowed to go to his room. Permission was granted, and the child went upstairs to his own room and closed the door behind him. The mother followed and listened outside, after telling him he must hurry and come down again to receive his punishment. The boy went to the side of the bed, knelt down and this was his prayer: "Dear Lord, if you love little boys and want to help one out, now is your time." The prayer was answered.

FREAKS OF FASHION.

LADIES of fashion in Boston, one of the local papers relates, now wear at their afternoon teas Egyptian costumes.

PARLOR maids have been forced into white muslin dresses and Turkish slippers with tassels on the toes, but minus so much as a spring heel.

THE favorite fad of the hour among luxurious New York women is to have themselves rubbed all over several times a week, after the bath, with cocoa oil. It is undoubtedly good for the nerves, nice for the skin, and nourishing.

THERE is a large demand this season for snow-white flowers at dinner. A combination of snowy bride roses, lilies of the valley and white lilacs, with maiden hair ferns, are arranged on a fine white table, set with crystal and silver and lighted by candelabra holding white candles, with white silk shades.

It is considered quite a swell swagger to serve coffee and brandy in the drawing-room after dinner. A maid in cap and pinafore goes to each guest with a tray, the first containing a demitasse, and the second a basin of sugar, a small carafe of brandy and a wax torch with which the spirit is fired.

AN innovation in dinner-giving is the changing of the table-cloth during the meal without the change being noticed. This custom reaches us from England, from the Queen's table. She commences her dinner on a cloth of Saxony linen, continues it on an embroidered cambric cloth, bleached as they only can bleach in England, and finishes the meal on a spangled Roman table-cloth, beautifully trimmed with lace.

THE custom of putting housemaids into livery, which is common enough in England, is beginning to be adopted in New York. The costume, or uniform, consists of a skirt of dark livery cloth, blue, green or brown, with plain front and broad plaits at the back; a waistcoat of the same cloth, with fine crosswise lines of red braid and a coat cut away in front and covering the hips. Metal livery buttons are used on the coat and waistcoat. A small white cap, stiff white collar and cuffs and a white cravat complete the attire.

THE latest contrivance which is interesting the ladies is a glove with a pocket in it, invented by the Duchess of Leinster. The pocket is a tiny affair, fixed in the palm of the left glove, and is thus silent testimony to the fact that most women are right-handed. It is for nickels and dimes. On entering a car or stage the fingers of the right hand deftly open the little pocket and the necessary change is easily secured. It is a question whether the gloves will become the rage. Most women are mighty particular about the fit of their gloves, and whether or not the insertion of a pocket, no matter how tiny, in the palm of one of them mars the symmetry of the pair is a problem which experience alone can solve.

WASHINGTON.

The advent of another birthday anniversary of [illegible] Washington, that [illegible] of [illegible], which of all [illegible], ought to [illegible] a [illegible] of American [illegible].

Teach the youth of our country to preserve, ponder and practically [illegible] the virtues, both public and private, of Washington, and [illegible] will surely be added to that glorious citadel of freedom he was so instrumental in founding.

Impress upon the rising generation of the United States the meaning and scope of genuine patriotism.

Not the bogus article now so lauded around by so many venal politicians, who, under the hypocritical plea of [illegible] the public welfare, constantly aim to aggrandize partisan power and corruptly pocket personal gain at the public expense, and who artfully conspire to convert governments, National, State and Local, into mere machines for the grinding out of trashy political grists.

But make them familiar with the [illegible] of the pure and positive patriotism of Washington, so grandly shown throughout his entire life and in the face of all circumstances, the reality of patriotic devotion to the honor and interests of his country and countrymen, irrespective of section, sect or party, unsullied by foul ambition, uncontaminated by mercenary greed, and devoid of the least tinge of dishonesty.

Such, in brief, was the patriotism of Washington.

What a noble study for the youth of America!

His name should be prominently engraven within every school house of our far-reaching Republic, and national history, coupled with his untarnished fame, be therein made living themes.

We want education to be emphatically Americanized.

Present home duties are essential topics.

Washington was a patriot.

Because, his sole ambition was for the good of country and the triumph of right principles.

He was a patriot.

Because, duty faithfully discharged constituted his polar star of action.

He was a patriot.

Because, right honestly governed every minute transaction of his life, whether as a private citizen of Virginia, Commander of the Continental Army, or first President of the United States.

He was not only a Patriot but a Christian.

Because, he ever relied upon a power mightier than human for wisdom and aid, in the dark hour of gloom and uncertainty, when stout hearts yielded to discouragement, he, on the bended knee of prayer, asked assistance of the God of Heaven and succor timely came.

Let us honor and imitate WASHINGTON!

The wise selection of Judge VanSyckle to succeed himself attests the fact that in Leon Abbett, New Jersey has a Governor worthy of the name.

Scurvy politicians think it a smart dodge to stuff ballot boxes. The legitimate place to ruminate upon such smartness is behind prison bars.

Republican editors are crying for the abolition of Lay Judges. Were these officials Republicans instead of Democrats, how different would be the partisan song.

If a larger proportion of practical business men, farmers, merchants and mechanics, were chosen as legislators, how much more common sense and honesty would permeate enacted law.

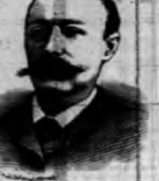
The House of Assembly did right in refusing to increase the salaries of Vice-Chancellors. With a deficiency in the finances of the State, the present time demands economic expenditures.

The New York Tribune, head organ of the Republican party, openly declares that Hill was elected Governor because he sold the Presidency. Truth [illegible] murder will out. The question arises, which was the most culpable, the Democrat who sold or the Republican who bought?

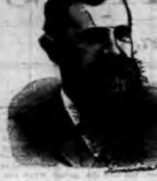
A New Way the Council Should Grade and Fill.

What Plainfield needs right now is a City surveyor. The sooner the office is created and filled, the better for the [illegible] many ways. [illegible]

THE OUTGOING AND INCOMING POSTMASTERS.



POSTMASTER WM. L. FORCE.



POSTMASTER-ELECT, ELIAS R. POPE.

Saturday's New York papers officially announced the appointment of Hon. Elias R. Pope as Postmaster in this city to succeed Postmaster Wm. L. Force. Although the appointment was made on Friday, it was not officially declared until the following day. THE PRESS publishes above the portraits of both the outgoing and incoming postmasters, and as a matter of fact it may be stated that neither portrait has ever before appeared in public print.

During the administration of Postmaster Force, Free Delivery service has been established in our city through his efforts, and it is a gratifying fact to the outgoing official to know that the service is a success and appreciated by the public. During his administration also, the business of the office has increased greatly, so that today the revenue is nearly double to that when he took possession four years ago next April. We think the public will bear us out in the assertion that he has made a capable and efficient official.

Mr. Pope has the honor of succeeding his successor in office. Those who remember his four years of official career as postmaster, can appreciate the fact that the public will again be faithfully served and the business of the office conducted on sound business principles.

DEDICATION SERVICE

THE "MARY E. WILSON MEMORIAL CHAPEL" FORMALLY OPENED.

Interesting Exercises at Washingtonville on Washington's Birthday—Singing, Addresses and the Report of the Building Committee—Other Details.

The dedication services following the completion of the new "Mary E. Wilson Memorial chapel" took place at Washingtonville, on Saturday, the attendance being very large.

The exercises opened with an anthem by the Holy Cross church choir, followed by the invocation by the Rev. A. R. Dilts. "Blest be the tie," etc., was next sung by the congregation, after which Mr. E. L. Bonny read in the absence of Col. John Wilson, who was confined to his home by illness, the report of the Building Committee as follows:

The time has arrived when it becomes the duty of the Finance and Building Committee to make a final report of its work. Washingtonville Sunday school and immediate friends have contributed $2,155.17. Donations from other sources $3,423.12. Total cost of this chapel in fee-simple is $5,574.29. There is no indebtedness. It is my pleasing duty in behalf of the committee to express to Mr. Teal the architect, our profound thanks for his contribution of plans and specifications, also much valuable time in directing the successful construction of the chapel. Whilst all of the committee have been earnest in their efforts, I wish to say to Messrs Bonny, Andrew Wilson, H. Rodgers, Weiss and Wilson, you are very largely indebted for this handsome little chapel. The committee having finished its work, we now tender the "Mary E. Wilson Memorial chapel" to the trustees of the Washingtonville Sunday school Association in perpetuity and ask to be discharged.

Mr. Bonny also accepted the chapel, on behalf of the Board of Trustees, responding in a few well-chosen words.

Mr. Paul C. Topidy sang a solo, "Jesus be Near," and the Rev. Cornelius Schenck followed with scripture reading and offered prayer, after which the choir sang an anthem, "O, God, Who has Prepared."

The Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes then made an address, in which he gave an interesting description of the new chapel, making allusion to the school house in which the congregation formerly worshipped. He also paid a fitting tribute to the late Mary E. Wilson, whom he characterized as a woman of stability and unselfish devotion to the church. Her loving remembrance, Dr. Yerkes said, is shown in the handsome edifice which is now being dedicated and which stands as a token of esteem to her memory.

The audience arose, while the Rev. Dr. K. P. Ketcham delivered the dedicatory prayer. The congregation joined in singing a hymn, after which the Rev. Dr. Hurlbut spoke on behalf of the Sunday schools; Mr. C. W. McCutchen spoke for the Y. M. C. A., taking for his text, "How Little Things Grow." Mr. James McGee made the closing address, giving the trustees and teachers some timely advice.

The choir sang an anthem, "They that Wait Upon the Lord," and the Rev. Dr. Ketcham pronounced the benediction, which brought to a close the first public meeting in the chapel.

The "Mary E. Wilson Memorial chapel," dedicated on Saturday, is built of rough mountain stone, the ends exposed to the weather being covered with moss. The stones were laid in cement, little or no pointing being necessary. The building is 30x58 feet in dimensions, and besides the main auditorium it contains a library and reception room. It is located on a knoll facing the main road leading through the valley, and its beauty is enhanced by three terraces sloping toward the roadway.

A NEW RELIGIOUS BODY ORGANIZED.

And Rev. J. W. Mitchell Extended a Call to the Pastorate.

The late troubles of the Mt. Olive church have resulted in a split of that church. The friends of the Rev. Mr. Mitchell met on Monday night in the hall over Stelle's drug store, corner of Park avenue and Front street, and organized themselves into a religious body to be known for the present as "The Emanuel Baptist Mission." The object of this body is to labor for the salvation of souls and to do all in their power to advance the cause of their Redeemer.

The meeting was of a very pleasant character being deeply characterized by the Master's spirit.

After the organization it was resolved to extend a call to the Rev. Mr. Mitchell to become their pastor.

This motion was carried without a dissenting voice. The Rev. Mr. Mitchell is considering the call and will no doubt accept.

The motive assigned by these people for starting this new interest is a desire for peace, and the enjoyment of their rights and privileges according to the usage of Baptist churches.

Service will be held in the same hall, Sabbath evening at 7.45 o'clock and will continue until further notice.

Entrance on Front street, first door from entrance to Stelle's drug store.

—The State Firemen's Exempt Association will meet at New Brunswick on May 13.

They Are Legion.

Sarsaparillas and other advertised blood medicines are numerous, but the only one possessed of such superior curative properties as to warrant the manufacturers in selling it, as they are doing, through druggists, under a positive guarantee, is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. If it don't benefit or cure you get the money back which you paid for it. It is recommended to cure all chronic liver, blood and lung diseases, as biliousness, skin and scalp diseases, [illegible] swellings, salt-rheum, tetter, scrofula, and even [illegible] of the lungs (or consumption), if taken in time.

"JOE" ENGLISH AT REFORM HALL.

A Large Audience Greets the Famous Temperance Revivalist.

The simple announcement that "Joe" English, the temperance revivalist, and one of the founders of the Plainfield Reform Club, would be present at the sixth anniversary exercises of the club, and deliver an address, served to fill Reform Hall to overflowing, Sunday night, and many persons were obliged to return home, being unable to gain admission.

The platform contained many of those who are foremost in the temperance work, besides a goodly representation of the city clergymen. The pulpit decorations were rich and tasty. President Harper presided, and the regular Reform choir, under the leadership of Mr. H. J. Martin, and Miss Alice Smith as accompanist, furnished excellent music. Rev. W. E. Honeyman conducted the devotional exercises, and Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis made the opening address in his usual polished style, telling among other things, of how he became interested in the club and its work.

Mr. English was the next speaker, and for fully an hour he held the close attention of his hearers. The speaker was greeted with loud and continued applause. Mr. English related his experience here six years ago, when Mr Mabee and himself organized the Plainfield Reform Club, and succeeded in getting upwards of 2,000 signers to the total abstinence pledge. The speaker's remarks were from the theme: "Praying and working with one accord." He expressed regret at opening the saloons, after so much work had been done here. He admonished his hearers to follow in the steps of the twelve apostles—to stand together with one accord, and with Jesus Christ at the head, success would surely follow.

Mr. English told some affecting incidents illustrating the evils of intemperance. At the close of his remarks, he made an appeal for pledge signers, and several persons responded.

President Harper announced that Mr. English would speak in Reform Hall every evening this week, after which Rev. W. E. Honeyman pronounced the benediction.

DUNELLEN'S PATRIOTISM.

The Scholars in the Public School, Purchase a Flag and Hoist it With Appropriate Exercises.

The celebration of hoisting the new flag recently purchased by the pupils of the Dunellen Public school, took place on Friday afternoon, with appropriate exercises. The entertainment was one of marked success, and it will be long remembered, especially by those who took part.

At two o'clock the High school room was filled with the scholars and their friends, and a well prepared programme was carried out. The Rev. L. E. Livermore opened the exercises with prayer, then followed recitations, appropriate songs, and speeches were made by the members of the Board of Trustees. An essay on "The Flag," by Miss Ella Fisher, was exceedingly creditable. The flag presentation was made in behalf of the school by Master Willie Carpenter. It was received for the trustees by the Rev. L. E. Livermore, after which all adjourned to the school yard, and the stars and stripes were raised 'mid cheers, and much enthusiasm.

A bountiful collation furnished by the scholars and Mr. Thomas, was served to all present, and the celebration thus ended.

THE BOY'S CLUB.

An Encouraging Report by the Chairman of the Collection Committee.

The one hundred names which are being obtained to warrant the organization of a boy's club in this city, have been nearly all secured, over eighty names being already on the list. Besides the money they represent, workers are in embryo for the society now started. Mrs W. L. Patton, Chairman of the Collection Committee, states:

"We are pleased that such men as Mr. G. Wharton Edwards and Mr. Leo Daft are interested and have given their names as subscribers and workers. In advance we can see the delight of the boys, while they follow the artist in his delineations, to say nothing of the elevating influence upon them; we see their enthusiasm when the wonders of electricity are explained to them and their amusement over the magic lantern, exhibited by such an enterprising citizen.

"Any who have names for money or work, please send them without delay to the Chairman of the Collection Committee. As we approach the desired number, our excitement increases, and we want to waste no time in announcing 'obtained.'

"MRS W. L. PATTON,
"Chairman Collection Com.,
"26 East Ninth street."

Social and Luncheon.

The social and luncheon of the Ladies Aid Society of the Congregational church, held in the church parlors on Friday evening last, was well attended by members and friends of the church. There were four tables spread and presided over by Mrs J. B. Dewey, Mrs. Hall, Mrs. L. A. Sommer, Mrs. W. L. Patton, Mrs. Lapsley, Mrs. Robinson, Mrs. Maxwell and Miss Emily Hall. The bouquets of choice cut flowers which adorned the tables were from the floral conservatory of Mr. Wm. R. Brewer, in New York city, and gratuitously furnished by Mrs. Brewer.

Luncheon checks were sold by Miss G. Hall and Miss Florence V. Hurlbut. Mrs. Jackson attended to the apron table, and disposed of a large number of white aprons to ladies, and gentlemen as well. The ladies who waited upon the tables were very efficient and attentive. The committee, Mrs. Dunham, Mrs. Kent, Mrs. Barnes, Mrs. Larkins and Mrs. Bean, are to be congratulated on the success of the affair, which netted a goodly sum for the Society.

—The water works company has purchased land at Netherwood, for the location of water works.

NOTES FROM "THE VALLEY."

Pleasant Things Which Rev. Chas. E. Mitchell Has to Say of the Members of His Congregation.

Miss Louise Pangborn has just returned from a visit to Miss VanMeter, of Baltimore.

Miss Millie Ferguson, after a long illness, is out again, and her many young friends welcome the return of the roses to her cheeks.

We are all glad to see Dr. Hurlbut home again from his long trip through the South. With a master-hand he superintended the Sunday school last Sunday.

Mr. George Burgess, Jr., is confined at home with illness. Every one must know that George is sick, otherwise he would not be missing at the church services.

It was a beautiful and loving deed for each member of Mrs. Edwin Loomis' class of little girls to take some present to cheer the sick-room of their little classmate, Nettie Chandler.

On February 6, Mrs. Eliza Coles celebrated her eighty-ninth birthday. She still may be found in her pew on pleasant Sabbath mornings, and finds her chiefest joy in the Gospel which she has believed for more than sixty years.

Mrs. Harry D. French, of Willow avenue, is visiting her parents in Chicago. The children, Dudley and Edith, are with her. They will receive a warm welcome home from the many friends Mr. and Mrs. French have made during their brief residence in Plainfield.

Superintendent Jackson and wife have been in Michigan for the past two weeks. Business and pleasure have been combined. Mr. and Mrs. Jackson might not receive so much pleasure, but they would give their many friends more pleasure if they never went away from home.

At the last Quarterly Conference, Mr. J. G. Cadmus was elected District Steward, an office he has filled for years, and with whose duties he is thoroughly acquainted.

With thankful hearts we remember that none of our members have died during the past month. In view of the large number of deaths in the city, the above fact is remarkable.

Mr. and Mrs. James McGee recently celebrated the fortieth anniversary of their wedding. It was a family gathering and all the members, actual and prospective, were present. Ten years hence we friends will not allow ourselves to be excluded.

Mr. Geo. E. Vincent enters soon into a partnership with Dr. T. L. Flood, of the Chautauquan, in the publication of the books used in the C. L. S. C., course. The publishing house will be in Buffalo. May great success and riches be the reward of the new firm.

WASHINGTONVILLE WRINKLES.

Hoisting the Stars and Stripes on the School House—Other Items of a Diversified Nature Which Take the Attention of the Residents There.

The school flag was raised on the pole erected for it by Mr. Wm. Spencer, on the 22d inst., where it proudly floated to the breeze. This is the grand old flag that used to float from the school-house staff during the trying times of the war on receipt of the news of the victories of our armies. Many of the boys in this section donned the blue uniform to fight their country's battles. Many anxious folks at home watched the flag-staff on the old white school house to see if the flag still floated there. It told its own story of triumph or defeat, from the firing of the first gun at Fort Sumpter to the surrender at Appomattox Court House. Many are the associations clustered around the old flag. Some of the boys that left it floating when they went with their regiments, found it waving them a welcome home upon their victorious return four years afterwards.

Willie Menegar met with a serious accident Friday by the glancing of an axe off a log, the bit of the axe striking him on the ankle, cutting the bone. The unfortunate boy was taken to Muhlenberg Hospital where he is receiving skillful treatment from the attending physicians. He has no relatives in this country who take any interest in him. His parents, being poor subjects in Germany, sent their boy to this country that he might grow up with it and share the advantages to be found in America, or at least, escape their hard lot. The boy is still confined to the hospital.

There has been no ice for skating nor any snow for sleigh-riding parties, but Cupid has been busy just the same. A little bird has told of some plighted troths that have taken place, but which THE PRESS promised not to divulge until the proper time, while one young man expects to wed a Harlem lady in the near future. No cards.

The bell on the new Mary E. Wilson chapel has been heard over two miles away. The largest attendance at any session of the Sunday school took place last Sunday, when the scholars met at the school house and marched in a body over to the handsome new chapel, singing as they went. The total attendance was 103.

The many friends of John Simpson, who has been confined to the hospital for the past two months, will be glad to know that he is again able to be among his friends, although somewhat weak from the effects of his illness, typhoid pneumonia.

Mr. M. H. French, who has run the Valley Mill for almost half a century, contemplates giving up business and removing to Plainfield, where he may be near his children. He thinks he has earned a rest.

Mrs. George Demier is confined to her home by illness, bordering on pneumonia.

Miss Lizzie Milligan of Brooklyn, N. Y., has been visiting the Misses Demier.

REFORM HALL AGAIN FILLED.

A Very Large and Enthusiastic Gathering.

There was a large and enthusiastic gathering in Reform Hall on Tuesday, at the third in the series of gospel temperance meetings which Mr. Joseph English is conducting there. President Harper was in the chair.

After the service of song, led by Mr. H. J. Martin, Mr. English read the scripture lesson, and the Rev. C. E. Mitchell offered a most beautiful and touching prayer. Mr. English followed with one of his striking and instructive addresses, flashing with humor, but at times interspersed with serious and improving thought. He took for his text: "Faith, Hope and Charity," and for an hour he held the audience spell-bound. To appreciate Mr. English one must hear him.

The meetings will continue every evening this week.

The Street Commissioner Should Act at Once.

The attention of the Street Commissioner is called to the deplorable condition of the roadbed on Arlington avenue, from Ninth street to Cedar Brook. It is said that the driveway is in a really dangerous condition, and unless some repairs are made at once, the city may be called upon to settle some claims for damages. The avenue is without a street light from Ninth street to the brook.

Let quality, not quantity, be the test of a medicine. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the concentrated extract of the best and purest ingredients. Medical men everywhere recommend it as the surest and most economical blood medicine in the market.

WOODRUFF IN THE CONSOMME.

THIS KNOWLEDGE MAY INTEREST HIS CREDITORS HERE.

The Former Proprietor of the Netherwood Hotel Comes to Grief in Montreal—His Past and Present Record—How THE PRESS Came to be a Sufferer.

The New York papers of Saturday and Sunday, contained glowing accounts of the escapades of Mr. S. V. Woodruff, formerly proprietor of the Netherwood Hotel in this city. One paper says: The suit which has been begun in Montreal by Jeweler Cochenthaler against S. V. Woodruff, until January manager of the Balmoral Hotel, has been the means of revealing a sensation the details of which will extend from the sandy ocean beach of New Jersey to the frozen banks of the St. Lawrence.

The defendant in the present suit is a gentleman celebrated in that city for his suave manners and remarkable faculty of making friends of every one he meets. In September the Balmoral Hotel—the biggest in Montreal—advertised for a manager. Among the answers received was one from Asbury Park, N. J. The letter contained the applicant's photograph. The Board of Directors were so favorably impressed with the gentleman's appearance that they engaged him at once. The applicant was S. V. Woodruff.

The application was duly considered, and Woodruff was installed. His manners won nearly everybody with whom he came in contact. The management voluntarily increased his salary after he had been in the Hotel three months, besides presenting him with $1,000 worth of the stock of the concern.

Suddenly business began to fall off. The profits were not as large as they had been. Several small irregularities and two or three big ones were discovered, which Woodruff, in his mild, suave manner, said were due to the carelessness of the employes. But other irregularities appeared, and Woodruff, clever as he was, was nonplussed to account for them.

UGLY RUMORS.

Then ugly rumors began to circulate, with which Woodruff's name and record were connected. Mrs. Churchill, according to report, had only been Woodruff's niece for the past twelve years or so, or since Mrs. Woodruff died, and formerly she was the adopted daughter of Woodruff's father-in-law and a companion of Mrs. Woodruff.

The investigation continued, and finally, it is said, a series of crooked transactions were disclosed which made the blood of the hotel owners run cold. Woodruff had in one way or another obtained a reputation in and around the hotel which made him an exceedingly shunned individual, except by tradesmen.

A detective was engaged, who made a search for Woodruff's full record and the results were not at all satisfactory.

HIS CAREER.

Woodruff's career began in the Wellington Hotel, corner of Forty-second street and Madison avenue, New York. There Mrs. Churchill was housekeeper and general overseer. Woodruff then became manager of the Pavilion Hotel at New Brighton, S. I. There he made the place a success, but of a peculiar kind. "Buffalo Bill's" show was at Erastina at that time and there were high orgies at the Pavilion until the proprietors called a halt.

Woodruff next bobbed up at the Netherwood Hotel. He was manager of that hotel until the Sheriff stepped in and seized the place.

Woodruff's next venture was the Coleman House, at Asbury Park. He was finally dispossessed. Mrs. Churchill was housekeeper of the Coleman House, too.

Then Woodruff lay quiet until he got his clutches on the Balmoral.

The jeweler mentioned at the beginning of this story, sold Woodruff a magnificent diamond pin. Two days afterward the employes of the hotel presented him with a magnificent pin. The value of the pin is what Cochenthaler is suing for, and it is in connection with this suit that the above facts and many more which are withheld were elicited. Very interesting details will undoubtedly be brought out at the trial.

Woodruff was finally given the choice of several evils by the hotel proprietors, and choosing the lesser, he resigned. Since he left the hotel it has recovered the good business it formerly enjoyed.

Mr. Woodruff will long be remembered in this city, by the creditors he left. When THE PRESS first started on May 10, 1887, Woodruff was the first to pay in a five dollar subscription. The bill was framed and hung up in the editorial room as a memento, but one Sunday night last Summer, some one, evidently one of his creditors, entered the office and stole the bill, resorting to desperate means in order to get it.

CONCERNING THE SCOTCH PLAINS SCHOOL.

The Action of the Trustees and the Advisory Committee Sanctioned by One Who Knows What He is Talking About.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Dear Sir: My attention has just been called to a communication in your paper of February 20, written by David P. Hall, in which he says:

"The animus of the article (referring to a previous article in your paper) would seem to be that 'Fanwood' architects and builders were not employed"—i. e., employed to build the new school building now being erected near Scotch Plains, in Fanwood township.

Now, we have no builders residing in Fanwood, and as I am the only architect, I must be the one to whom he refers. If I am, he certainly ought to have been more charitable towards one who gave him so much assistance in preparing the "provisional plans"—for which, by the way, the Trustees have not even given me a vote of thanks—and aiding him in obtaining estimates to base his report, which was presented to the District at the April meeting.

As to "animus," I have none. If it were the pleasure of the Trustees and the Advisory Committee to select an architect not a resident or a taxpayer of the township, they were at liberty to do so, and the small obligation under which they were to me, ought not to be considered, as it was a business transaction, and if as I am informed, the plans were presented to the Board we, the residents, should certainly congratulate ourselves upon the saving of this expense.

I have seen the school building but twice since it has been enclosed and have not been able to inspect it at all.

I agree with Mr. Hall as to the standing of the architects Messrs McKim, Mead & White, as professionally, I know them to be second to none in the country.

Yours respectfully,
CLARENCE W. SMITH.
Fanwood, February 25, 1890.

—Just at present there is a great demand for small houses in this city. There are plenty of large houses available, but for men of moderate means, the demand is greater than the supply. Here is a good chance for some of our wealthy capitalists to "fill a long felt want."

Good-wife Grundle grieves and groans,
Day and night with sighs and moans
Wears her life away.
Good-wife Gayheart sings and smiles;
Time, the gray old thief, beguiles;
Keeps as fresh as May.

The two women are of the same age, but Good-wife Grundle looks fully fifteen years the older. She is the victim of ills which might be cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Pain and low spirits are her constant companions. Good-wife Gayheart, thanks to the "Prescription," enjoys perfect health and seems to grow more young, vivacious and agreeable every day. There is nothing equal to this remedy.

AMATEUR MINSTRELSY.

LAST NIGHT'S PERFORMANCE A PRONOUNCED SUCCESS.

The Members of the Crescent League in Burnt Cork Specialties—The Gross Receipts Over $700.

The amateur minstrel entertainment given in Music Hall, on Tuesday, by members of Plainfield Crescent League, was one of the most successful that has ever been given in this city. Not a seat was to be obtained three days after the sale began, and last night, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, there was standing room only.

The first part of the programme was exceedingly good. The jokes were bright and fresh, and under the skillful supervision of Mr. Ed. Marble, gathered a professional swing which they might otherwise have lacked. The overture was good, and the solos by Messrs Charles P. Rogers, Robert Gorton, A. L. Camancho, Elmer E. Runyon, B. T. Barnes and Geo. A. Homan, with their concerted refrains were well chosen and very pleasing. Those of Messrs Robert Gorton and E. E. Runyon were the most artistically rendered, while that of Mr. Camancho was the most amusing. In fact it was worth the price of admission to hear the latter sing "All Over." The double quartette, without accompaniment, rendered by Messrs E. E. Runyon, M. VanArsdale, C. Teel, Geo. Stevens, B. T. Barnes, R. Gorton, C. P. Rogers and F. R. F. Huntsman, was excellent and received a deserved recall. Mr. Geo. P. Taggart's "temporary insanity" was a masterpiece of true negro delineation, and furnished much merriment for the audience.

The banjo selections by Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Jenkins, assisted by their little pupil, Master Dunn, gave pleasure to the audience, and proved that something good can come from Somerville. Mr. Camancho, as a ventriloquist, was as successful as in his other work, and afforded the audience much amusement. The entertainment closed with a take-off on the Common Council, and contained some bright hits upon the failings of the city fathers.

Mr. Marble is to be congratulated on the success of the entertainment, as, through his efforts, the performers were instructed and coached. That the members of the League appreciated his efforts in their behalf was evident from the fact that a large number of them tendered him a serenade at Miller Brothers' Hotel after the performance, to which he responded in a few complimentary remarks regarding the performers and the members in general. The League was fortunate in securing this gentleman's services in their instruction. Mr. Marble has had long experience in the minstrel business, and his many friends will be pleased to learn that in June next he commences an engagement with the famous Geo. Thatcher, of Thatcher, Primrose & West fame, who starts out in that month with a company of his own, which will excel all others on the road.

Financially the entertainment was a grand success, over $700 being the amount of the total receipts. The League will realize about $500 in round numbers from the entertainment.

SECOND ANNIVERSARY

Of the Dedication of the German Reformed Church.

As stated in THE PRESS of Friday, the second anniversary of the dedication of the German Reformed church took place on the previous evening, and the attendance was large. The programme included recitations by Mrs. Menzenbach, Mrs. Jaeger, Mrs. Greuble, Miss Studer, Miss Mullen, Master Johnnie Voehl and Master Philip Koechli, a harp solo by Mrs. Meinhard and a duett by Mr. and Mrs. Meinhard. On the whole, the dedication exercises were of a very enjoyable nature.

The members of the Ladies' Aid Society and especially Mrs. V. Utzinger, deserve great credit for their sincerity and willingness to assist the church and to provide such admirable entertainments for the members. Refreshments were served in abundance.

NEW JERSEY CHESS TOURNAMENT.

Mr. R. B. Keys of this City Claims the Deciding Game.

The tournament of the New Jersey Chess Association was concluded at New Brunswick on Saturday night with the championship of the State yet undecided.

At the close of the afternoon session the leaders in the first division which included the Plainfield players, stood as follows: H. N. VanDyke, Princeton, won three games; George Brown, Plainfield, two games won; C. Hymes, Newark, and R. B. Keys, Plainfield, one game won each and one draw; George Benner, Newark, three won and one lost; E. C. Williams, Orange, two won and one lost. The championship, therefore, rested between Messrs VanDyke, Brown, Keys and Hymes. The two latter were to play a game; the winner to play Brown, and the winner in that to play for the championship with VanDyke. Messrs Hymes and Keys did not conclude their game till eleven o'clock. The former won, but he had many times played very slowly, overgoing his time limit, and had been repeatedly warned of this and Mr. Keys therefore claims the game. The umpire will decide the contest, and then the two remaining games will be played at a time yet to be appointed.

The following officers were elected: President, F. C Crane, Elizabeth; First Vice President, R. W. Pope, Elizabeth; Second Vice President, N. Hymes, Newark; Executive Committee, R. B. Keys, Plainfield; J. S. Shapter, Orange; N. Hymes, Newark. The next meeting is to be held in Elizabeth and a Secretary and Treasurer will be appointed from that city.

Father Smyth Denies the Statement.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—I beg to call your attention to the following statement made in the last issue of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST:

In Plainfield—THE PRESS is informed by those connected with the public schools—a large number of the scholars who left to attend the parochial school when it opened, have already returned to the public school.

This statement is incorrect, even though the information came from those connected with the public school. Six or seven children left the parochial school since its establishment, and some of these we were obliged to dismiss for good reasons.

By inserting this you will do an act of justice to the parochial school, which is doing its work silently and satisfactorily, and oblige,

Yours respectfully,
P. E. SMYTH.

The Death Record.

Within the past few days there have been three deaths reported in this city as follows: Lizzie, the six-months-old daughter of William A. and Elizabeth Schorb, which occurred on Saturday of marasmus. The funeral took place from the house, East Front street, on Monday.

Catherine Whalen, wife of Mr. James Whalen, died at her home on Brook avenue, North Plainfield, Saturday, from consumption, aged 37 years. Funeral services took place from St. Joseph's church at 9:30 o'clock on Monday. Interment was made in St. Mary's cemetery.

Sarah Hankinson, aged 26 years, died at her home on West Third street, on Sunday, from consumption.

—The last meeting of the Borough Council will take place on Friday evening, March 7.

HYMENEAL.

The Marriage of Miss Simpson and Mr. Dencklau.

Miss Essie Simpson and Mr. Charles F. Dencklau were united in marriage by the Rev. T. Logan Murphy, at the home of the bride, No. 5 Plainfield avenue, afternoon of Feb. 19, at 2 o'clock.

The parlor was beautifully decorated with smilax and orange blossoms, and the numerous presents were elegant and costly. The bride was given away by her uncle, Mr. George Wyckoff, President of the Garfield National Bank of New York.

A collation was served at the conclusion of the ceremony, after which the bride and groom left for a short honeymoon-trip to Saddle River, thence to Washington, amid a shower of good wishes and congratulations, in addition to many liberal handfulls of rice for "luck." Mr. J. Beckman acted as usher.

"THE MESSIAH."

This Delightful Oratorio to be Presented by the Plainfield Choral Society if Enough Encouragement is Given.

The Choral Society managers have issued a circular to their subscribers announcing a new departure, if sufficient encouragement be given by extra subscriptions. This is no more nor less than the production of the Oratorio of "The Messiah" at the last concert in May, in place of the usual miscellaneous programme.

As this is an undertaking involving such an extraordinary expense, and requiring so much labor in its preparation, we should be inclined to doubt the propriety of taking such a step did we not know the resources of the Society. We believe the members are unanimous in their preference for this grand work and promise to perform their part in their usual satisfactory manner. The success of the venture is therefore assured provided the funds are forthcoming.

To render "The Messiah" in a suitable manner it requires a much larger orchestra than usual, besides four superior soloists. This being an unusual expense, and an extraordinary feature, not "nominated in the bond," an appeal has been made to subscribers for subscriptions to defray this extra expense. It seems there are in Music Hall a number of seats still unsecured, which by its pledge the Society cannot sell. It is therefore proposed to give subscribers (and to them only) a seat or seats, according to the amount they subscribe, which they will be at liberty to dispose of in any manner they like.

The prospect of such an event as this should stir the heart of our entire music-loving community, and if the project is carried out we believe every seat will be occupied. THE PRESS hopes there will be a prompt and liberal response to the circular, thus enabling the managers to make the necessary arrangements without delay.

Lecture by a Japanese Student.

The Missionary Committee of the Y. P S. C. E. of Trinity Reformed church are to be congratulated upon the success of the lecture delivered by M. Yoshida, the young Japanese student, last Friday evening. The lecture room was crowded to its utmost seating capacity, and the lecture was interesting, instructive, and at times, amusing.

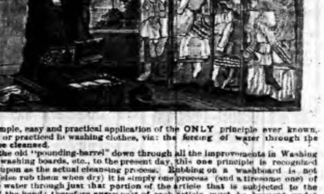
The New Era Washer



Is a simple, easy and practical application of the ONLY principle ever known, discovered or practiced in washing clothes, viz: the forcing of water through the article to be cleansed.

From the old "pounding-barrel" down through all the improvements in Washing Machines, washing boards, etc., to the present day, this one principle is recognized and acted upon as the actual cleansing process. Rubbing on a washboard is not cleansing (else rub them when dry) it is simply one process (and a tiresome one) of forcing the water through just that portion of the article that is subjected to the pressure of the hand; therefore every part of each article must be brought under that pressure to be cleansed; whereas, by the NEW ERA WASHER, every stroke of the piston or plunger forces two quarts of water (suds) through six or eight inches thickness of clothes, laid in the bottom of the tub; and this, too, with no more muscular effort than one rub of the hands from the top to the bottom of the washboard!

But as practical demonstration is more convincing to many than published statements, we leave the acceptance of the foregoing to those who are willing to obtain a correct knowledge before forming a conclusion in this matter. See large circulars for further particulars.

J. M. PICKELL, Esq., No. 111 WEST FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD, N. J., Local Agent for this section, will respond to inquiries, and also to a limited number of applications per week, to give a practical illustration of the working and merits of the NEW ERA WASHER.

Bring Back Those Plates.

At the close of the Bicycle Club's fair on Saturday night last, several cakes which remained unsold were auctioned off, the purchasers being permitted to take the plate with the cake so as to preserve it. There are still a few of these plates that have not yet been returned to the club house. As they are the property of the donators of the cakes the club would like to have them returned.

C. L. S. C.

The next meeting of the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle will be held at the residence of Mrs. Emerson on Central avenue, on Wednesday evening, March 5. Following is the programme to be rendered:

Roll call—Quotations on music.
Establishment of the Roman Empire.......Mrs. Gorton.
Cicero as a man of letters...Miss Ida Randolph.
Recess..........Music.
Theory of probabilities.......Mr. D. M. Runyon.
Longfellow's life and works. ..Miss Hasbrouck.

Additional Train Service.

The Baltimore and Ohio, Philadelphia and Reading, and Central Railroad of New Jersey have combined for the purpose of introducing a train service, which will be second to none, between New York and Philadelphia and Washington. All the cars used in the service will be owned jointly by the three companies, the cost to be divided in a way to be settled mutually between them. It is the purpose to build the cars on the most luxurious principle and they will be fitted with all modern appliances, regardless of cost.

Perhaps no local disease has puzzled and baffled the medical profession more than nasal catarrh. While not immediately fatal it is among the most distressing and disgusting ills the flesh is heir to, and the records show very few or no cases of radical cure of chronic catarrh by any of the multitude of modes of treatment until the introduction of Ely's Cream Balm a few years ago. The success of this preparation has been most gratifying and surprising.

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—Oh, for a Y. M. C. A. building.

—The State Prison at Trenton contains one thousand convicts.

—Saturday was the 158th anniversary of Washington's Birthday.

—Warren Engine, No. 1, of North Plainfield, was thoroughly overhauled and repaired by Mr. Frank Schork, on Saturday.

—The season for angling has now fairly begun. One Somerset street fisherman landed three fine suckers from Green Brook a few days ago.

—Mr. D. L. Moody will be in attendance upon the New Jersey State Convention of the Y. M. C. A., at Morristown, Friday evening, March 14.

—Justice Nash has entered judgment in favor of the plaintiff in the writ of attachment case brought by McGinley vs. O'Neill, to recover the amount of a claim.

—Postmaster James Harrold of Dunellen, has succeeded in making his office a money order office, which is a great convenience for the residents of that place.

—$81,000—in twelve subscriptions—has been pledged toward a new building for the San Francisco Y. M. C. A. The Association has entirely outgrown its present building.

—The Board of Directors of the Rahway Y. M. C. A., will meet with the Board of the Association in this city, Tuesday, March 4. Supper will be served by the Ladies' Committee.

—Messrs J. W. and E. Coddington, the North Plainfield ice dealers, have signed a contract for their next Summer's supply of ice, so their customers need have no fear of an ice famine.

—A bill has been introduced into the Legislature, framed by certain citizens of this city, including some of the Councilmen, which provides for the introduction of sewerage in cities of this size.

—Washington's Birthday was observed in the usual quiet manner on Saturday. Nearly all of the business places were closed by or before noon, and the day was generally devoted to holiday purposes.

—Moving day is approaching, and the truckmen are already receiving orders for the transfer of furniture. The indications are that a large number of strangers will locate in Plainfield when Spring opens.

—The Fredonian of New Brunswick, says:—"The loss of a large revenue to the city of Plainfield through the refusal of the Council to grant saloon licenses has caused that body to abolish prohibition and license all applicants."

—Mr Edward Love, Plainfield's wall paper dealer, is decorating the interior of Mr. J. B. Brooks' home in West Seventh street, and also finished decorations at Force's Hotel. This house is receiving a wide reputation for artistic and first-class work.

—"Starlight" a photographic study, is the gem of the collection of especially fine pictures in the February number of Sun and Shade. The issue has been delayed by the removal of the Photogravure company's establishment to its new quarters at 137 West 23rd street, New York, but all impatience at the delay is dispelled at once by the beauties of the number, every one worth a framing. Among the reproductions are J. Wells Champney's "Mignon," Ziem's "Canal of Venice" in the Walters collection; Miss Rehan as Rosalind, and a half-dozen others as commendable from every point of view.

We Give It Up.

The Democrat, Somerville says: "Plainfield is not yet located on the map of New Jersey contained in the Legislative Manual of 1890. What's the matter with that village?"

Plainfield Started the Movement.

The Mt. Pleasant public school hoisted a flag with appropriate exercises on Friday afternoon. The custom is becoming universal, and it will not be long before every public school in the State will float the National colors from its dome or cupola.

The Council [illegible] All.

(From the Rahway [illegible].)

The Plainfield Common Council on Monday evening granted fifteen liquor licenses at $750 each, thus making the very large addition to the treasury of $11,250, which it was deprived of last year by the no-license attitude of the Council.

A Sermon by Request.

"The temptation of Christ" was the subject (by request) of the Rev. Cornelius Schenck's sermon Sunday morning in Trinity Reformed church. His exposition was an exceedingly interesting, logical effort, and gave evidence of careful and prayerful study by the preacher, and the large congregation present were deeply interested.

Congregational Church Circle.

The next meeting of the Congregational church circle of the C. L. S. C., will be held on Friday evening, and the programme will be as follows:

Roll call—Quotations from either Caesar or Virgil.
An original rhyme.............Mrs. W. L. Patton.
Questions numbers 1-30 in February Chautauquan on Latin course.
Reading—Caesar's bridge..............Mrs. Brower.
A valentine and how it was written, an original poem.............Miss Gardner.
Questions numbers [illegible] in February Chautauquan Roman History.
Fourth [illegible] read in Latin by [illegible] Goodrich.
Each member to provide [illegible] on any subject studied this year.

The Crescent Avenue Church Concert.

To all lovers of good music the concert which is to be given in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church on Saturday evening, will be a rare treat. No pains have been spared in the selection of artists, and the programme is one which can hardly be excelled. The duett, Venetian boat song, which is to be sung by Miss Hallenbeck and Miss Thorne, was rendered by the same ladies last Winter at a Composers Club concert, where were assembled such men as Von Bulow and Richard Hoffman, and it received a double recall.

The quartette from "Rigoletto," which is to be given by Misses Hallenbeck and Thorne and Messrs Courtney and Rieo, also, received a double encore at a large concert in Saratoga, last Summer.

Death of Mrs. Robert Lowry.

Tuesday afternoon, at her home on Ninth street, occurred the death of Mrs. Robert Lowry, wife of the Rev. Dr. Robert Lowry, the widely known writer of sacred music. Although Mrs. Lowry had been seriously ill for some months, many of her friends were hopeful of her recovery, and the sad news of her death is a great shock to a large number of people.

Mrs. Lowry was the eldest daughter of the late Rev. Benjamin [illegible], of the First Baptist church of Philadelphia. She was a lady of rare amiability of character, and prominent in every good enterprise. Her loss is mourned by a wide circle of devoted friends, and the deepest sympathy is expressed for her bereaved family.

The funeral will take place from the house, No. 124 Madison avenue on Friday afternoon at 2:30.

Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Clinton of West Second street, gave a progressive euchre party on Friday evening of last week. Mr. and Mrs Clinton VanVliet won the first prize, and Mr. C. A. Bannon and Miss Lottie Simpson secured the "booby" prize. Refreshments were served.

The annual meeting of the Methodist Conference, of which this city is a part, will be held this year at Newark, beginning Wednesday, April 2. The Plainfield Methodists will learn with gratification that there will be no change in the pastorate of the church here.

The many friends of Mr. A. J. Samson, will regret to learn that he will soon leave our city and make California his place of residence. His father has invested in a large vineyard in the central part of that State, and the entire family will remove there about March 1.

Mr. W. J. Hanley, representing Mr. Edward Harrigan and his New York company in Harrigan's original drama, "Old Lavender," which is to be presented at Music Hall, next Monday evening, was in the city, on Monday, making the preliminary arrangements for the performance here.

In the New Jersey State Chess Association Tournament, held at New Brunswick, on Saturday, as told in The Press yesterday, Mr. Geo. Brown of this city, was paired with Mr. James B. Chapter of Bergen Point, and Mr. R. R. Keys, also of Plainfield, played with Mr. E. Hymes of Newark.

A birthday surprise party was tendered to Miss Florence Randolph, at her home on West Front street, on Tuesday. The entertainment was arranged by Mrs. Randolph, and it was a very enjoyable affair. Dancing, games and a bountiful collation were features of the evening's enjoyment.

The many friends in this city of Contractor Wood of the county roads, will be glad to learn that he has so far recovered from his recent serious illness under the skillful treatment of Dr. W. C. Boone, that he is again able to leave his room in Force's Hotel, where he is a guest, and go down stairs.

Mr. Geo. L. Hughes of North Plainfield, started last week for the South, stopping at Turtle Falls, Pa., en route, thence to Chester, S. C., where he goes to accept a lucrative position with the Pennsylvania Coal Bridge company. Mr. Hughes has lately been employed in the law office of Counsellor James Bergen at Elizabeth.

The condition of Assessor Isaac Brokaw of North Plainfield, continues to improve, reports to the contrary notwithstanding. On Saturday night Dr. R. Hubbard [illegible] of New York, was in consultation with Dr. J. T. Fritts of this city, but the result of the consultation was not stated. It is to be hoped that Mr. Brokaw will rapidly regain his health.

The "Silent Four" tendered the late Good and Welfare Committee of Franklin Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., a reception on Friday evening, (Washington's Birthday Eve.,) in Taylor's Hall, corner of Park and North avenues. The reception was a success in every particular. Refreshments were served and a very enjoyable evening was had by all present. Prof. [illegible] furnished the music for dancing.

Mr. Chas. J. Noel of Netherwood, is again confined to the house by illness, which dates back for a period of about ten days.

At her home, New Market, Tuesday, occurred the death of Sarah H. Dunn, widow of the late John R. Dunn, aged 70 years. Mrs. Dunn's death resulted from pneumonia.

PURE WATER IN PLENTY.

That's What Plainfield's Company Claims to Have Found—Offices Leased and Ground Bought.

The ground floor of the new building at 55 North avenue, has been leased by the Water Works company of Plainfield, and is being fitted up according to plans of Architect Fougate for occupancy. Mr. T. O. Doane is doing the cabinet work in quartered red oak. There will be when completed and finished, a handsome private office for Mr. Charles E. Moore, offices for his stenographer and the company's bookkeeper, and rooms for the draughtsmen and other employees.

The company claim to have found water in sufficient quantities, on the lands of the Central Improvement company near the Netherwood station as told exclusively in The Press some days ago. Land has already been purchased on which the stand pipes will be erected. The analyses of the water will be published when completed by the experts of New York to whom it has been sent.

BOROUGH COUNCIL MEETING.

The Reports of the Various Committees Presented and Ordered Printed.

Mayor Cooley and Messrs Emmons, McGee and Smalley, constituting a quorum of the Borough Council, met in adjourned session on Feb. 19, principally to receive the reports of the various committees.

Two claims, one of W. N. Pangborn for $2.60, and the other of T. W. Morrison for $14.50 were received and referred for certification.

Mayor Cooley reported a total of $197.20 collected for fines during the year, leaving a balance of $147.86 after deducting court expenses.

The annual report of the Borough Clerk was received and filed, and at a later stage in the proceedings it was ordered printed in The Press together with the several other reports.

Mr. McGee, from the Fire, Water and Lamps Committee, submitted the annual report of said committee, in which were included some timely suggestions. The report referred to the efficient street lighting system, and to the necessity of extending the service into the suburbs. The committee suggested the advisability of purchasing a truck and organizing a truck company. The total receipts for fire department purposes were $1,797.71, and the total expenditures were $1,097.03, leaving a balance on hand of $700.68. The committee further recommended that the amount of money recently paid by the township into the Borough fund be transferred to the fire department fund. The report was received and filed, and the latter recommendation was adopted.

Mr Smalley read the Street Committee's report, showing the total receipts for the year to be $3,734.93, and the total expenditures $3,364.94. During the year Jackson avenue has been macadamized at a cost of $1,274.94 of which amount the property owners paid $300; a portion of Westervelt avenue was also macadamized at a cost of $582.50, the property owners paying fifty per cent. of the cost; about $500 was expended for a top dressing on Somerset street. In the report the committee recommended that an appropriation of $5,000 be made this year for street work—$2,000 for repairs and $3,000 for permanent improvements. The report was received and filed.

The Auditing Committee reported having examined the books of the Clerk, Collector and Treasurer, and that the same were found to be correct. Attention was also called to a deficiency of over $410 from the $9,260 assessed for Borough purposes, occasioned by the discount allowed firemen and soldiers, who are exempt from taxation to a certain extent. The report was filed.

Mr. McGee offered the following resolution which was upon motion adopted:

Resolved, That the Borough report and the annual reports of the Committee on Streets and Public Health, Fire, Water and Lamps, together with a list of the delinquent taxpayers be published in pamphlet form to the number of 200 copies by the lowest bidder, and be published in the daily papers.

A resolution confirming Mr. Peter Sender, as a member of Warren Engine Co., No. 1, was adopted, and the Council adjourned.

Claims He Was Assaulted.

Chas F. Kocher of Newark swore out a warrant for the arrest of Morris Kennedy, before Justice Nash, February 19, charging him with assault and battery. The accused has not yet been apprehended.

They've Got a Strong Nine.

The Messenger of Somerville says in its issue of Feb. 19:

"The West End club will be in the field at the opening of the season with the following team; John Harkins, pitcher; (unknown) catcher; Conkling, 1st base; Carbonnell, 2d base; Al Williams, 3d base; Bergen, short stop; Davenport, left field; Frelinghuysen, right field; McMurtry or Major, centre field. This will undoubtedly prove to be one of the strongest amateur teams in the State. They have got the material."

Fell From a Bridge.

Ernest Muck, a resident of Hillside avenue, fell from the Berckman street railroad bridge about half-past twelve o'clock yesterday and fractured a leg. He was returning from New York on the 12:43 A. M. train, and at Berckman street the train was obliged to stop on account of the wreck of a coal train. He started to walk home when he fell from the bridge with the above result.

The injured man was taken to his home in a carriage, where a physician set the broken bone.

Committed for Larceny.

Spencer Conway, a colored man, went before Justice Nash, on Feb 19, and swore out a warrant for the arrest of one Alexander Williams, also colored, charging him with stealing a pair of pants, two coats and a vest. The pants were subsequently recovered.

The warrant was placed in the hands of Constable Moffett and this morning he apprehended the accused and locked him up. Justice Nash committed the prisoner to the county jail to await the action of the Grand Jury, in default of $300 bail.

Held for the Grand Jury.

The hearing of Patrick Bergen, charged with the theft of some tools from the row of flats on Grove street, took place before Justice Hardy in North Plainfield, on Thursday. In the matter of the criminal charge, Bergen waived examination and gave $300 bonds to await the action of the Grand Jury.

Witnesses were put on the stand who identified the tools found in Bergen's possession, and the court ordered the tools returned to the owner. Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh appeared for the prosecution, and Borough Counsel Charles A. Reed appeared for the defence.

The great majority of so-called cough cures do little more than impair the digestive functions and create bile. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, on the contrary while it cures the cough, does not interfere with the functions of either stomach or liver.

THE FORMING OF THE BOYS CLUB.

People of All Sorts Who Have Interested Themselves in the Work.

On January 30 a meeting was held to consider the movement of organizing a Boys Club in Plainfield—a club to include all boys between six and twenty, who have need of such an institution. It was resolved at this meeting to appoint a committee of two from each church—with power to add to the number—who should represent the cause. Arrangements have been made as follows:

Congregational—Mrs. Geo. F. Opdyke, Mrs. W. L. Patton.

Crescent Avenue Presbyterian—Mrs I. L. Miller, Miss Erskine, Dr. W. H. Murray, W. L. Gavett, F. P. Langhorne.

Church of Our Saviour—Mrs. W. P. Smith, Mrs. Cruikshank.

First Baptist—Mrs. F. A. Pike, Mrs. Alex. Gilbert, Miss May H. Taylor.

First Presbyterian—Dr. E. W. Hedges, Edward St. John.

Friends, Orthodox—Mrs. S. J. Taylor, Mrs. Francis Wood.

Friends, Peace street—A. M. Powell, Nathan Harper.

German Reformed—Rev. F. Koechli

Grace—Mrs. Dexter Tiffany, Miss Florence Tweedy, Mrs. C. S. Munn.

Heavenly Rest—Rev. J. P. Taylor, D D., and Mrs. Taylor

Holy Cross—W. J. Leonard, M. W. Tyler, Miss Emma Adams.

Methodist Episcopal—G. Morrison, H. Morrison.

Seventh Day Baptist—Miss Florence Potter, Mrs. Dr. Tomlinson.

St. Joseph's R. C.—Andrew Keaney, R. H. McCullough.

St. Mary's R. C—Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Ostermoor, Mrs A. G. Slevin.

Trinity Reformed—Miss C. S. Whitfield, A. L. Force

Unitarian—J. W. Opdyke, Mrs. D. W. Pond.

At a meeting held on Monday, Feb. 17, sixty-four names of subscribers of $5 each were handed in. As soon as 100 are obtained, a general meeting of subscribers and those interested will be called to start the society. Much interest is being shown among the citizens and quite one-third of the names mentioned have been sent in unasked.

People are beginning to find out that there are boys in Plainfield who need a club. A look into the gallery at any popular entertainment or into the streets on a fine night will answer the questions somewhat, "Are there any boys?" "Are there enough boys?"

Anyone wishing to subscribe without being solicited, may leave their names at Mr. H. P. Reynolds, Park and North avenues, Mr. J. C. Pierson, 42 West Front street, Mr. W. J. Leonard, Central New Jersey Times, or with chairman of collecting committee, Mrs. W. L. Patton, 26 East Ninth street.

A list of subscribers will be published soon, and also those willing to assist in the management of the club.

GRAND VICE CHANCELLOR ULRICH.

Something About the Grand Lodge of Pythian Knights Now in Session.

The Grand Lodge, Knights of Pythias, met in Masonic Temple, Trenton, Feb. 19, and continued its session until next day. The report of Grand Keeper Lorton of this city, showed cash on hand at last session, $1,244.09; received from subordinate lodges and miscellaneous sources, $3,839.55; total, $5,083.64. Disbursed, $3,715.66. Balance on hand, $1,367.98.

The following shows the statistics of membership as reported to the Grand Lodge up to December 31, 1889:

Number of members at last report, 9,424; Less No. 2, no report, 84; total, 9,340. Initiated during the year, 946; admitted by card, 56; reinstated, 62; total, 1,064. Withdrawal by card, 69; suspended, 461; deceased, 93; total, 623. Total membership, 9,781; increase since last report, 357.

The Supreme Chancellor, Wm. Ward, and the Grand Lodge officers of New York and Connecticut, will meet with the Grand Lodge today, and the following officers, elected last evening, will be installed:

Grand Chancellor—DeWitt C. Bolton, Paterson.

Grand Vice Chancellor—John Ulrich, Plainfield.

Grand Master of Exchequer—C. V. N. Wilson, Long Branch.

Grand Prelate—C. W. Kilbourne, New Brunswick.

Grand Keeper of Records and Seals—Eugene V. Lorton, Plainfield.

Grand Master at Arms—Walter T. Hayhurst, Lambertville.

There are 115 representatives present at the session and other members of the Order, numbering about 400. Many more than this will come today.

It was decided in session to appropriate $100 as a prize to be contested for by the uniformed rank.

Wholesale Runaway.

While a carload of horses were being unloaded at the freight house, Monday, seven of the animals escaped, and it required the efforts of about twenty men and a boy to re-capture them. Some of the horses were caught near the Bicycle Club house, and the rest ran into Rice & Loomis' lumber yard on Peace street, where they were captured.

Death Due to Apoplexy.

As stated in The Press of Feb. 19, County Physician Westcott came to this city and viewed the remains of the late Mrs. O'Keefe, who died suddenly at her home on West Fourth street, early on that morning, and pronounced the cause of death, apoplexy. He issued his death certificate in accordance with the facts.

Mrs O'Keefe was a widow, who had come to this city about eighteen months ago. She has enjoyed moderately good health of late, and her death was sudden and unexpected. One of her sisters is the wife of Mr. Thos. Clacy of West Front street, and another sister lives at the seminary.

Seventh Day Baptist Church Sociable.

About one hundred and fifteen persons attended the Seventh Day Baptist church sociable at the handsome home of Mr. George H. Babcock on Eighth street, Feb. 19, and those who participated report having had a delightful time. During the evening Miss May Tomlinson rendered a beautiful piano solo, Miss Ernie Smith gave a pleasing recitation and Miss Mabel Maxson also contributed a solo on the piano.

Miss Lulu Clawson was at the head of the literary portion of the exercises, and Mrs. A. L. Titsworth was Chairman of the refreshment committee.

Captain Davis Laid Up.

Coming from Boston on a special train Feb 16, Mr James Davis was so unfortunate as to sprain his left knee, and in consequence may be laid up for some weeks just as the Central Bowling Tournament opens in which he hoped to lead his team to victory.

Vice President Burnet, Counselor Reed and Mr. Howard Emerson were in the company, and they secured an invalid chair in which Captain Davis was transferred to the Central railroad and from thence in a carriage to his home. The four had represented the Plainfield Crescent League at the games of the Union Athletic Club, in Boston, on Saturday evening.

Hamburg Figs for the Liver.

Habitual torpidity of the liver, etc., are functional derangements which should not be so long neglected as to generate actual disease. HAMBURG FIGS should be taken, and the deranged organs restored to health. 25 cents. Dose, one fig. Mack Drug Co., N. Y. For sale by J. G. Miller.

OPENING THE FAIR.

THE BICYCLE CLUB'S NEW ENTERPRISE.

A Large Number Present on the Opening Night—The Booths and Tables and a List of the Fair Ones Who Preside Over Them—Exquisite Decorations Artistically Arranged—Other Details of Minor Importance.

The handsome and commodious new gymnasium, recently erected by the Plainfield Bicycle club, in the rear of the club building on Sycamore street, was formally opened Thursday with a bazaar and fair which continued up to and including Saturday evening. The attendance on the opening night was unusually large, over two hundred admissions being paid in at the door.

Upon entering the spacious hall, through the club house proper, there was a scene of great activity. A surging crowd of eager purchasers surrounded the various tables and booths, and kept the attendants busy supplying their wants. The decorations were exquisite, reflecting great credit upon the committee who so skillfully and artistically arranged them. The side walls were adorned with rich and costly mats, Japanese fans, etc., while numerous Chinese lanterns, flags and bunting helped to make up the interior decorations. The room was heated by an open fire-place, located in a convenient spot.

Much of the floor space was occupied by the several booths, all of which are handsomely decorated. The candy and fruit bower is located in the centre of the room, and is an object of great admiration. Refreshments are served in the balcony. A shooting gallery and the phonograph furnish the up stairs amusements. Among other features of the fair will be the awarding of a $135 safety bicycle and a $75 diamond finger ring, to the holders of the winning numbers. In the former event there are 150 chances at one dollar each, and in the latter there are 200 chances at one dollar each.

The display of fancy articles most of which were donated by the lady friends of the club, is probably larger than any that has been presented on a similar occasion in this city.

During the evening, the Murray brothers, three in number, rendered some delightful instrumental music, performing solos, duos and trios upon the xylophone, mandolin, ocarina and other difficult instruments, proving each member to be an artist of high grade.

Space will not permit us to describe each booth, suffice it to say each and every department of the bazaar was under efficient management, and the members of the Bicycle club have already received the assurance that their efforts will be crowned with success.

Following is a list of the Committees and others who took part, together with the ladies who were appointed as assistants, at the several booths:

Plan and Scope Committee—T. S. Burr, Chairman; A. L. C. Marsh, Dr. J. H. Cooley, F. L. C. Martin, R. Pound, J. H. Hallock, E. L. Walz, Jr.

The "Almanac-Program" Committee—Thos. S. Burr, Miss Helen A. Burr.

The fair given by the members of the Plainfield Bicycle club in the club's new gymnasium, closed on Saturday evening, the attendance being about double of that on either of the preceding evenings. Messrs A. L. C. Marsh and F. L. C. Martin jointly held the winning number which drew the $135 bicycle, and Messrs A. L. C. Marsh and T. S. Burr, jointly held the ticket which drew the $75 diamond ring. Nearly all of the fancy articles, cakes, etc., were disposed of.

The total receipts of the fair were about $1,400—nearly $1,000 of which will be the nett returns to the club.

Death of Postmaster Pope's Mother.

At her home in Dunellen, about ten o'clock, on Monday, occurred the death of Mrs. Sarah R. Pope, widow of the late John Pope, aged seventy-seven years and eight months. Mrs. Pope's illness was of short duration, her death resulting from old age. She was the mother of Postmaster-elect Elias R. Pope, Howard A. Pope, David S. Pope and James G. Pope of this city.

Services at All Saints Church.

The Rev. Mr. Reilly, rector of All Saints church at Scotch Plains, appeared in his accustomed place Sunday, for the first time since he was prostrated with illness, two months ago. Not feeling strong enough to preach, he was assisted by Mr. W. J. Leonard of this city. Mr. Reilly took occasion to thank his congregation and also his many other friends in the village for their kindness to him during his sickness.

C-h-o-o! C-h-o-o!! C-h-o-o!!!

Don't sneeze, sneeze, hawk, hawk, spit, blow, and disgust everybody with your offensive breath. If you have acrid, watery discharges from the nose and eyes, throat disease, causing choking sensations, cough, ringing noises in head, splitting headache and other symptoms of nasal catarrh, remember that the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy offer, in good faith, $500 reward for a case of catarrh which they cannot cure. The Remedy is sold by druggists at only 50c.

FLAG PRESENTATION.

Appropriate Exercises at the Irving School This Afternoon.

The formal presentation of the Jackson Flag to the Irving School, took place on Friday at two o'clock. The exercises consisted of patriotic recitations by the pupils, the singing of national songs by the school, and the High School Glee Club. The Rev. Chas. B. Mitchell representing Mr. Jackson, presented the Flag to the Board of Education in a brief, stirring speech. Dr. Hurlbut received it and in turn presented it to Miss Gilbert, who accepted it for the school.

The hall was beautifully decorated and the pupils were supplied with small flags to wave as they cheered for the new flag and its donor. Many parents and other friends of the school were present. The occasion was one of great enjoyment and enthusiasm.

SOLDIERS MONUMENT COMMITTEE.

The Matter of Selecting a Design Now Left to a Sub-Committee of Five.

Ten of the members, constituting a quorum of the Soldier's Monument Committee with Col. M. W. Tyler in the chair met in Winfield Scott Post room, Thursday, to further consider the matter of erecting a monument in this city. The designs submitted by the various granite companies were thoroughly examined, and it was at last agreed by the committee to decide upon one of four designs.

The matter of selecting the design was placed entirely in the hands of a sub-committee, with Gen. Negley as Chairman, and Messrs J. E. Tracy, R. J. Olsen, J. E. Stewart and M. W. Tyler. The sub-committee will visit some of the cemeteries where monuments now stand, erected by one or the other of the companies from which the selection is to be made for the soldier's monument here, with reference to durability, etc., and will report at a subsequent meeting.

The committee adjourned subject to a call by the sub-committee.

The Loan Exhibition.

The forthcoming loan exhibition in the Job Male Public Library and Art Gallery building promises to eclipse all efforts heretofore taken in this direction. The exhibition will open this Thursday evening, February 27, and remain open for several days thereafter. On the opening night John Ward Stimson will deliver a lecture, and there will be the presentation of a portrait of Hon. Job Male by Mr. Julian Scott.

Works of Beauty and Art.

The paintings, proofs, sketches, studies and studio effects of the late Frederick Juengling, the engraver, to be sold by auction Monday, March 3, at 7:30 P. M., will be on exhibition in the rooms of the Salmagundi Club, 121 Fifth avenue, from February 25, at 7:30 P. M., to the evening of the sale. Each day from 2 to 5:30 and 7:30 to 10 P. M.

A special catalogue and Memoir written by S. R. Koehler with a cover designed by George Wharton Edwards of this city, will be offered for sale as a souvenir.

A Band of "Earnest Workers."

The Boys' Mission Band, "Earnest Workers," held their fifth annual meeting in Bethel chapel, on Tuesday afternoon, February 18, at 4:15, with Master Roy Sufforn, the retiring president, in the chair. The exercises, which were of a very interesting nature, included an address by the Rev. Mr. Pond of Syria. Officers were elected as follows:

President—Fred. W. Goddard
Vice President—Albert Simpson.
Treasurer—Eddie Oakley.
Secretary—Harry Newhall.

The boys extend a cordial invitation to all of their friends, to join them in the good work which they have undertaken.

Wetumpka Lodge Meeting.

A regular meeting of Wetumpka Lodge, No. 3,401, K. of H., was held Thursday, during which five new members were initiated. The initiation of one member was laid over on account of illness in his family. Several new propositions were also received.

On March 6, Brooklyn City Lodge of Brooklyn, and Onward Lodge of Elizabeth will pay a fraternal visit to Wetumpka Lodge. The anniversary committee have engaged Music Hall for April 15. The committee will meet again at the residence of Mr. F. P. Haffner at Dunellen, on Saturday evening.

With a Capital of $225,000.

Articles of incorporation were filed last week with the County Clerk of Union county by the Queen City Dry Goods company. The incorporators are: Richard V. Lindaburg, of New York, who owns the bulk of the stock; William H. K. Davey of Somerville, and Timothy M. Kelly, of Elizabeth. The capital stock is placed at $225,000, the amount with which the company begins business. The object is to engage in the wholesale and retail purchase and sale of dry goods in Cincinnati and Elizabeth. The three incorporators and only stockholders are well-known lawyers of the Union County Bar.

Six New Members Were Initiated.

The regular meeting of Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., was held as usual Thursday, at 7:30 o'clock, in the S. of T., rooms, corner of Front street and Park avenue. After the regular order of business was transacted six new members were initiated into the Council. During the evening several interesting remarks for the good of the Order were made by Brothers Scrugalar and Drumm of Geo. H. Adams Council, of Newark, Past Councilors Dunavan, Bennett and others of the home Council. Refreshments were served by the Good and Welfare Committee and a very social evening was enjoyed.

The Boys Give Their Mite and the Ladies Appreciate It.

To the Editor of The Press:—The following letter has been received by the Relief Association:

To the Ladies of the Plainfield Relief Association:

The boys composing St. Andrew's Guild, who are also members of the choir of the Church of the Holy Cross, are desirous of giving their mite towards the good work in which you are engaged, and although only a small amount it represents self-denial in some cases, but it is really given cheerfully and with a hearty desire that it may help a little.

Respectfully yours,
PERCY C. LONG, Sec'y.

The ladies wish to express their appreciation of this truly generous gift, and their gratification at finding such efficient co-workers among the young boys of our town.

E. B. LEONARD, Sec'y.

Suicide.

DR. FLINT'S REMEDY has saved more lives by timely use, and has kept from suicide or the insane asylum more victims of nervous disorders, than all the physicians with their pet methods of treatment. Descriptive treatise with each bottle; or address Mack Drug Co., N. Y. For sale by J. G. Miller.

Young Men's Meeting.

Young men who have attended the meetings in the Y. M. C. A. rooms since the change was made to Sunday afternoon, can bear testimony to the interest which is being taken in them. Mr. Wm. H. Sampson conducted the service Sunday afternoon, and much enthusiasm was manifested.

The Scots Down the English.

On Saturday afternoon last two picked teams from Pond's Tool Works, known as the Scotchmen and Englishmen, engaged in a game of football. In the first half of the game both teams were equal, no goals being scored; in the second half the game stood 1 to 0, in favor of the Scotchmen.

Caught in the Act of Smuggling.

It is said that a couple of young men called at the station house, on Monday, and asked permission to see a prisoner, who is locked up there. While in the jail the men tried to smuggle into the prisoner's cell a bottle of milk, flavored strongly with rum. The bottle and its contents were taken in charge by the police.

Soon to Hear Their New Organ.

The congregation of the First Baptist church will have the opportunity of hearing their new Midmer organ for the first time on next Sunday morning, when they will again meet for worship in the main auditorium of the church. A choir under the leadership of Mr. C. W. McCutchen will hereafter assist in the services both morning and evening.

Arrested for Stealing Pie.

A young lad named Benworth stole a quantity of pie from one of Mr. Henry Liefke's baker wagons on Saturday afternoon. The driver chased the boy, catching him near the railroad station. The lad was turned over to Officer McCue who locked him up. On Monday Judge Codington discharged the youthful prisoner with a reprimand, as no one came forward to press the charge.

A Prize Spelling Bee.

The members of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Park Avenue Baptist church, held their regular monthly sociable in the lecture room of the church on Thursday evening last. The principal feature of the entertainment was a prize spelling bee, in which some twenty-five or thirty took part. The prize, a handsome cake, was won by Mrs. A. R. Dilts, wife of the pastor, she having remained on the floor the longest.

Kicked in the Window.

A young man named Morrison, who says he came from Bound Brook, got gloriously drunk Monday about noon, and entering a dooryard on East Front street, he walked up on a side stoop and deliberately smashed in a plate glass window 26x42 inches in dimensions. The man then laid down on the stoop and went to sleep. Officer Grant arrested him, and today the prisoner's friends are trying to raise $16, the amount of damage done to the window.

The Middlesex Gun Club Shoot.

Cold weather did not deter the ardent sportsmen of the Middlesex Gun club from holding their special holiday shoot on the club grounds at Dunellen, on Washington's Birthday. The birds were furnished by Charles Smith, and were a magnificent lot of flyers. A strong Northeast wind aided their flight materially, and many usually proficent trap shooters were credited with a "lost bird" when the feathers flying from its body plainly indicated a hit.

Many of the crack shots from this and adjacent cities were on the grounds during the day, and participated in the live and clay bird shooting, some of the shooters making excellent scores.

"An Exuberant Plainfielder."

Under the above heading the New Brunswick Home News of Monday says: "Yesterday afternoon Officer Kelly found a man driving aimlessly about the streets, very drunk. When arrested and taken before Recorder Housell, he said his name was Emmons, and that he came from Plainfield, and that he would rather go home than go to jail. He made an eloquent and facetious address to the crowd in the Recorder's office and offered to recite the Declaration of Independence, but this courtesy was declined. Officer Stuart escorted him across the Albany street bridge, and after elaborately thanking the officer he drove off in the direction of home."

Indigestion

IS not only a distressing complaint, of itself, but, by causing the blood to become depraved and the system enfeebled, is the parent of innumerable maladies. That Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best cure for Indigestion, even when complicated with Liver Complaint, is proved by the following testimony from Mrs. Joseph Lake, of Brockway Centre, Mich.:—

"Liver complaint and indigestion made my life a burden and came near ending my existence. For more than four years I suffered untold agony, was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength to drag myself about. All kinds of food distressed me, and only the most delicate could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians treated me without giving relief. Nothing that I took seemed to do any permanent good until I commenced the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has produced wonderful results. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could see an improvement in my condition. My appetite began to return and with it came the ability to digest all the food taken, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of faithful attention to your directions, I found myself a well woman, able to attend to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life."

RELICS AND RARITIES.

IMPORTANT original letters from Luther and Melanchthon have recently been discovered in a church in Neustadt, Bavaria, and given to the Munich Museum.

BRYENNIOS, Archbishop of Nicodemia, has found in a Turkish library at Damascus a manuscript of the New Testament dating from about the middle of the fourth century.

WHAT are supposed to be the first playing cards used were recently found in Pompeiian excavations and are now in the possession of a collector in Philadelphia. The cards are perfectly square.

THE earliest known will has been discovered by Flinders Petrie at Kahun, or, as the town was known 4,500 years ago, Illahun. The document is so curiously modern in form that it might almost be granted probate to-day.

A SCHENECTADY (N. Y.) merchant has in his possession a curious old Dutch Bible which was published in the year 1637. The volume is bound in thick slabs of black oak, covered with calfskin. About forty years ago the book mysteriously disappeared from among the family relics, but some months ago Mr. Van Tracken got track of it, and to-day the old curio is once more in the proper hands.

A HARRISBURG (Pa.) bricklayer has portions of a brick and mortar picked up in the ruins of the palace of the Caesar's Palatine Hall at Rome, Italy, by a son of the late Dr. O'Connor, who has just returned from a tour of Europe. The material of the brick is similar to that of which American fire brick is made, but this ancient brick is only an inch thick and it and the mortar are 2,000 years old. Mr. Cline prizes the relics of eighteen centuries as only an old bricklayer would such curiosities.

A TABLE that belonged to Shakespeare has been discovered at Stratford-on-Avon. It seems that John Wheeler, aged eighty, [illegible] an inmate of the Warwick Union, who at one time irreverently cut his initials on the "sacred relic," has deposed on oath before a justice of the peace that it was long the property of his family and known among them, at least, as "Shakespeare's table," and that he remembered hearing his grandmother say that she purchased it from a woman who had bought it at a sale at Shakespeare's house in Henley street.

AT San Antonio, Tex., while workmen were excavating the central Alamo plaza, with the object of preparing the ground for a park, they turned up several copper cannon balls and a number of half-decayed human bones. The place is within fifty yards of the famous structure which was the death-place of Crockett and Bowie, and some of the balls are flattened from having been fired against the stone wall, and, indeed, the venerable building bears their scars. The bones are those of Mexican soldiers who fell in the fray, some of whom were buried. The bodies of the massacred Americans were all burned up. The relics have been taken in by curiosity seekers.

IN MERRY MOOD.

THE boarding-house keeper who gives her boarders oleomargarine instead of butter [illegible] them with the fat of the land.

WOMEN must have some doubts about their power over men, and are therefore constantly experimenting to see whether it will work.

ON account of its high price, a Northern man has commenced to economize sugar. He now takes it straight, without sugar.

IF any one doubts the power of music let him try to think while a small boy sings on the back fence and a piano is being tortured down-stairs.

A FUGITIVE from justice boasted that he was so well liked by all who knew him that he never left any place without a reward being offered for his return.

IN a grocer's shop, about a quarter past eight, the shopmen were gossiping, when a boy entered—"Two farthings for a ha'penny, please." "Coats off, gentlemen. Business has begun," cried the foreman.

MISS DE SMART—Did it ever occur to you, Mr. Plodding, that there were musical bones in the structure of the forearm? Plodding—Certainly; and they are all finally transposed into cords of wood.

"WHAT are they waiting for?" says one young [illegible] fellow to another, as they stood before the two figures with bowed heads in the great painting of the "Angelus." "Waiting for the six o'clock whistle, so's they can quit work," says the other.

"ARE [illegible] fried oysters?" he asked of the keeper of an eating-stall in the market. "Well, no, not exactly fried oysters," she answered. "What is it?" "Cold corned beef." "Oh! that's near enough; you may slice me off some. I expect it's all the same, any way."

TWO Neapolitan undertakers are now on a strike in Naples and declare they will not resume their lugubrious functions until they have got an increase in wages. This is, therefore, not the proper time to accomplish the classical vow: "See Naples and die!"

"MY dear," said a vain old man to his wife, "these friends of yours don't believe that I'm only forty-five years old. You know I speak the truth, don't you?" "Well," answered the simple wife, "I suppose I must believe it, John, as you've stuck to it for fifteen years."

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED.—Judge—"What's the charge, officer?" Officer—"Petty larceny, your honor." Prisoner (interrupting)—"I beg your pardon, Judge; the charge is impersonating an officer." Judge—"How do you make that out?" Prisoner—"I took a handful of peanuts and an orange from a poor woman's stand without paying for them."

A NEW YORK man has been sent to prison for failing to pay his wife four hundred dollars that he borrowed before their marriage. This seems to be a harsh and unreasonable proceeding when the wife could have canceled the debt on the installment plan by rummaging her husband's inside pockets in the early morning hours and quietly appropriating the small change.

SHORT SERMONS.

[illegible] your neighbors as far as good conscience will accompany you, but [illegible] where the door of conscience begins to close upon you.

THERE are those who never seem to believe themselves capable of any thing; they are always prone forward to attempt and are inclined to shrink back into a despairing inactivity. Having no faith in themselves, they undertake nothing and effect nothing.

DEEPER and more permanent impressions can be made on the mind by a lucid explanation that goes to the root of a matter than by any amount of petty facts or formal rules. In education, whatever appeals to the understanding also strengthens the memory.

THE greatest art of prudence is to give [illegible] to those hours which [illegible] are glad and [illegible] intervals of [illegible] in which a man [illegible] or disguises which he feels a pride to be [illegible].

THERE is this difference between those two temporal blessings, health and money—money is the most envied, but the least enjoyed; health is the most enjoyed, but the least envied; and this superiority of the latter is still more obvious when we reflect that the poorest man would not part with health for money, but that the richest would gladly part with all his money for health.

CONQUER that devilish envy which gnaws at your heart because you are not in the same lot with others; bring down your soul, or rather bring it up, to receive God's will and do His work, in your lot, in your sphere, under your cloud of obscurity, against your temptations; and then you shall find that your condition is never opposed to your own good, but really consistent with it.

MEN are constantly losing sight of realities, of principles, of essential things, and half unconsciously substituting the means and appliances by which they might obtain them. They get so entangled in a labyrinth of details that they can not arrive at the great whole to which they should lead them. There is in this so many failures [illegible] discouragement about them and so many valuable purposes slip away unaccomplished.

REMEMBER in all things that, if you do not begin, you will never come to an end. The first weed pulled up in the garden, the first seed in the ground, the first penny put in the savings bank and the first mile traveled on a journey are all-important things; they make a beginning and hold out a hope, a promise, a pledge, an assurance that you are in earnest in what you have undertaken. How many a poor, idle, hesitating outcast is now creeping and crawling on his way through the world who might have held up his head and prospered if, instead of putting off his resolution of industry and amendment, he had only made a beginning.

THE "right whale" is the most vicious of all the whalebone whales, and at times fights desperately for its life. The Bowheads were very rarely captured before the invention of the bomb lance, as they ran so fast boats could not stand the strain.

THE wealthiest class in the United States is considered to be vastly richer than the wealthiest class in Great Britain. The average annual income of the richest one hundred Englishmen is about £30,000; but the average annual income of the richest one hundred Americans can not be less than £240,000.

THE Hebrew word for "cheese" is Khalabv. This occurs in two passages, Genesis xviii., 8, and Exodus iii., 8, where it is translated "milk" in the English version. If the proper translation had been made we should have had cheese mentioned as early as 1898 B. C.

"ANNIE LAURIE" was composed previous to 1688 by Sir Richard Douglas of Fingland, in honor of Miss Annie Laurie, of Maxwelton. Originally the song was in two stanzas, and in that shape it may be found in "Sharpe's Collection." In the later cyclopedias of poetry three stanzas appear.

A REMARKABLE find was lately made at St. Pabu, Finisterre. On removing a granite block to the southwest of the village a Roman flanged tile was observed which had, apparently, served as a cover to a box of wood, now fallen into decay. Inside were found over ten thousand small plated Roman coins of Valerian, Diocletian, Constantine, Maximus, Licinius, Constantine the Great and Constantine II. They are all well preserved, and date from 290 to 388.

MEMORIAL ON H. W. GRADY

DR. TALMAGE EULOGIZES THE DECEASED JOURNALIST.

Isaiah Wrote with the Pen of a Man an Appeal for Righteousness, and So Should the Modern Editor—Grady's Noble Life and Great Work for the Nation.

BROOKLYN, Feb. 23.—The great Academy of Music, its main floors and its two galleries and platform and all approaches to the building were, as usual, thronged at the preaching service of the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., to-day. Many hundreds of persons did not gain admittance. After an exposition by Dr. Talmage of passages of Scripture descriptive of the influence of the pen, James Montgomery's hymn was sung:

Who are these in bright array,
This innumerable throng,
Round the altar night and day
Tuning one triumphant song?

The subject of Dr. Talmage's sermon was, "The Life and Death of Henry W. Grady, the Editor and Orator." He took for his text Isaiah viii, 1: "Take thee a great roll, and write in it with a man's pen." The preacher said:

To Isaiah, with royal blood in his veins and a habitant of palaces, does this divine order come. He is to take a roll, a large roll, and write on it with a pen, not an angel's pen, but a man's pen. So God honored the pen and so He honored manuscript. In our day the greatest roll is the religious and secular newspaper and the mightiest pen is the editor's pen, whether for good or evil. And God says now to every literary man and especially to every journalist: "Take thee a great roll and write in it with a man's pen."

Within a few weeks one of the strongest, most vivid and most brilliant of those pens has fallen down on the editorial desk in Atlanta, never again to be resumed. I was far away at the time. We had been sailing up and down the Mediterranean sea, through the Archipelago, which region is quite anything I ever saw for beauty. There is not any other scenery on earth where God has done so many picturesque things with islands. They are somewhat like the Thousand Islands of our American St. Lawrence, but more like heaven. Indeed, we had just passed Patmos, the place from which John had his apocalyptic vision. Constantinople had seemed to come out to greet us, for your approach to that city is different from any other city. Other cities as you approach them seem to retire, but this city, with its glittering minarets and pinnacles, seems almost to step into the water to greet you. But my landing there, that would have been to me exhilaration, was suddenly stunned with the tidings of the death of my intimate friend, Henry W. Grady. I could hardly believe the tidings, for I had left on my study table unbroken letters and telegrams from him, those letters and telegrams having a warmth and geniality such as he only could express. The departure of no public man for many years has so affected me. For days I walked about as in a dream, and I resolved that, getting home, I would, for the sake of his bereaved household and for the sake of his bereaved profession and for the sake of what he had done [illegible], I would speak a word in appreciation of him, the most promising of Americans, and sound some of the salient lessons of his departure.

PRAISE WELL OF THE LIVING ALSO.

I have no doubt that he had enemies, for no man can live such an active life as he did and be so far in advance of his time without [illegible] because he defeated their projects and some because he outshone them. Owls and bats never did like the rising sun. But I shall tell you how he appeared to me, and I am glad that I told him while he was in full health what I thought of him. Memorial orations and obituaries are often mean enough, they say of a man after he is dead that which ought to have been said of him while living. One garland for a living brow is worth more than [illegible] laid on a funeral casket. [illegible] thick volume of fifty pages [illegible] the deaths of Clay and Webster [illegible] Calhoun and Lincoln and Sumner, the [illegible] to pay for the forty years of obloquy heaped upon them living. [illegible]

His father dead, Henry W. Grady, a boy fourteen years of age, took up the battle of life. It would require a long chapter to record the names of orphans who have come to the top. When God takes away the head of the household he very often gives to some lad in that household a special qualification. Christ remembers how that his own father died early, leaving him to support himself and his mother and his brothers in the carpenter's shop at Nazareth, and he is in sympathy with all boys and all young men in the struggle. You say: "Oh, if my father had only lived I would have had a better education, and I would have had a more prosperous start, and there are some wrinkles on my brow that would not have been there." But I have noticed that God makes a special way for orphans. You would not have been half the man you are if you had not been obliged from your early days to fight your own battles. What other boys got out of Yale or Harvard you got in the University of Hard Knocks. Go among successful merchants, lawyers, physicians and men of all occupations and professions, and there are many of them who will tell you, "At ten, or twelve, or fifteen years of age, I started for myself; father was dead, or father was dead." But somehow they got through and got up. I account for it by the fact that there is a special dispensation of God for orphans. All hail, the fatherless and the motherless! The Lord Almighty will see you through. Early obstacles for Mr. Grady were only the means for development of his intellect and heart. And lo! when at thirty-nine years of age he put down his pen and closed his lips for the perpetual silence, he had done a work which many a man who lives on to sixty and seventy and eighty years never accomplishes.

GREAT WORK OF SHORT LIVED MEN.

There is a great deal of senseless praise of longevity, as though it were a wonderful achievement to live a good while. Ah, my friends, it is not how long we live, but how well we live and how useful we live. A man who lives to eighty years and accomplishes nothing for God or humanity might better have never lived at all. Methuselah lived nine hundred and sixty-nine years, and what did it amount to? In all those more than nine centuries he did not accomplish anything which seemed worth record. Paul lived only a little more than sixty, but how many Methuselahs would it take to make one Paul? Who would not rather have Paul's sixty years than Methuselah's nine hundred and sixty-nine? Robert McCheyne died at thirty years of age and John Summerfield at twenty-seven years of age, but neither earth nor heaven will ever hear the end of their usefulness. Longevity! Why, an elephant can beat you at that, for it lives a hundred and fifty and two hundred years. Gray hairs are the blossoms of the tree of life if found in the way of righteousness, but the frost of the second death if found in the way of sin.

One of our able New York journals last spring printed a question and sent it to many people, and among others to myself: "Can the editor of a secular journal be a Christian?" Some of the newspapers answered, No. I answered, Yes; and lest you may not understand me I say, Yes, again. Summer before last, riding with Mr. Grady from a religious meeting in Georgia on Sunday night, he said to me some things which I now reveal for the first time because it is appropriate now that I reveal them. He expressed his complete faith in the Gospel and expressed his astonishment and his grief that in our day so many young men were rejecting Christianity. From the earnestness and the tenderness and the confidence with which he spoke on these things I concluded that when Henry W. Grady made public profession of his faith in Christ and took his place at the holy communion in the Methodist church, he was honest and truly Christian. That conversation that Sunday night, first in the carriage and then resumed in the hotel, impressed me in such a way that when I simply heard of his departure, without any of the particulars, I concluded that he was ready to go. I warrant there was no fright in the last exigency, but that he found what is commonly called "the last enemy" a good friend, and from his home on earth he went to a home in heaven. Yes, Mr. Grady not only demonstrated that an editor may be a Christian, but that a very great intellect may be gospelized. His mental capacity was so wonderful it was almost startling. I have been with him in active conversation, while at the same time he was dictating to a stenographer editorials for The Atlanta Constitution. But that intellect was not ashamed to bow to Christ. Among his last dying utterances was a request for the prayers of the churches in his behalf.

GLADSTONE'S WONDERFUL TESTIMONY.

There was that particular quality in him that you do not find in more than one person out of hundreds of thousands, namely, personal magnetism. People have tried to define that quality and always failed, yet we have all felt its power. There are some persons who have only to enter a room or step upon a platform or into a pulpit, and you are thrilled by their presence, and when they speak your nature responds and you cannot help it. What is the peculiar influence with which such a magnetic person takes hold of social groups and audiences? Without attempting to define this which is indefinable I will say it seems to correspond to the waves of air set in motion by the voice or the movement of the body. Just like that atmospheric vibration is the moral or spiritual vibration which rolls out from the soul of what we call a magnetic person. As there may be a cord or rope binding bodies together there may be an invisible cord binding souls. A magnetic man throws it over others as a hunter throws a lasso. Mr. Grady was surcharged with this influence, and it was employed for patriotism and Christianity and elevated purposes.

You may not know why, in the conversation which I had with Mr. Gladstone a few weeks ago, he uttered those memorable words about Christianity, some of which were cabled to America. He was speaking in reply to this remark: I said, "Mr. Gladstone, we are told in America by some people that Christianity does very well for weak minded men and children in the infant class, but is not fit for stronger minded men; but when we mention you, of such large intellectuality, as being a pronounced friend of religion, we silence their batteries." Then Mr. Gladstone stopped on the hillside, where we were exercising, and said: "The older I grow the more confirmed I am in my faith in religion. Sir," said he, with flashing eye and uplifted hand, "talk about the questions of the day, there is but one question, and that is the Gospel. That can and will correct everything. Do you have any of that dreadful agnosticism in America?" Having told him we had, he went on to say: "I am profoundly thankful that none of my children or kindred have been blasted by it. I am glad to say that about all the men at the top in Great Britain are Christians. Why, sir," he said, "I have been in public position fifty-eight years and forty-seven years in the cabinet of the British government, and during those forty-seven years I have been associated with sixty of the master minds of the century, and all but five of the sixty were Christians." He then named the four leading physicians and surgeons of his country, calling them by name and remarking upon the high qualities of each of them, and added: "They are all thoroughly Christian." My friends, I think it will be quite respectable for a little longer to be the friends of religion. William E. Gladstone, a Christian; Henry W. Grady, a Christian. What the greatest of Englishmen said of England is true of America and of all Christendom. The men at the top are the friends of God and believers in the sanctities of religion, the most eminent of the lawyers, the most eminent of the doctors, the most eminent of the merchants, and there are no better men in all our land than some of those who sit in editorial chairs. And if that does not correspond with your acquaintanceship, I am sorry that you have fallen into bad company. In answer to the question put last spring: "Can a secular journalist be a Christian?" I not only answer in the affirmative, but I assert that so great are the responsibilities of that profession, so infinite and eternal the consequences of their obedience or disobedience of the words of my text: "Take thee a great roll, and write in it with a man's pen," and so many are the surrounding temptations, that the men of no other profession more deeply need the defenses and the reinforcements of the grace of God.

HOW THE JOURNAL AIDS THE PREACHER.

Another look at the opportunities of journalism. I praise the pulpit and magnify my office, but I state a fact which you all know when I say that where the pulpit touches one person the press touches five hundred. The vast majority of people do not go to church, but all intelligent people read the newspapers. While, therefore, the responsibility of the ministers is great, the responsibility of editors and reporters is greater. Come, brother journalists, and get your ordination, not by the laying on of human hands, but by the laying on of the hands of the Almighty. To you is committed the precious reputation of men and the more precious reputation of women. Spread before our children an elevated literature. Make sin appear disgusting and virtue admirable. Believe good rather than evil. While you show up the hypocrites of the church, show up the stupendous hypocrites outside of the church. Be not, as some of you are, the slaves of public opinion; make public opinion. Let the great roll on which you write with a man's pen be a message of light and liberty and kindness and an awakening of [illegible]. But who is sufficient for these things? Not one of you without divine help. But get that influence and the editors and reporters can go up and take this world for God and the truth. The mightiest opportunity in all the world for usefulness to-day is open before editors and reporters and publishers, whether of knowledge on foot as in the book, or knowledge on the wing as in the newspaper. I pray God, men of the newspaper press, whether you [illegible] or read this sermon, that you may rise up to your [illegible] opportunity, and that you may so earnestly [illegible] helped and rescued and blessed. Some one might say to me: "How can you talk thus of the newspaper press, when you yourself have sometimes been unfairly treated and misrepresented?" I answer that in the opportunity the newspaper press of this country and other countries have given me week by week to preach the Gospel to the nations, I am put under so much obligation that I defy all editors and reporters, the world over, to write anything that shall call forth from me one word of bitter retort from now till the day of my death. My opinion is, that all reformers and religious teachers, instead of spending so much time and energy in denouncing the press, had better spend more time in thanking them for what they have done for the world's intelligence and declaring their magnificent opportunity, and urging their employment of it all for beneficent and righteous purposes.

EXAMPLE OF THE CHRISTIAN PATRIOT.

Again, I remark that Henry W. Grady stood for Christian patriotism irrespective of political spoils. He declined all official reward. He could have been governor of Georgia, but refused it. He could have been senator of the United States, but declined it. He remained plain Mr. Grady. Nearly all the other orators of the political arena, as soon as the elections are over, go to Washington, or Albany, or Harrisburg, or Atlanta, to get in city or state or national office reward for their services, and, not getting what they want, spend the rest of the time of that administration in pouting about the management of public affairs or cursing Harrison, or Cleveland. When the great political campaigns were over, Mr. Grady went home to his newspaper. He demonstrated that it is possible to toil for principles which he thought to be right, simply because they were right. Christian patriotism is too rare a commodity in this country. Surely the joy of living under such free institutions as those established here ought to be enough reward for political fidelity. Among all the great writers that stood at the last presidential election for Democratic and Republican platforms you cannot recall in your mind ten who were not themselves looking for remunerative appointments. Aye, you can count them all on the fingers of one hand. The most illustrious specimen of that style of man for the last ten years was Henry W. Grady.

Again, Mr. Grady stood for the new south and was just what we want to meet three other men, one to speak for the new north, another for the new east and another for the new west. The bravest speech made for the last quarter of a century was that made by Mr. Grady at the New England dinner in New York about two or three years ago. I sat with him that evening and know something of his anxieties, for he was to tread on dangerous grounds and might by one misspoken word have antagonized forever both sections. His speech was a victory that thrilled all of us who heard him and all who read him. That speech, great for wisdom, great for kindness, great for pacification, great for bravery, will go down to the generations with Webster's speech at Bunker Hill, William Wirt's speech at the arraignment of Aaron Burr, Edmund Burke's speech on Warren Hastings, Robert Emmet's speech for his own vindication. Who will in conspicuous action represent the new north as he did the new south? Who shall come forth for the new east and who for the new west? Let old political issues be buried, let old grudges die. Let new theories be launched.

TRANSCENDENT NEED OF NATIONAL HARMONY.

With the coming in of a new nation at the gates at Castle Garden every year, and the wheat bin and corn crib of our land enlarged with every harvest, and a vast multitude of our population still plunged in illiteracy to be educated, and moral questions abroad involving the very existence of our republic, let the old political platforms that are worm eaten be dropped, and platforms that shall be made of two planks—the one the Ten Commandments and the other the Sermon on the Mount—lifted for all of us to stand on. But there is a lot of old politicians grumbling all around the sky who don't want a new south, a new north, a new east or a new west. They have some old war speeches that they prepared in 1861 that in all our autumnal elections they feel called upon to inflict upon the country. They growl louder and louder in proportion as they are pushed back further and further and the Henry W. Gradys come to the front. But the mandate, I think, has gone forth from the throne of God that a new American nation shall take the place of the old, and the new has been baptized for God, and liberty, and justice, and peace, and morality, and religion.

And now our much lamented friend has gone to give account. Suddenly the facile and potent pen is laid down and the eloquent tongue is silent. What! Is there no safeguard against fatal disease? The impersonation of stout health was Mr. Grady. What compactness of muscle! What ruddy complexion! What flashing eye! Standing with him in a group of twenty or thirty persons at Piedmont, he looked the healthiest as his spirits were the blithest. Shall we never feel again the hearty grasp of his hand or be magnetized with his eloquence? Men of the great roll, men of the pen, men of wit, men of power, if our friend had to go when the call came, so must you when your call comes. When God asks you what you have done with your pen or your eloquence or your wealth or your social position, will you be able to give satisfactory answer? What have we been writing all these years? If mirth, has it been innocent mirth or that which hears and stings and lacerates? From our pen have there come forth productions healthy or poisonous? In the last great day when the warrior must give account of what he has done with his sword, and the merchant what he has done with his yard stick, and the mason what he has done with his trowel, and the artist what he has done with his pencil, we shall have to give account of what we have done with our pen. There are gold pens and diamond pens and pens of exquisite manufacture, and every few weeks I see some new kind of pen, each said to be better than the other, but in the great day of our arraignment before the Judge of quick and dead that will be the most beautiful pen, whether gold or steel or quill, which never wrote a profane or unclean or cruel word, or which, from the day it was carved or split at the nib, dropped from its point kindness and encouragement and help and gratitude to God and benediction for man.

SYMPATHY WITH GRADY'S FRIENDS.

May God comfort that torn up southern home and all the homes of this country and of all the world which have been swept by this plague of influenza, which has deepened sometimes into pneumonia and sometimes into typhus and the victims of which are reckoned by the ten thousand! Satan, who is the "Prince of the Power of the Air," has been poisoning the atmosphere in all nations. Though it is the first time in our remembrance, he has done the same thing before. In 1696 the unwholesome air of Cairo, Egypt, destroyed the life of ten thousand in one day, and in Constantinople in 1714 three hundred thousand people died of it. I am glad that by the better sanitation of our cities and wider understanding of hygienic laws and the greater skill of physicians these Apollyonic assaults upon the human race are being resisted, but pestilential atmosphere is still abroad. Hardly a family here but has felt its lighter or heavier touch. Some of the best of my flock fell under its power and many homes here represented have been crushed. The fact is the biggest failure in the universe is this world if there be no heaven beyond. But there is, and the friends who have gone there are many and very dear. O tearful eyes, look up to the hills crimsoning with eternal morn! That reunion kiss will more than make up for the parting kiss, and the welcome will obliterate the good-by. "The Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall lead them to living fountains of water and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." Till then, O departed loved ones, promise us that you will remember us, as we promise to remember you. And some of you gone up from this city by the sea and others from under southern skies and others from the homes of the more rigorous north and some from the cabins on great western farms, we shall meet again when our pen has written its last word and our arm has done its last day's work and our lips have spoken the last adieu.

And now, thou great and magnificent soul of editor and orator! under brighter skies we shall meet again. From God thou camest, and to God thou hast returned. Not broken down, but ascended. Not collapsed, but irradiated. Enthroned one! Coronated one! Sceptered one! Emparadised one! Hail and farewell!

Lives of Insects.

It is well known that Sir John Lubbock has shown how long insects may live when kept out of harm's way. The greatest age yet attained by an insect, so far as known, is that reached by a queen of an ant (formica fusca), which lived in his care until August 8, 1888, when she must have been nearly fifteen years. Another queen of the same species died at the advanced age of thirteen years. He has now a queen of another kind of ant (Lasius niger) which is more than nine years old, "and still lays fertile eggs, which produce female ants." He has also workers of Lasius niger and Formica fusca, "which were at least seven years old." At the other extreme of insect longevity stands the May fly, or Ephemera, the type of fleeting existence, these insects having the reputation of living but a few hours or a day.

THE following advertisement lately appeared in an Irish daily: "Wanted, a gentleman to undertake the sale of a patent medicine. The advertiser guarantees it will be profitable to the undertaker."

HE GOT THE DRESSES.

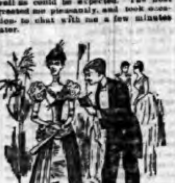
The Experience of a Near-Sighted Man as a Society Reporter.

It Was the Desire to Avoid Publicity, But the Ladies Did What They Could to Help Him—Subsequent Remonstrance of the Host.

[illegible]

Through my wife's high society connections, some of which have survived her marriage, I recently secured an invitation to a ball which was otherwise very select. It was given in a gentleman's barn on Staten Island.

When we arrived at the scene of festivity we found that it was doing as well as could be expected. The host greeted me pleasantly, and took occasion to chat with me a few minutes later.



FINE POINTS OF SOME OF THE COSTUMES.

Having thus pleasantly paved the way, he came down to business. The house, he said, was surrounded by reporters who were anxious to get the costumes of the ladies. I glanced about me casually and remarked that I did not think it would detract from the modesty of the exhibition if the reporters did get some of the costumes and carry them away.

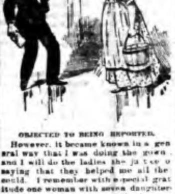
"That is not exactly the point," said he. "You see this is understood to be a very exclusive and private affair. I have mentioned that fact and our desire to avoid publicity in all the letters I have sent to the newspapers. Some of the ladies do not expect reporters to be present, but they will fall dead if their dresses do not get into print. This puts me in a dilemma, and it has occurred to me that you might be willing to go around quietly and take a few notes and give the result to the New York papers."

Naturally, I did not desire to disoblige our kind host, and it also occurred to me that I could collect a few dollars worth of space in the papers and thus partly liquidate my carriage bill and the hire of my dress suit. So I told him as politely as I could that I should be glad to have some light occupation of that kind to relieve the monotony of my surroundings, while my wife was dancing with other men. He furnished me with a note book and I sallied forth.

In connection with my labors as a reporter of costumes, I had determined to secure a point or two for a work which I am preparing on "Anti Lean, Dr Bogus's Great Bone Padder." No department of literature is so remunerative to the genuine artist as the writing of patent medicine advertisements. People who sell stuff can afford to pay much more than one can get out of the magazines, and the advertisements can be written in English and not in dialect, which makes them much easier for a man who respects the spelling book.

But at the outset I found myself much hampered by a misfortune. I had left my glasses at home. It's an awful nuisance to be near-sighted; to feel that the most important part of your physical structure is your glasses; to go through life stumbling over things; to pass all your debtors without recognizing them, and to have a lot of creditors who can read the name on the stern of a ship after she's two hundred miles out of port.

Ah, how often have I stalked by a man in the street and given him the impression that I was too proud to recognize a social inferior, when, in reality, I was on my way to his office to borrow two dollars till Saturday. And that night as I wandered wearily among the women, who all looked alike to me, and offended the servants by mistaking them for the guests, how I cursed the convexity of my crystalline lens, and envied a cross-eyed superior of my acquaintance, who, though he may not look pretty, can see both sides of a lady's costume from any point of the compass.



OBJECTED TO BEING REPORTED.

However, it became known in a general way that I was doing the gowns, and I will do the ladies the justice of saying that they helped me all they could. I remember with especial gratitude one woman with seven daughters who gracefully manœuvred them so that I fell over the whole septette in all four corners of the principal apartment and in many of the anterooms. She knew how anxious the public would be to hear what her girls were dressed in, and she was not going to have me fail in my duty of reporting the facts through any negligence of hers. I couldn't distinctly see what the girls wore, but I jotted down seven dresses in my note-book, which I judged would be modest and becoming.

I perceived that I was in a fair way to have a very nice time. The loveliest flakes of the upper crust were all around me. It would have been a complete pie, if I hadn't left my glasses at home. It is true that most of these ladies said nothing to me. I couldn't expect them to be too sociable, remembering how new I was to the first circles. But I couldn't help feeling at home when I saw how they chased me about, and stood patiently in a good light while I made believe take notes on their costumes. Some of them turned their backs to me, it is true, but doubtless it was because that was the way they looked best, so I took no offence.

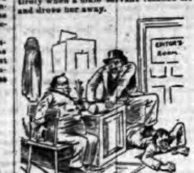
I was sorry not to be able to return these attentions by jotting down accurate descriptions of the ladies' costumes but, to tell the truth, I don't know anything about dresses, except that they cost four times as much as they are worth; and owing to my unfortunate failing I couldn't see them at a distance which seemed to me decorous. At one time I did steal up behind a lady, who, at a casual inspection, promised points for my work on "Anti Lean," but I had got no farther than to note that her costume began with a pair of shoulder-blades and some powder, when her chaperone appeared and dragged her away.

This was not altogether encouraging and I decided that it would not do to trust longer to my unassisted observation. I determined to ask the next woman I met, frankly, what she was dressed in. With this purpose in mind I strayed into one of the anterooms. There was a woman in it, and her costume struck me as original and novel, though I couldn't make out just what it was. I thought it would be easier to ask her about it when she was alone, than to wait till a lot of other women gathered around to laugh at my mistakes. Nevertheless, I was somewhat embarrassed, and perhaps I didn't word my question in just the best way.

"Madam," I said, "I am getting the costumes at this ball. Would you mind telling me what you've got on?"

"The haythin!" she exclaimed, "do yez mane to insult a dacint woman that is doin' nothin' but her duty in removin' a gentleman and a plate a lobster salad from the flure av the sally mangy where he fell over his own feet bein' in a hurry to get a bite for a young lady to ate? I'll learn the likes o' yez!"

Then she hit me in the eye with a large wet mop, and proceeded to scrub my features off my countenance with it. She had nearly obliterated me entirely when a male servant rescued me and drove her away.



EDITOR'S Room.

HE DESIRED TO REMONSTRATE.

When I had removed the visible results of this painful incident, I decided to find my wife and get her to help me with the dresses, but she was having so good a time that I hadn't the heart to disturb her, so I got myself presented to a young woman who was said to be an authority on clothes, and with her assistance I made out my list which was transmitted to the various papers.

Now, I am far from being a man of a suspicious disposition, and it never occurred to me that there would be any thing the matter with the facts as she gave them to me. I did not take into account those little animosities which lead women to "roast" their rivals and ridicule the unfortunate. If I had thought of this I might have questioned some of her statements and have taken the pains to read over what she wrote in with her own fair hand.

But I didn't think of these things and it was with a mind unclouded by impending sorrow that I dropped into the "Morning News" office a day or two later to get the city editor to O. K. my bill. I found the city editor taking with what I took to be a lunatic escaped from his cage, but what proved on closer inspection to be my late kind host.

"This is an outrage," he was saying. "Look at this: 'Miss Van Chump, a charming young bud;' why, sir, she's nearly forty, though she calls it twenty-nine. She's been in hysterics ever since she saw this cruel sarcasm. 'Miss Mc Ballister; black gauze, made decollete, and displaying the beautiful contour of her arms, neck, shoulders, etc.' E-t-c; great heavens!"

"Here is Mr. Fielding," said the city editor, "he will explain."

"My dear sir," said I, "it was my endeavor to confine myself to the naked truth."

"Naked truth! I should think so. Miss 'Annie Van Dam,' my daughter, sir, is said to have worn 'the charming costume which has been so becoming to her for the last seven years.' I desire to remonstrate."

Then he proceeded to remonstrate in a nervous and excited manner, placing first one foot on the back of my neck and then the other. After a few minutes' argument of this kind the city editor was convinced that an injustice had been done, and he agreed not to O. K. my bill, if Mr. Van Dam would withdraw his libel suit. This mollified him somewhat and I escaped with my life.

There is to be another ball in Mr. Van Dam's barn next month, but as yet I have not received cards.

H[illegible] FIELDING.

PEOPLE OF OTHER LANDS.

IN Russia, a married woman, no matter how young and inexperienced, is perfectly independent of her husband in her property rights.

THE Norwegians are said to be the longest lived people in the world. Official statistics show that the average duration of life in Norway is 48.33 for the men, 51.30 for the women and 49.77 for both sexes. The duration of life has increased of late years.

THE Portuguese give all their sovereigns special titles, supposed to be indicative of their dominant characteristics. Thus there have been Dom John the Restorer (of the Braganza line), Alfonso the Victorious, Pedro the Reformer, Mary the Pious, John the Clement and Pedro the Unfortunate. The estimable King who has just died will be known as Louis the Good.

SPANISH women do not like to invite a stranger to their houses. Most of them smoke cigarettes while eating, and are jealous of any word of criticism. A Spanish household is a very different thing from an English or American one. It is much more frugal. They seldom give dinners, and eating is with them a matter of very small importance compared with the place it holds among the Anglo-Saxons.

AMONG the Yombas of West Africa, who take great care of their teeth and scrub them well at least three times a day, an old tooth-brush is regarded as a touching present, not being so much intended for actual use, indeed, but rather as conveying a sort of implied message that, as the sender took the greatest care of his teeth and used his tooth-brush continually, so his friend was also in his thoughts morning, noon and night.

WHEN an Arab damsel gets married her mother gives her the following advice for securing her future happiness: "You are leaving your nest to live with a man with whose ways and habits you are unfamiliar. I advise you to be his slave if you wish to become the absolute mistress of your husband. Be satisfied with little, endeavor to feed him well, and watch over his sleep, for hunger begets anger, and sleeplessness makes a man cross grained."

WHEN a young Greek determines to take a wife to himself he does not go a-courting, but he takes his oldest female relative into his confidence and they at once go hunting for a suitable mate for him. Marriageable maidens are visited and silently appraised. They receive the old dames courteously, answer all their questions and never venture to ask the nature of their errand. As soon as the visitors have made a choice the wooer dispatches them again to the maiden's home with instructions to ask her hand in marriage.

IN Persia boys and girls never play together. Even at home the inferiority of the girls is insisted on. The little girls have to invite playmates of their own; but their games are never lively ones. They generally prefer to sit by themselves under the shade of mulberry or pomegranate trees in the garden, which usually is laid out in the court-yard surrounded on all sides by houses or high walls, and listen to fairy tales, which their mothers and nurses can tell very interestingly indeed. While there is very little companionship or love between brothers and sisters, there is no quarreling and no fighting either between them; and the boys, while thinking themselves above the girls, show them many little kindnesses.

FROM DAY TO DAY.

A WEST VIRGINIAN has been arrested for personating his deceased twin brother and drawing the pension of the latter.

AN old soldier got a pension awarded him, borrowed money on the strength of it and drank himself to death before a penny of it reached him.

A WHEELING (W. Va.) man, who recently moved from one house to another, found in a closet of his new residence a coat with thirty-five dollars in a roll in the inside pocket.

ASTORIA, ORE., had a sensation the other day. Two mules were driven through the town streets with a band of music. They were the first seen in that far-off metropolis.

Gun Club—Say, Jake, are there any gray squirrels around here?

Jake—If there's any squirrels 'round here they must be gray, for I never knew any of you city chaps that was smart enough to kill any of 'em.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BEFORE TAKING. AFTER TAKING.

Why, Mary, how your baby cries!
Yes, he has colic again.
Why don't you give him Dr. Taylor's Best Soothing Syrup?
Is that good?
Yes, for Pain, Colds, Coughs, &c., it is excellent for either young or old. Of the many kinds of medicines I have used in my family I have found none to equal it.
Thank you, Jane, I will try it. Margaret Ann, go as soon as you can to either REYNOLDS', or SHAW'S Drug Store, and get a bottle of Dr. Taylor's Soothing Syrup. 1-2-6m

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT ?

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed. It is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake, and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. Write to F. I. WHITNEY, G. P. & T. A. St. Paul, Minn., for maps, books and guides. If you want a free farm in a lovely land, write for the "Great Reservation," read it and resolve to accept the [illegible]

If Chloe laughs and carols catches
Of a merry roundelay,
If she trips across the patches
Where the sunbeams flash and play,
If her face is flushed and hot,
And she stops my lips with flowers
While she dances through the hours;
If her eyes are clear and bright,
Like white stars upon the night,
Then I know she loves me not.

But if Chloe stops not singing,
If her voice she may not find,
If her words will not be winging
Cruel darts for her mind,
If her cheeks in paleness dwell
While she tears in bits her roses,
Breathing short in starts and closes;
If her eyes are moist and clouded,
Like blue seas in rain enshrouded,
Then I know she loves me well.

The Stove in the Village Store.

When the twilight had deepened to darkness
They gathered from far and near—
Old farmers who plodded the distance
As pilgrims their shrines to revere;
At the shabby old store at the "corners"
They met and they entered the door,
For the Mecca of those old cronies
Was the stove in the old village store.
It was guiltless of beauty or polish,
And its door was unskillfully hung,
But they made a glad circle around it,
And the genial warmth loosened each tongue;
And they talked of the crops and the weather—
Twin subjects to gossip most dear—
And the smoke from their pipes as it blended
Gave a tinge to the whole atmosphere.
Full many the tales they related,
And wondrous the yarns they spun,
And doubtful the facts that they stated,
And harmless the wit and the fun;
But if ever discussion grew heated
It was all without tumult or din,
And they gave their respectful attention
When a customer chanced to come in.
When the evening was spent and the hour
For the time of their parting had come,
They rapped from their pipes the warm ashes
And reluctantly started for home;
Agreeing to meet on the morrow,
When the day with its labor was o'er,
For the Mecca of all the old cronies
Was the stove in the old village store.

Of the Earth.

Dainty and delicate, full of reserve,
She seemed like a nymph out of heaven—
I longed for a smile that I should preserve
My hours of duty to leaven.
I glanced at the book she held in her hand
And queried in tones respectful and bland:
"Is its sentiment true, or yet do you doubt it?"
And then as I waited the murmurous sound
She said, in a tone like a mill going 'round:
"I don't know nothin' about it."

The Wedding Ring.

The plain gold ring, a pretty thing,
Upon a bride's fair finger,
In Roman days 'mid Roman ways
Whose memory still doth linger.

The pretty thing, the finger ring,
Was worn by slaves in token
That they for aye should well obey
In servitude unbroken.

The wedding ring, that pretty thing,
Supposed of love a token,
Doth it not say, thou shalt obey,
Though no such vow be spoken?

The ancient slaves are in their graves,
May Jove their souls watch over;
In modern days, 'mid modern ways,
They are not all in clover.

Who wear the ring, that pretty thing,
Of love sometimes a token;
Far better dead, or never wed,
Than wear the ring heart-broken.
—Egbert L. Bangs, in Drake's Magazine.

Beauty's Purpose.

Our friends, the flowers, their robes of beauty wear,
And charge the vagrant winds with fragrant freight,
Not on the pleasure of proud man to wait,
Who knows scarce one midst myriad blossoms fair,
But that the insects, hovering in the air,
May Flora's children make perpetuate;
Allured by sight and scent themselves to sate,
From bloom to bloom they potent pollen bear.

When truths eternal unto earth are sent
They find their birth in ever gracious guise
Through poets' souls, to whom the power is lent
To give them lasting favor in men's eyes,
And thus make beauty serve divine intent
To build the world into a paradise.
—Sylvester Baxter, in S. S. Times.

The Lunch-Counter Sandwich.

I dwell in haunts of hurried men
And have for many ages,
Before the railroads were, and when
The public rode in stages.
I can't remember whence I came,
And e'en the oldest liar
Can not a date so distant name
But I can name one prior.
While time shall last I'll still be so,
Naught can destroy me, never,
For trains may come and trains may go,
But I'll stay here forever.
Oh, many scores of men I've seen
Come smilingly to greet me,
And mutter something low and mean
Because they couldn't eat me.
They tried to cut me with a dirk,
In coffee sought to drown me;
But all their schemes have failed to work
I'm still just as they found me,
And when they're gone I'll yet be so,
They can destroy me never,
For hungry men may come and go,
But I'll stay here forever.
Sometimes it makes me sad to see
The aged men and toothless
Put up their hard-earned cash for me,
Because I know I'm useless.
But when smart alecks happen by
It really does delight me
To do my level best and try
To have the goslings bite me.
For well I know they stand no show,
They can affect me never,
For young and old may come and go,
But I'll stay here forever.
Thus do I labor on, and so
I'll keep it up for ever,
For sound teeth come and false teeth go,
But I'll stay here forever.
—N. Y. Sun.

An Old Valentine.

Oh, mirth's in the wind and the mischief's to pay;
For "merry" 's the word on Saint Valentine's day!
There's a ring at the door bell, oh, answer it, do.
Some one, perhaps, with a message for you!
Tied with a ribbon and sealed with a ring,
Who can have sent it, the daintiest thing?
Open it carefully, what have we here?
Quaintest of verses inscribed: "To my dear,"
Rosies and posies, symbols and hearts,
Cupid himself with his quiver of darts,
Cupid, who's hiding his round roguish face
'Neath a wee curtain of fine tissue lace.
Some one has thought of you, isn't it fine?
Some one has sent you a food valentine.

Her Answer.

The moon had veiled her silvery face
Behind a fleecy cloud,
The brook that rippled at our feet
Forebore to murmur loud;
As, with my soul upon my lips,
I made the old, old plea,
And waited for the fateful words
That changed the world for me.

The moon looked out again and smiled,
The brook resumed its song,
And through my veins the blood leaped wild
In pulses glad and strong;
Around her plump waist crept my arm,
Impelled by Nature's law,
When from those sweet lips fell the words:
"You'd better speak to paw."
—Mortimer C. Brown, in Yankee Blade.

THOSE who masticate their food too little and bolt it in bulk almost always aid the unnatural process by drinking copiously so as to wash the food down their throats. Let those who do so pause a moment and consider what they are doing. Not only do they offer the digestive organs more than they can manage in unmasticated food, but, in addition they fill the stomach with fluid which dilutes the gastric juices and still further obstructs digestion.

As to the general principle whether eating before going to bed is advisable or not, the sensible advice of New York doctors is that those who do no work at night, and who retire early, are better off without a late bite; so also are those who take no exercise in the evening and who dine heartily. But if a person is up and work long enough after dinner for the stomach to be empty and crave food, the natural and necessary thing to do is to eat a little. The stomach is better full than empty to sleep on.

IT is hygienically absurd that man's dress should be so voluminous in front and so thin behind. The least protection is that which is given to the spine and to the center of the back, underneath which lie the roots of the lungs. Every man who is interested in properly caring for himself should see to it that the backs of his waistcoats be made of cloth or flannel. A good thickness of either material will at least give the back as much covering as the front gets, though no harm would be done if it had more.

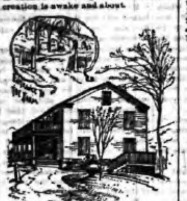
LAST OF THE GREELEYS.

Gabrielle, the Favorite Daughter of the Editor-Statesman.

Her Lonely Life at Chappaqua, Where Her Father Was the Sage—"The Pines" Where the Great Political Barbecue of 1872 Were Held.

COPYRIGHT 1890.

There is no drowsier village in the whole of the sleepy Westchester County, N. Y., than Chappaqua, which lies snugly embosomed in a nest of low hills, almost within echoing distance of the big metropolis. Everybody in Chappaqua sleeps late. It may be the rule of the village not to rise till sun-up, but if so it is a very accommodating one, for the sun never gets around the easterly ridge of those wooded heights that keep the valley in shadow until long after the rest of creation is awake and about.



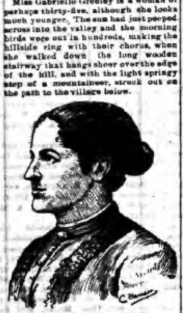
GREELEY'S FIRST HOUSE AT CHAPPAQUA.

Last of all to catch the sunlight and to emerge from the mists that hang about the hillsides in November, is a lonely, half-desolate house, up on the western slope. It is far from any other dwelling. Passing through the village with its white, smart-looking structures, we get to a nearer view. The villagers look at it and tell me that it is a very quiet place now, that lonely house up there on the hill, but that in former days it was the scene of many a merry gathering. In the woods that surround it the great men of the nation have met for a midsummer political frolic, and there have been ringing speeches made under those old maples and beeches, too, that have been heard all over the land. But now it is little else than a home of shadows and memories. It is the home of the last of the Greeleys.

Everybody knows everybody else in Chappaqua. It is little better than a picturesque hamlet—a sort of happy, rural family. If there are not many rich folks in Chappaqua, there are fortunately very few really poor. Yet, rich and poor alike have a word of praise and affection for the sweet-faced woman who moves among them like a Lady Bountiful, doing good wherever she enters and giving so much that people wonder that she has anything left to give.

I saw her yesterday. I had passed through the village street, and coming to a turn, southward, entered the woods at the hillfoot through a wide-open gate. To the left stood a small frame cottage, sheltered from the winds of winter by a curve in the hill that framed it like an ingle-nook. This was the home that Horace Greeley first occupied when he came to live in Chappaqua many years ago—so long ago that the younger generation have no recollection of it. Old Israel Haight, the postmaster, who was a comrade of the great editor, shook his head when I asked about it, and averred that it must be well nigh "onter twenty-five or thirty year." But he did not live there more than a year or two, for the romance of the mountain side, with its splendid cover of oaks, poplars, hickory, maples and beeches, tempted him, and besides, there at its foot, lay a great reach of meadow land, level as a lake and as smooth and clear as a lawn. So he bought it in, piece by piece, and at last, when he had become the owner of the hillside and valley bottom, he built and moved into that great, lonely house on the mountain.

Miss Gabrielle Greeley is a woman of perhaps thirty-five, although she looks much younger. The sun had just peeped across into the valley and the morning birds were out in hundreds, making the hillside ring with their chorus, when she walked down the long wooden stairway that hangs sheer over the edge of the hill, and with the light springy step of a mountaineer, struck out on the path to the village below.



MISS GABRIELLE GREELEY.

Miss Greeley looks every inch a woman capable of taking full charge of her rural estate. And she does, for she is a good deal of a practical farmer, and is her own overseer. Clark, the hired man, who does the work of the farm, regards his mistress as the cleverest of women. Whether the matter under discussion be the garden, the growing crop or the timber, she is equally interested, and personally superintends everything that goes on in the place.

Israel Haight, the postmaster, is one of the veterans of Chappaqua. His store is the rendezvous of the village statesmen and gossips. I dropped in Israel's store and found him in hot disputation with a farmer's wife, who had come for her mail from quite a distance.

"The Greeley place is quite lovely now," said he, "but it didn't use to be that way. Horace was a great old man, and we allus thought highly of him. He was the father of the village like, you know, and he allus stood up for its interests. At that time Amos Tompkins had the postoffice. I was keeping store, but I was a frequent caller at the house. When Mr. Greeley came to Chappaqua first—that's many years ago—he lived in the little story-and-attic house by the gate, the same place as William Bischoff now occupies. By and bye they bought the hillside and the meadow, and on that meadow Horace Greeley spent thousands of dollars in experiments. His improvements and experiments must have brought the original price up to $50,000, I think.

"The farmers' club used to meet at the old schoolhouse over on the hill yonder, which you may have seen as you came past. Many a hot debate they have had, too, and Mr. Greeley taking part in it with the rest, for he had a hobby in that direction."

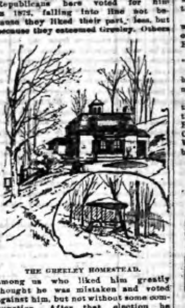
"During the war-times, Chappaqua was quite lively for a village, was it not?" I interrupted.

"Ah, yes," returned the old man, "those were the exciting days. Those were the days when everything that Mr. Greeley wrote and said and did was watched here with feverish eagerness. You remember, of course, the famous criterion 'on to Richmond.' Well, we all thought he was a good deal of a hero at that time. But his utterances after the defeat at Bull Run was a great mistake. That was the time when he quit going to town, and was up here for ten or twelve days. We all thought he gave up the ship too soon. But it came out all right, you know, and we thought none the less of him for it afterwards.

"Then there was the exciting time when he was running as a candidate in 1872. Dear me! I don't remember ever seeing so many great folks at Chappaqua as came here in that year. Mr. Greeley was the liveliest of them all."

"The defeat for President broke him down physically, did it not?"

"Yes; we all noticed the change. After the election he was greatly annoyed by the things that were sent to him through the postoffice here—insulting notes and the like. Some of the writers asked him to redeem Confederate bonds. But the people of Chappaqua never sympathized with those persecutions. A good many Republicans here voted for him in 1872, falling into line not because they liked their party less, but because they esteemed Greeley. Others among us who liked him greatly thought he was mistaken and voted against him, but not without some compunction. After that election he seemed to lose interest in his surroundings, and gradually broke down till he died."



THE GREELEY HOMESTEAD.

The house on the hill is lonely enough now. Following the death of Gabrielle's parents within a few weeks of each other, came that of her sister Ida, the wife of Col. Nicholas Smith, leaving three children, who are now being educated in a convent school. There has been some delay in settling up the estate, which originally stood in the name of Mary Y. C. Greeley, the wife of the statesman-editor, and whose will was is oly probated. Horace Greeley, in his life-time, bought various small pieces of property at Chappaqua as he took a fancy to them. I talked with Messrs. Porter and Kilvert, the counsel in charge of the Greeley estate, concerning the family possessions.

"He would see a nice little tree," said Mr. Porter, "and he would buy the land about it. He bought some eighty-three acres altogether in about twenty different parcels, some in his own name and others in that of his wife. The farm was purchased in her name about 25 years ago, and it so stood till the day of her death. He conveyed the other property also to Mrs. Greeley, and when she died her will directed that the estate be sold and legally divided between her two daughters, Ida and Gabrielle. Mr. Greeley died soon after his wife. Then the will was probated, and both the executors, Orestes Cleveland and Oliver Johnson, being dead, we began proceedings in the Supreme Court, asking that a trustee be appointed. Israel Haight, of Chappagua, was named by the court. Then a sale was ordered, and the estate was put up at public auction, and, no one appearing to compete, it was sold to Miss Gabrielle Greeley for $10,000. This was done so that she might be enabled to deposit $5,000 at once to the credit of the children of her dead sister, Ida, which she did, and it is now in a Brooklyn Trust Company. Mr. Greeley was also the owner when he died of a large gold mining property in Buckingham County, Va.—some 200 acres, I think. It is not being operated at present and we cannot tell its value. There is other property, too, in Erie County, Pa., in which a brother of Mr. Greeley has a life interest. There are also various pieces of real estate in the West which still remain to be realized upon. The estate of Mrs. Greeley is now practically settled."

CLOAK-ROOM INGLESIDE.

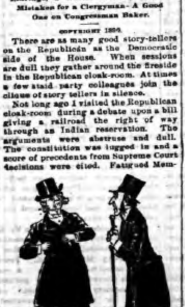
A Volcano of Wit and Humor in Full Eruption.

A Shrewd Michigan Grandfather—Col. Eldridge, a Wolverine Congressman, Mistaken for a Clergyman—A Good One on Congressman Baker.

COPYRIGHT 1890.

There are as many good story-tellers on the Republican as the Democratic side of the House. When sessions are dull they gather around the fireside in the Republican cloak-room. At times a few staid party colleagues join the clique of story tellers in silence.

Not long ago I visited the Republican cloak-room during a debate upon a bill giving a railroad the right of way through an Indian reservation. The arguments were abstruse and dull. The constitution was tugged in and a score of precedents from Supreme Court decisions were cited. Fatigued Members drifted to the cloak-rooms and drew their chairs around the fireplaces. The Republican volcano of wit and humor was in full eruption. The annoyances of Mr. Yaple, of Michigan, when a Congressman, were canvassed. Somebody had unearthed a newspaper story concerning his troubles with the doorkeepers, who would not believe he was a Member of the House. A Michigan Republican awoke, and told a tip-top anecdote concerning the little Congressman. He ran for Congress as a Greenback-Democrat, and was quite popular. With the backing of both parties he defeated the renowned Julius Cæsar Burrows. At the next campaign Burrows regained the district by between one and two hundred majority. At the same time Col. Eldridge, a well-known and veteran Democrat, carried an adjoining district by thirty-two majority. Eldridge was 74 years old and Yaple only 33. Not long after the election Yaple and Eldridge met. The little Congressman congratulated the veteran upon his election, and the veteran condoled with Mr. Yaple upon his defeat.



"HELL, NO! I'M A DEMOCRAT."

"No wonder that I was elected," Col. Eldridge remarked. "I had fifteen children and thirty or forty grandchildren. There were a good many boys among them, and they all voted for me. That is where my thirty-two majority came from. The Democrats in my district showed remarkable wisdom in nominating me."

"Well," replied Yaple, "that's a pointer for me in politics. I think I'll profit by your example. When I'm three-score-and-ten, if I feel as well as I do now, I shall try to have enough children and grand-children to overcome the majority which Burrows got last month. I hope that the Democratic party in my district will then exhibit as much foresight as they have done in yours."

"You don't say so," exclaimed Col. Eldridge. "Well, I'm delighted. It's the first piece of luck I've had since the campaign opened. I hardly know to what good quality I am indebted for these exceedingly kind invitations."

"Why," said the gentleman of sanctimonious appearance, in a doubtful tone of voice, "are you not a Methodist Episcopal clergyman?"

"Hell; no!" responded the Colonel, "I'm a Democrat."

A quarterly conference was about to be held in the village, and he had been mistaken for one of the brethren.

The hilarity attending this narrative brought out a good story about the talented man, now Speaker of the House. It occurred in the Fiftieth Congress. Reed is a close student. When unimportant bills led to long debates in Committee of the Whole, he improved his time by reading standard works. He became so immersed in a volume one afternoon that he failed to observe that the House had adjourned. He remained at his desk absorbed in the contents of the book, and dead to everything around him. Some fifteen minutes afterward he read something referring to a verse in the Bible. He clapped his hands vigorously to attract the attention of a page. All the pages, however, had left the House. The venerable John T. Chancey, a Republican attache, as much a fixture in the House of Representatives as Capt. Bassett is to the Senate, obeyed the signal. Approaching the desk of the great man from Maine, he asked: "What is it, Mr. Reed? The pages have all gone. I'll wait on you."

"DARN IT! BRING ME A BIBLE."

"Bring me a copy of the sacred writings," Tom drawled, without looking up from his book.

Mr. Chancey did not catch his meaning.

"What is it, Mr. Reed?" he again asked.

"The sacred writings," Reed replied.

Chancey was still at sea. He had got it into his head that Mr. Reed wanted some kind of a public document, but he could remember none with such a title.

"If you will give me the number of the bill, or the number of the report," he said, "I will try to find it for you."

Mr. Reed was losing the sense of what he was reading. This annoyed him. Placing his fore-finger upon the interesting paragraph in the book, he turned his head and blurted out with a vigorous Yankee twang: "Darn it! bring me a Bible."

Then for the first time he saw that the Chamber was nearly empty. Business was over, and the joke was as much on him as on Chancey.

Next came a rattling story concerning the school-boy days of Charles S. Baker, of Rochester. One Beatty taught school at the Clarkson Academy, Monroe County, N. Y. He was an old-time master, a thorough scholar, and well versed in the classics. The old man came from England, and had had the room at Oxford once occupied by Wolfe, author of the "Burial of Sir John Moore." Wednesday afternoons at the Clarkson academy were given to declamation. Among the pupils were Charles James, Bushrod Clark and Charles S. Baker. Like all scholars, they were full of mischief. John Tabor, however, was the bell-weather of the flock. As declamation day approached they put up a job on the old schoolmaster. All agreed to recite in turn from Addison's Cato, be-

Reminiscences of Col. Eldridge were next in order. A Wolverine told a story about the Colonel that convulsed the party anew. It was during a hot political campaign that Col. Eldridge stepped from a train in one of the little villages dotting his district. He wore a white necktie and a suit of broadcloth. He was a very dignified gentleman and had the air of a colporter. He had no sooner stepped upon the platform of the depot than he was accosted by a gentleman of sanctimonious appearance.

"Brother, have you been assigned?" the gentleman inquired.

"I can't say that I have," the Colonel replied.

"Well," said his questioner, "there are three brethren whose houses are at your disposal. All are famed for their hospitality, and they are all within easy access of the place where the meeting is to be held."

ginning with these words:

"MY THOUGHTS, I MUST CONFESS, ARE TURNED TO PEACE."

"My voice is still for war."

They also agreed to accent the words differently. Tabor swore them to carry out the plan at all hazards. Baker led off. He began thus:

"My voice is still for war.
"Gods! can a Roman Senate long debate which to choose,
"Slavery or death? No, let us rise at once,
"Break through the thick array of his thronged legions,
"And charge home upon him. Perchance some arm
"More lucky than the rest may reach his heart,
"And free the world from bondage."

Mr. Beatty was delighted with the boy's gestures and animation. Clark next took the floor. He began thus:

"My voice is still for war."

The old teacher scratched his head and rubbed his nose. He thought it rather singular that both boys should have chosen the same piece for declamation. When James arose and began,

"My voice is still for war."

the old man squared himself, folded his arms and gazed steadily at the youth. When the declamation was ended and James had made his bow, the school-teacher said:

"Young gentlemen, this is a manifest attempt to turn a very useful and necessary exercise into ridicule. But it will fail. I assure you it will fail. Call the next."

The next speaker was John Tabor, the boy who had put up the job and had sworn his comrades to carry it through at all hazards. When Beatty was thoroughly aroused he was a terror to all frolicsome boys. His face now bore anything but a meek expression. Tabor slowly ascended the rostrum and fronted the indignant teacher who was toying with a ruler. The boy bore himself defiantly. For a minute he looked the preceptor full in the face. Then he bowed his head, cleared his throat and gave utterance to these words:

"My thoughts, I must confess, are turned on peace."

It was a home thrust. Before Tabor had time to utter another word, the old schoolmaster turned, grabbed his hat and broke for the door in a paroxysm. He cleared a worm-fence on the other side of the road and did not return to the school that afternoon. Tabor never completed his declamation, but the boys thrashed him within twenty minutes for flinching under fire.

THE phonograph seems to be making greater headway in Mexico than in the United States. The director-general of the telegraph system is to make a contract for its introduction at once.

WHAT is said to be the largest bar of gold ever cast in the world was turned out at the United States assay office at Helena, Mont. It weighed 500 pounds and is worth a little over $100,000.

FLORIDA will soon be the greatest lemon-growing country in the world. Along the banks of the Caloosahatchie there is a single tree which bears 5,000 lemons, many of which weigh a pound each.

THE Pension Department at Washington has upon its rolls the names of twenty-seven widows of revolutionary soldiers who have been regularly paid pensions up to the present time. Three of them are ninety-seven years of age and two ninety-six. The youngest is seventy-one.

THE decline of the English tailor in America is announced by some of the trade journals, and it would seem that there is a reason for the assertion that he is no longer as fashionable as an American tailor. It has been discovered at last that the conventional English clothes do not fit.

TWELVE Southern States have increased in population over 5,000,000 during the decade from 1880 to 1890—an increase twice as great as during the previous decade. This growth in population and a corresponding growth in wealth is due wholly to the diversification of the industries in that section.

A MIGHTY stream of immigration is pouring into Washington Territory. The people come from South, East and North. The cars of the Canadian Pacific have been crowded with West-bound passengers for months. It appears that our westward-bound emigrants travel on the Canada Pacific because that corporation carries passengers for less money than any of the American railroads do.

WISCONSIN has a law requiring the extermination of the Canada thistle, burdock, oxeye daisy, toadflax, cocklebur, sow-thistle and dock, and holding city mayors, town officers and weed commissioners to a strict accountability, under heavy penalties, for neglect to carry out its provisions. It is made the duty of the clerk of each town to read the act aloud to the town board at every annual meeting.

TWENTY years ago diamonds were at three times their present value. The discovery of the South African mines brought down the price, but amalgamation in the last twelve months has put it up by above 100 per cent. The rough estimate is that during the last few years the output of diamonds has been 4,000,000 carats per annum, and that these, cut into 1,600,000 carats, have been sold for £4,000,000. It costs ten shillings per carat to cut diamonds. The South African mines being now amalgamated, the output is reduced to one-half, i. e., 2,000,000 carats, but the merchants estimate that this will still produce £4,000,000, because they regard this as a fixed amount which, no matter what the price of diamonds may be, will be spent on them.

HELPS TO GOOD HEALTH.

EAT slowly, masticate the food very thoroughly, even more so, if possible, than is required in health. The more time the food spends in the mouth, the less it will spend in the stomach.

WHEN the brain worker finds he can not sleep, he is on dangerous ground. It is a symptom so serious that it must never be allowed to persist, without every effort being made to overcome it, for if it does, failure of the intellectual powers is inevitable.

FLANNEL should always play an important part in every adult man's clothing as a protection for the stomach. The eminent desirability of always having a thickness of flannel around the bowels should be impressed upon every man. A mere band will do.

A QUICK bath and a hard rub will work wonders in preparing a man for each day's battle among men. There are two stimulants in the process, first that of the cold water and then that of the friction. The rubbing should be done with an old-fashioned crash towel.

THE way to keep cool is to be temperate in all things. To eat little or no meat or strong starchy food and to drink as little ice water or iced drinks of any kind as possible. To fill the stomach with fluids far below the temperature of the body and then to correct results by swallowing Jamaica ginger and alcoholic remedies ought to disqualify a man from making a will.

THE highest health, vigor and efficient activity of mind are possible only in a healthy vigorous body—a body with all its functions in regular and normal action. Given the same amount of native brain power and intellectual culture, the man with a healthy and vigorous physique must, in the life race, outstrip his fellow who has shattered nerves, a weak stomach, a disordered liver or troublesome kidneys.

WORLD'S FAIR.

When a majority of Congressmen by formal vote thrust aside the claims of the City of New York as the place for holding a World's Fair and decided the question in favor of Chicago, they accomplished about as silly a feat as ever discredited representative men.

If the proposed commemoration in 1892 of the discovery of a new World by the great ocean navigator, Christopher Columbus, four hundred years before, means only a display of the products of this country, garnered from field, forest and mine, there might be some degree of propriety in selecting an interior city like Chicago for the exhibition.

But a World's Fair, if language possesses intelligent meaning, is a very different matter. It contemplates the bringing together in one grand whole the natural productions, inventive skill, and historic data of all countries on the globe, including our own, and in that broad view, to ignore a world-city like New York as the proper locality is simply [illegible] official stupidity, if nothing worse.

New York is the place and the only possible place for a World's Fair.

It is the commercial and financial metropolis of the United States.

The chief ocean port of the continent Columbus discovered.

And furthermore—

New York is amply prepared to accommodate in first-class style, and with both national and local honor, all visitors and fleets, and ready and willing to pay the expense without [illegible] the National Treasury.

And yet Chicago is chosen.

Shades of Columbus!

What majestic statesmen and America show in this the 400th year of her discovery?

CORN BASKET.

The farmers of Kansas are loudly bemoaning the fact that thirteen cents a bushel is all they can get for corn.

Why should they grumble?

Do they not enjoy the blessings of a high protective tariff, upheld for the loudly proclaimed purpose of providing a good paying home demand for the productions of agriculture?

Why not sing and dance?

Have not the farmers of Kansas voted year after year to perpetuate a system of sham protection, which in effect leaves themselves poor and poorer, in order that monopoly [illegible] may grow rich and richer?

Corn thirteen cents a bushel!

What a splendid home market!

How lovely is a war-framed tariff in time of peace!

Tariff Reform justly commends itself to all intelligent and honest citizens in the land, and to none more emphatically than the hard-working [illegible], and yet, the elections of 1888 showed that, while men engaged in other departments of industrial labor strongly supported such reformation, the Western agriculturists with singular unanimity opposed it.

Practical experience is a powerful educator.

The fact will some day become manifest, even to Kansas, that protection and pillage are as identical as [illegible].

Corn thirteen cents a bushel.

And it is proposed in the present Congress to double the duty tax on farmers' [illegible].

Hail Columbia!

For a Commendable Object.

Arrangements are making for a grand charity ball, to be given in The Crescent building on April 8. The ball is to be given by the patronesses of the present assembly held at the Seminary, and the proceeds will go to the Muhlenberg Hospital. A special train will convey the New York guests to and from this city.

Everybody Should Attend.

Comparatively few people seem to know that the loan collection at the Art Gallery is still open, or they do not realize that this is a rare opportunity to see in Plainfield specimens of some of the very best painters in the World. The Art Committee have put the price of admission down to 25 cents during the few remaining days of the exhibition, and all who have not seen these pictures should not fail to embrace this opportunity, the more so as the money goes to furnish new books for the public library.

How Often This Section is Violated.

People who drive up in front of the post office or stores and leave their horses without tying, are probably unaware of the fact that they are violating section 24 of the Peace and Moral ordinance, which reads as follows:

"If any person leave any horse or team standing unoccupied in any of the streets of this city, unless the same is in charge of some person competent to take care of the same, he shall be liable, on conviction, to be fined any amount not exceeding ten dollars for each offense."

As Viewed From Other Sources.

The New York Press editorially Friday thus expresses on the action of the Plainfield Council in granting a liquor license in the post office building:

"The Common Council in Plainfield, N. J., have had the exceedingly bad taste to authorize the opening of a rum-shop in the basement of the post office building. Naturally, the good people of Plainfield are much incensed, and, as they can't get rid of the grogery, they are making a determined effort to move the post-office. They should prepare a black-list of the Councilmen who voted for the outrage, and remember them whenever one of them is a candidate before the people again."

The Law on the Subject.

With reference to the case of the State vs. the Corporation Counsel of this city heard before Justice Nash Thursday afternoon, as told in THE PRESS, Mr. Craig A. Marsh read the following legal opinion, from Addison on torts, volume 3, section 783:

"If he will not depart after having been requested so to do, the owner may use as much force as is necessary; and if the intruder resists the attempts of the owner of the house to turn him out, he is guilty of an assault upon the latter; and if a policeman standing by sees the assault and witnesses the assault, he is justified in taking the intruder into custody. A policeman may also with authority at the request of the master of the house, himself proceed to turn out the intruder; but he is not bound to do so under the pleasure, as it is no part of a policeman's duty to do so."

SEWAGE IN PLAINFIELD.

Extracts From a Proposed Law That Will Provide the City's Remedy by Assessment and Bonds.

Assemblyman Snyder has introduced "by request" in the House of Assembly at Trenton, "an act to provide for drainage and sewerage in cities of this State." The bill is numbered "205," and THE PRESS is permitted to publish the following extracts from it:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey. That it shall be lawful for any city in this State to provide for and cause to be constructed sewers and drains, or a system of sewage and drainage, or either or any of them, in the manner herein provided.

"That the common council of such city may, if they think it expedient, from time to time, cause to be made by competent engineers and mechanics, surveys, plans and estimates of any work which may be contemplated under the powers given by this act.

"That it shall be lawful for such common council, by ordinance, whenever in their opinion the public good requires it, to order and cause sewers or drains, or a system of sewers or drains, to be constructed in any part of said city under the provisions of this act, and, if necessary, to acquire, by purchase, and to take and appropriate any lands and real estate that may be needed for that purpose, upon making compensation to the owner or owners thereof as is hereinafter provided; the ordinance shall specify with particularity the streets to be sewered or drained.

"That in addition to the land that it may be necessary to take for the purpose of laying drains and sewers, it shall be lawful for the common council to acquire by purchase or condemnation in the manner herein mentioned, any other land either within said city or beyond its limits that may be needed for sewerage purposes.

"That in case the common council shall deem it expedient to collect the sewage of such city or of any part thereof, and to deodorize, utilize, consume or dispose of the same by sale or otherwise, wholly or in part, it shall be lawful for said common council to purchase lands in the corporate name of the city, and to erect all necessary buildings, works and machinery thereon, and to take and appropriate for such purpose any lands and real estate upon making compensation to the owner or owners as hereinafter provided.

"That whenever any ordinance shall be passed by the common council directing the construction of any improvement under the provisions of this act, all further acts and proceedings which it may be necessary to take in order to complete said improvement, and all orders relating thereto, may be by resolution and not by ordinance.

"That no ordinance for the making of such improvement shall be acted upon by the common council until public notice shall be given in a newspaper published or circulating in said city of the intention of the common council to cause such improvement to be made, and to that end it shall be the duty of the city clerk, by direction of said council, to give such notice; the notice shall briefly describe the improvement, and request such persons as may object thereto to present their objections in writing at the city clerk's office, at or before the expiration of ten days from the date of the notice, or to the common council at its first meeting held after the expiration of said ten days; and said council may, at such meeting or afterwards, proceed to consider and pass such ordinance, notwithstanding any objection.

"That after the passage of such ordinance it shall be the duty of the common council to appoint by ballot from amongst themselves a committee to be styled 'the committee on sewers,' which shall have charge of the work under the supervision of said council, and which shall in all things proceed as the council may by ordinance or resolution ordain; such committee shall from amongst themselves elect a chairman, who shall approve in writing all bills or vouchers involving the disbursement of money before the same is paid, and each member of such committee shall be entitled to dollars a day for every day's actual service as a member of such committee, of which service he shall make affidavit before he shall be entitled to be paid; all work, before it is accepted, must be approved by the engineer in charge of the work and by said committee.

"That immediately upon the completion of the work, or of a definite part thereof, the common council shall, by resolution, ascertain the whole amount of the costs, damages and expenses of making and constructing drains and sewers or a system of sewerage or drainage, or any part of such system, so far as completed; and they shall, without delay, apply to the circuit court for the appointment of three disinterested commissioners to make a just and equitable assessment thereof upon all the owners of lands and real estate peculiarly benefitted thereby, which frontage the improvement, in proportion as nearly as may be to the advantage each shall be deemed to acquire.

"And be it enacted, That to provide for the difference between the costs and expenses of the improvement, including all incidental expenses, and the amount of the assessment, the common council shall after the assessment has been confirmed issue the bonds of the city, which may be registered or coupon bonds, payable in the manner hereinafter provided.

"That the common council shall raise by tax in each year, as other moneys are raised in said city, such sum of money as may be necessary to pay the interest on the notes and other obligations of the city, including, when necessary, interest on such of its obligations as may be payable out of the proceeds of assessments, and also the principal of such bonds.

"That said common council may also, in lieu of issuing bonds of the city, pay the costs and expenses of any improvement authorized by this act with money to be raised by taxation, after the work has been determined upon by ordinance, as other moneys are raised in said city; provided, that the sum so raised shall not in any one year exceed twenty-five thousand dollars.

"That no provision of any act which prohibits the pollution of any of the waters of this State, used to supply any aqueduct or reservoir, or which are distributed for public use, is intended to be hereby repealed, and this act shall not be construed to authorize the discharge of sewage into fresh water in such manner as to defile a source of public water supply.

"That this act shall take effect immediately."

The Best Job Chief Carey Has Undertaken.

Of the seven boys arrested for breaking and robbing freight cars on the side track at Church street, Sunday, five are still held. They will probably soon be taken to the county jail.

As THE PRESS said some months ago, "Plainfield is cursed with the toughest and wickedest gang of young boys in the State." Chief Carey proposes to break up their [illegible] and send them where they will have the restraint their parents do not exert over them at home.

THE WATER WORKS WAR.

CRIES OF "OUTRAGE" AND CHARGES OF JOBBERY IN THE COUNCIL CHAMBER.

Contractor Under Hot Discussion—The Man Who Did and the Man Who Didn't "Get the Job"—To Make Night Investigation—Interesting Bits of Debate—Routine Work of the Session.

Cries of political jobbery were raised in Plainfield's Common Council chamber, Monday, for probably the first time in the city's history. The ordinary business of the meeting had been nearly concluded, and the session has already lasted nearly two hours, when Councilman Hetfield, Democrat, introduced a resolution seeking to cancel the contract made a short time ago between the Council and Mayor of the city and Rudolph Hering, a New York engineer, for the supervision of the construction of local water works. Mr. Hetfield is a new Councilman, and Mr. Newhall, a Republican holding over from last year, asked for reasons for the proposed action, and wanted to know what the city would do if the resolution was carried. Mr. Hetfield's reply was fearlessly outspoken. He held that the amount agreed to be paid to Mr. Hering for his share in the construction of the works ($5,300) was too much. Moreover, he had been reliably informed that Mr. Hering was totally inexperienced, had never before constructed waterworks and knew nothing whatever about the operations for which he had contracted. He left, it was alleged, all the important details to incompetent assistants, and concerning the waters obtained from the experimental wells rendered analyses which chemists had subsequently privately pronounced untrue. Other engineers, he continued, stood ready to construct the works for a less amount, engineers who were competent, which Mr. Hering was not.

"All that is being done," he stated, "is the boring for water and the testing of the supply. This is experimental work and will take some time. Meanwhile the city can procure another engineer.

"The contract gives us the right to dispense with Mr. Hering's services at any time, and if there arise a dispute as to compensation for work actually performed a provision for arbitrators may be followed."

Mr Newhall, who was chairman of the Water Committee of the last Council, and whose Committee deliberated at sixty-three meetings before finally rejecting all other bids and accepting that of Mr. Hering, warmly denied that Mr. Hering was incapable.

"He is thoroughly competent"—he stated. "From personal investigation I know him to be worthy of every confidence. His integrity is unimpeachable; he is in every way honorable; as a hydraulic engineer he had no superiors among those who applied to construct our works. The statement that he has given us false reports—I care not what its source—I boldly denounce as false itself. I doubt if Mr. Hering's equal could be obtained to fulfil this contract for a less sum.

"It is true that various offers to work at comparatively low monthly or yearly salaries have been made, but I believe, and I think that the last Council agreed with me, that any arrangement based on the prices offered by others would cost more in the end than Mr. Hering's.

"Complications would certainly arise if this step were taken. There would be great disagreement. Owing to the heavy cost of the early work, a larger amount would be claimed than monthly proportions of the entire contract-sum would seem to warrant.

"The imputation has been publicly made that false reports have been sent in. In answer let me say that I believe that by allowing the contract to stand the best interests of the city will be served."

Councilman Dunham asserted that Mr Hetfield's charge as to Mr. Hering's not visiting Plainfield was false, but Mr. Hetfield insisted that though an occasional call might be made Mr. Hering nevertheless did not give the matter his own personal supervision as he ought. Furthermore—he added—cheaper and better bids have already been presented—notably by Mr. J. J. Henderson of New York.

Mr. Newhall promptly introduced correspondence which recently had passed between Mr. Henderson and himself. Mr. Henderson—who, while Mr. Newhall was ill, seemed to have caused to prevail among the other members of the Water Committee the erroneous impression that Mr. Newhall had favored his application—at first had asked for a yearly salary of $5,000 till the completion of the works. Subsequently this figure was lowered to $3,000, but this did not include the expenses covered by Mr. Hering in his contract, and there was no assurance, nor any apparent likelihood, that the work would not extend through a period of at least several months more than one year, if not through the second year. So far as Mr. Newhall and his Committee had been able to discover, there was no indication of any familiarity on the part of Mr. Henderson with hydraulic engineering, and on looking up Mr. Henderson's references no evidence could be procured save that Mr. Henderson was a "good, honest bridge-builder," or could put substantial roofs on buildings. From none of the 32 railroad companies to which he referred had come any word that he knew aught of hydraulics, and he finally had admitted his ignorance. He was willing, however, to "study up," and he had friends who would "assist in deficiencies." Other friends would be glad to have him "get the job." He could build ocean piers; so why couldn't he put in operation a system of suburban water works?

Mr. Hetfield demanded for the city an engineer who would do better work for less money and give it his own supervision.

Mr. Rushmore retorted that the Council and the people wanted more facts from the gentleman and less "vague information." The people would demand better reasons than had been adduced for cancelling the contract.

Amid considerable discussion Mr. Rushmore succeeded in getting in a motion to table the resolution. The motion was seconded by Mr. Newhall. President Moffett called for "remarks." A contest of words ensued as to the parliamentary propriety of argument on a motion to table. It resulted in the calling of the ayes and nays. The resolution was tabled by a majority of one. A Republican, Councilman Smith, voted with the Democrats.

Ayes—Councilmen Dunham, Jenkins, Johnson, Newhall, Roberts, Rushmore—6.

Nays—Councilmen Gallup, Hetfield, Moffett, Smith, Spangenberg—5.

A resolution was subsequently presented by Mr. Newhall that no action should be taken towards cancelling the Hering contract till a public meeting of citizens and Council had been held, the Clerk to issue a ten-days' notice for such a meeting.

"This"—said Mr. Newhall—"is not to defeat the plan which seems to have been set on foot, but is to prevent cancelling the contract and incurring the consequent penalties without having consulted the public just as it was consulted at the outset, through the medium of printed copies of the proposed contract and through public meetings, as to the erection of the works and the making of the bond."

How he might have stopped, but he didn't.

"I certainly hope," he continued, glancing towards Councilman Smith, and waving his hand impressively towards Councilman Roberts, "that inasmuch as this looks like a party measure those who recently have seemed to cling to the enemy will step over again to the fold from which they were elected good Republicans. Our venerable friend [Mr. Roberts] has set an example. Is not our other friend [Mr Smith] with us?"

There was a low murmur. Mr. Hetfield was on his feet in an instant, disclaiming against dragging politics into the discussion.

"If politics put Hering in," he said, "let's put him out."

"Mayor Male," he continued, "is dissatisfied with Hering. He thinks his work and charges an outrage. He told me so personally. What, in the face of his objections, induced him to sign this contract, I know not. Perhaps politics did. It does sometimes. I don't know Hering, but I judge he must be a Republican. Is this a Republican job? Let the sun shine in. Let the people see."

Mr. Hetfield reported conversations with prominent tax-payers and was corroborated by other Councilmen in saying that a considerable portion of the public considered itself outraged by the Hering "job."

Mr. Smith interjected a disclaimer that he has ever left the Republican fold. He was always a Republican. This, however, was a case for right, not politics.

Mr. Newhall, responding to Mr Hetfield's address, said that the reason the Mayor had changed his mind as to the "outrage" was because his misapprehension as to the amounts for which the different competitive engineers had offered to build the works had been corrected.

Mr. Dunham said that he too had talked with the Mayor about the contract. To him the Mayor had expressed thorough satisfaction.
